The Four Just Men had connected the instrument with their house, this done by the bogus mechanics, and electrocution was a simple matter. Thus is explained the mystery of the stain on Sir Phillip's hands.

I have lost my copy of the book, but if I can find another I will inform your reader as to how Thiery died, I am too uncertain about it to remember the assassin.

Trusting I have helped to clear up the existing controversy.

THE YEAR OF THE RAT.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—In your leading article of the 8th inst appears the heading "The Cycle of the Rat. "It should, I think, read "The Year of the Rat." It happens that the present year of the rat is the beginning of a new cycle, and the first year of a cycle is always considered in China an auspicious year as was the last, 1864, 60 years ago, when the country could again settle down after the Taiping Rebellion. The Chinese Lunar Calendar calculates time in units of cycles of 60 years, each year of which is designated by two characters, one called the stem and the other the branch. Of the former there are 12, and of the latter 10 distinctive characters, which follow in regular order, thus in a cycle any stem character appears five times and each of the branch characters six times. The 61st year would therefore start again with the same characters as the first year and instead of being called the 61st year, it becomes the first year of the new cycle.

In Chinese necromancy a cycle is divided into five periods, each of 12 years, thus corresponding in rotation with the stem characters of the Lunar Calendar. Each year is named after an animal. The following are in regular order the animal designations, and the figures which follow show the corresponding years of the cycle:

Ox:	2.	14,	26.	38,	50.
Tiger:	3,	15,	27,	39,	51.
Rabbit:	4.	16,	28.	40.	52.
Drakon:	5,	17.	29.	41,	53.
Snake:	6,	18.	30.	42,	54.
Horse:	7,	19,	31.	43.	55.
Sheep:	8.	20.	32.	44,	56.
Monkey:	9.	21.	33.	45,	57.
Cock:	10,	22.	34.	46.	58.
Dog:	11.	23.	35.	47,	59.
Pig:	12.	24.	36.	48.	60.

By using the above table anybody can easily determine in which year he was born. Thus anybody who enters his fortieth year this year was born in the Cock year, i.e. nine years later than the rat year which is 49. Another example: A person entering his 20th year during this year is five years behind the rat year 25, therefore he was born in the snake year which follows five years after the rat year. The above may interest such as desire to have their fortunes told by a Chinese necromancer.

THAT COUNTRY COTTAGE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—You will probagly agree that a good many people when they come out East often think of the time when they will be able to retire and have a cottage in the country.

This is no doubt a mistake as it means that they fail to enjoy the present by living too much in the future, unless they find pleasure in the anticipation which is so often greater than the realization.

It is not often, however, that one makes plans for the "cottage" until the retirement is approaching, and it must be unusual for anyone to plan the exact date of every leave until the expected date of retirement in twenty years' time, but that it has been done is apparent from the following notes which I found the other day on the back cover of a library book.

	Dec. 23, 1923	34
Leave	Jan. 15, 1926
Return	Sep. 15, 1926
Leave	Sep. 15, 1931
Return	May 15, 1932	42½
Leave	May 15, 1937	47½
Return	Jan. 15, 1938	48—1
Leave	Jan. 15, 1943	53—1
Return	Sep. 15, 1943	53—10

In these days of uncertainty he is a brave man who can plan so systematically for his future, and you, Sir, should warn him of his folly.

RUSSIAN COINAGE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir:—In the article "The Silver Question in Russia" in your paper of the 13th instant your correspondent seems to see a connexion between the Russian letters B.C. (Roman alphabet: V.S.) and the Russian words for "rising sun," thereby inferring that the coins so marked are of Japanese origin.

The writer has in his possession a series of Russian small coins of 1917 minting, which were presented to him while he was attached to the British Military Mission at Omsk in 1919, and in each case the same letters appear. These are, it is understood, the initials of the local Siberian Mint. It may be that some one more familiar with the Russian Siberian coinage can inform us.

INTERNATIONAL SAVINGS SOCIETY.

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—I have read the account of the method of drawing used by this Society which you gave in a recent issue of your journal which will probably give general satisfaction. But there is one matter which I hope I may have the courtesy of your columns to ventilate, I believe I am right in saying that the numbers of all the bonds issued by this Society are taken into account when drawings are made, whether a bond has lapsed by non-payment of the monthly subscription, or not. Thus it may be possible for bonds to be drawn which are not in benefit, and which the holders thereof have dropped forever. I think this constitutes a hardship on those bond-holders who have kept faith with their original contract and regularly keep up their monthly subscriptions. I am not suggesting that is not right and proper. The present method simply means that if a bond is drawn for a prize to which it is not entitled for the reason stated above, the Company's funds gain and the financial position becomes stronger. My point is that bonds which are not in benefit should be withdrawn from the drawing until arrears of subscription have been paid.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

Business on the local Stock Exchange has been dull during the past week with few transactions recorded. "Rubbers" are slightly firmer in tone, and are not easy to obtain on the quotations given. There has been [illegible] demand for Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co. [illegible] Cottons are neglected. The market generally is quiet and steady.

London market quotations have continued firm and the latest quotations cabled to us, as stated below, show a slight improvement on those at the close of last week.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

INTERPORT FOOTBALL

Hongkong v. Hankow

Over a thousand spectators turned out last Friday to witness the third of the Interport series, and the least interesting. After their display against Shanghai on Wednesday, Hankow had but small hope of success, and Hongkong went into the game with a ca' canny intention, in view of the deciding game to be played against Shanghai this afternoon. Changes were made on both sides, and Hongkong played three reserve men, the teams lining up as under:—

Hongkong—Wavish; Wheeler and Bishop; Mair, McKelvie and Eliott; Charlesworth, Eaton, Castledine, Nash and Begg.

Hankow—Crossland; Falconer and McKay; Lasham, Hunter and Sandys; Linford, Aspden, Nash, Tweedie and Tait.

Hongkong almost scored from the kick-off, Crossland bringing off an excellent save in the first minute. In the next few minutes Hankow had one of the few chances that come their way during the game, but Linford failed to put the ball across with the inside men in waiting. The game was 15 minutes old before Hongkong opened the score, though they had fairly monopolized play and did anything with the ball but beat Crossland, who was again in capital form. He pushed out a hot one from Nash, and saved a fast return from Castledine, but the ball slipped out of his hands just inside the post. Hankow occasionally broke away, but their forward work was ineffective and throughout the half not a single shot reached Wavish. The defence showed improvement, however, Falconer and Mackay putting up a sturdy resistance and Crossland coming to the rescue on many occasions. He was beaten again five minutes before half time, Nash and Begg cleverly working for position of which Eaton took easy advantage. At the interval, Hongkong led by two goals to nil.

HONGKONG WITH THE WHIP HAND

In the second half Hongkong maintained the upper hand without any very strenuous effort, and soon had Crossland busy again. He made one very fine save from Eaton, just tipping a fast high shot over the bar. After 20 minutes' play, the Hongkong goalkeeper had his first shot of the match to deal with, and gave away a goal, carrying the ball over the line in turning to throw away a shot from Aspden. There was no hope of an equalizer, however, the forwards making poor use of several possible chances, and Hongkong continued to make things lively in the vicinity of the Hankow goal. Nash scored the third goal with a fast, high shot which curled out of Crosslands reach, and the Hankow goalie was next beat by one of his own men, Lasham diverting a shot from Castledine into the net. Close on time Nash scored an easy goal for Hongkong, who thus won by five goals to one.

The game was too one-sided to be interesting, Hankow never having the ghost of a chance. Crossland, Falconer and Mackay put up a good defence, and Falconer repeatedly upset the calculations of Begg and Nash, the fast and tricky left wing which required a deal of watching. Hunter played a sterling game at centre half, worked tremendously hard, and certainly saved his side from a heavier defeat. The forwards were not equal to the task of beating three clever halves and a very sound pair of backs, and played with less dash than they managed to get in during the game against Shanghai. Hongkong played a steady, capable game, and the forwards showed any amount of pretty combination, but their shooting lacked both the accuracy and force which distinguished it in the opening game on Tuesday. No doubt they were content with the lead which was easily obtained and held

Shanghai v. Hongkong

On Saturday afternoon, at the Police ground, the Hongkong Interport Association football players paid the penalty of the mistake they made in the opening match on Tuesday last, when, with the game well and deservedly won, they allowed Shanghai to break through and score in the last minute of play.

Saturday's game probably will go down in football history as one of the hardest and most interesting matches ever played in Shanghai, for there was not a minute's slackening off during the whole of the play. The combined effects of the three Interport games that already had been played on the ground during the week, and the rain that so consistently had been falling, resulted in the ground being little less than a quagmire when the teams lined up. One well-known footballer, who has played in Shanghai for many years, stated on Saturday that during recent years no football match in Shanghai had been played on so heavy and muddy a ground.

Although it is impossible to get accurate figures, it is probable that the attendance at Saturday's game created a record for Shanghai. It was estimated that at last Tuesday's game there were 2,500 people present; and on Saturday there must have been 300 or 400 more.

The teams were as follows:—

HONGKONG.—Weness; Wynne and Bishop; McKelvie, Stewart (Captain) and Lelliott; Wheeler, Eaton, Johnston, Nash and Begg.

A DING-DONG STRUGGLE.

Stewart having called the coin correctly, elected to play against the wind, and immediately from the kick-off Shanghai commenced to press, Goldman taking a pass from Phillips and shooting at Weness, who cleared well. A little later Crawford tried a long shot which came to naught. Begg spoiled a nice movement by being off-side, and from the kick Phillips and Goldman again were prominent, the latter putting in a shot which Weness dived at and turned for a corner. The kick was unproductive. Hongkong's forwards then got going, some nice combination being seen, and a promising movement being nullified by Turner, who conceded a corner. From now on till the interval it was a ding-dong struggle, both sides missing chances and much excellent play being seen, especially considering the awful state of the ground and the difficulty in controlling the heavy, slippery ball. There was one great shot from Stewart who, after working for himself a nice position, sent in a terrific drive which missed the aperature by inches. A few moments later Nash had what would have been, on dry ground, a great opportunity, but the ground, rather than the Shanghai defence, was his undoing. Wheeler on the Hongkong right wing was prominent, taking the ball cleanly and centring accurately. One shot of his, a rising one, deserved a better fate than skimming the bar. Coulcher was nearly through with what looked like a certain goal, but in his case, as in that of Nash, the question of foothold negatived his effort. There was a good deal of off-side at this period of the game, Eaton, Goldman and Witschi offending in quick succession. Again, Nash was very favourably placed, following a pass from Begg, when he shot behind, to the saving of a serious situation.

Coulcher and Goldman were giving an exhibition of much better combination than in the first match with Hongkong, some of their footwork being delightful, considering the conditions and the alertness of the Hongkong defenders. The half finished soon after great solo efforts by Nash (with a pass to Eaton, who shot behind) and Coulcher, neither defence having had more of the play than their opponents, for although Shanghai perhaps did most of the attacking, the Hongkong defence was so sterling as to place the teams practically on an equality.

SHANGHAI GOALKEEPER INJURED.

The second half opened with Shanghai again attacking. Turner missed a centre from Begg but recovered finely with Eaton and Johnston dangerously placed. The Hongkong goal then had an exceedingly narrow escape, Madar sending in a pretty centre which Coulcher just failed to gather. Hongkong attacked and Turner cleverly foiled Johnston when he was about to shoot at close range. Shanghai renewed pressure and Witschi wound up a strong combined movement by shooting strongly at Weness. At the other end Wilson had to concede a corner to save a dangerous rush. When Goldman shot from close quarters Bishop nearly muffed Weness when he was about to gather. Shanghai maintained the pressure, Phillips, Crawford and the inside forwards all trying to force their way through, but the defence was cleverly maintained. At the other end Remedios had a moderate shot to deal with from Eaton. Receiving from Goldman, Coulcher dodged to the left and put in a fast, low shot, which had Weness beaten but passed just outside the post. Nash, at this period of the game, was putting in some clever work and repeatedly initiated dangerous-looking movements, but nothing came of them; the Hongkong forwards were never given a second's leave for shooting. Following a hot Hongkong attack, Eaton put in a great shot which Remedios stopped and got away with difficulty. He came into collision with Johnston and injured his nose, rather seriously, it is understood. He had to retire and Witschi came into goal.

For a few minutes after this Hongkong played up like a winning team, and time and again clever forward movements were checked with difficulty, Shanghai's defence being hard-pressed. The defence held good and Shanghai forwards went to work again, Goldman and Johannson almost beating the defence in successive movements. In one of these movements, Goldman put in a shot which Weness saved, the ball going out a yard or two in front of the goal-mouth with no Shanghai player on the spot to give the finishing touch. Madar centred well and Coulcher just failed to reach the ball.

SHANGHAI'S ONE GOAL.

Then came the one and only goal. Shanghai had been putting on pressure, and with the ball dangerously in front of the Hongkong goal, there was an apparent relaxation of energy for a second or two, and in the lull, with the defence at a standstill, Coulcher nipped in and beat Weness with one of his famous cross-drives from the left. The point was hailed with great joy by the crowd. With five minutes to go, Hongkong made desperate efforts to equalize, both wings sweeping down and closing in on goal, only to be foiled at the critical moment. On one occasion Johnston was brought down dangerously near to the penalty area. Some of the Hongkong players claimed a penalty kick, but free kick, from just outside the area, was awarded. Stewart took the kick and drove the ball straight towards goal, but Phillips diverted it with his head and the danger was over. Wilson roused Shanghai's apprehensions by miskicking into the Shanghai goalmouth, but the ball dropped on top of the net. Shanghai made a final effort to increase the lead, but were held on the goal-line.

Shanghai, 1. Hongkong, 0.

THE PLAY REVIEWED.

In this match, as in the first with Hongkong, Shanghai's short-passing movements were more or less in the mud. Goldman and Coulcher always were dangerous, Coulcher particularly so. Madar and Johannson were not up to their usual mark in the first half, but improved in the second—especially Madar. Witschi, too was better in the second half than in the first. Phillips played a great game, and kept Nash and Company well in hand. Knight was excellent and Crawford was in his usual good form. Wilson gave a good account of himself, showing a great improvement, and Turner was as resourceful as usual, putting in some particularly fine kicking. Both Turner and Wilson miskicked at the start, but whenever either made a mistake, he made a smart recovery. Both goal-keepers were so well covered that neither had anything great to do, as shots of the scoring variety were few and far between.

The Hongkong backs were fine, and the halves were as clever and untiring as ever. The Hongkong front-line gave a display of pretty football, with some long, swinging movements and very accurate passing. Nash probably was the best of the bunch. On the whole, the Hongkong forwards were worth a goal, though their finishing touches were not so dangerous as those of the Shanghai inside men.

It was really anybody's game from start to finish, and so even that one's congratulations to Shanghai must be tempered with sympathy for the visitors on leaving a flag behind after two of the best and most strenuous games seen in Shanghai for a long time.

Mr. W. C. G. Clifford, as referee, was his usual capable self. The balls for the Interport games were given by Mr. N. B. Ramsay, the local agent of Messrs. Slazengers.

THE INTERPORT DINNER

The Interport dinner took place at the Hotel Parisien on Saturday night, when the Shanghai Football Association entertained the Hankow and Hongkong teams. Mr. John Prentice presided, being supported by officers of the Shanghai Football Association, Mr. Wilton, President of the Hongkong Football Association, and the Captains of the three teams.

In proposing a toast to the visiting teams, Mr. Prentice paid tribute to the general feeling of sportsmanship that prevailed throughout the series, and said that Hankow, with so few players from whom to pick a team, had done well to send so good a combination, which, though beaten, had by no means been disgraced. Shanghai had succeeded in winning the "Hongkong Telegraph" Interport Cup, and he felt sure that when Shanghai visited Hongkong next year they would make a good effort to retain possession of it.

Mr. Stewart, on behalf of the Hongkong players, and Mr. McKay, speaking for those from Hankow, made glowing references to the good time the players had had at Shanghai, and to the general spirit of sportsmanship that obtained.

Mr. J. A. Quayle, Captain of the Shanghai team in the match against Hankow and the first match against Hongkong, voiced his opinion that, on the whole, Shanghai was lucky to have secured the cup. Hongkong had given Shanghai two great games and there was no doubt, in his mind, that while in the first match Shanghai had most of the luck that was going, in the second, which was won by Shanghai by the only goal scored, there was not half a goal difference in the merits of the sides. He considered the Hankow men such wonderful sportsmen that he always would be ready to go to Hankow to play anything from football to marbles, or anything else they liked.

CHINESE FOOTBALL TEAMS.

Mr. Wilton, President of the Hongkong Football Association, without attempting to be didactic, dwelt at length on two matters that already have been subjects of much discussion in local soccer circles—the question of the Shanghai Football Association becoming affiliated to the Football Association, Ld., England, and of local Chinese teams playing against teams of the Association.

In regard to the first point, Mr. Wilton said that in Hongkong they had a highly organized body in the Hongkong Football Association, which was affiliated to the Home body and, directly and indirectly, derived great benefit from being so affiliated. After dwelling on the various advantages which he considered would accrue if the Shanghai Association became affiliated, he asked the Shanghai body seriously to consider the matter again, as he felt sure that affiliation would react to the benefit of Shanghai football.

As to Chinese teams playing against foreign teams, he considered that so long as a man was a sportsman and played the game as it should be played, nationality was a secondary consideration. Chinese teams had successfully joined in the activities of the Hongkong Association, and he made a serious appeal to the Shanghai Association to admit Chinese teams to membership, if it possibly could be done.

The speeches closed with an eloquent address by Mr. A. H. Leslie who, as trainer of the victorious Shanghai team and for 10 years coach of the Nanyang College team, made some interesting remarks, freely interspersed with apposite similes and sage counsel. When he had overcome his initial diffidence, Mr. Leslie spoke strongly on the subject of sportsmanship in football, and made an earnest appeal on behalf of Chinese footballers, who, he said, were excellent sports, who could give the foreign teams a very good game, and who, he hoped, would in the not distant future be playing against teams of the Association.

PAPER HUNT CLUB

The Fifteenth Hunt

The fifteenth hunt of the season took place last Friday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, fortunately just in time to avoid the heavy downpour of rain which fell in the late afternoon, and which will entirely prevent hunting over the week-end. The going was very heavy, and for that reason, the hunt was a very short one, and was laid in the old home country, more familiar perhaps to the older generation of huntsmen than to the young bloods of to-day.

The trail was laid by Messrs. Benbow Rowe, H. W. Lester and R. Moon: it began on Warren Road, and a fair-sized field of about 50 riders assembled. The route lay at first over part of the handicap course, towards Here and There, where practically all the riders crossed the jump, and had much difficulty in getting back again. The trail then led towards Five Hurdle Village, and over several old favourite jumps, including One Wide River and the dry cut beyond, and then over the Hungjao Road, where there was a check of some length. Eventually the paper was discovered over the Vermin Creek line of jumps, and led along Artery Creek to the Double Platforms, then on into the Wilderness, and out again on the line of the Handicap Course to Marah and round Westward Ho to the finish at Suez.

When close to the flag Mr. P. Stang-Lund appeared a certain winner, but he deviated from a straight course, and was caught up by Mr. H. Maitland, whose pony swerved at the last jump, carrying Mr. Stang-Lund with him, and Mr. J. C. Greig, the first over the jump, won the hunt. The card reads as follows:—

1. Mr. J. C. Greig on Strathclyde.
2. Dr. C. Noel Davis on Appledore.
4. Mr. G. Pollock on Liability.
5. Mr. N. Wells-Henderson on
3. Mr. H. Maitland on Blazing Corn Dioxide.
6. Mr. G. C. Aisker on Accelerator.

BADMINTON

Shanghai v. Tientsin

On the courts of the Cercle Sportif Français on Thursday and Friday last Shanghai and Tientsin teams played on Interport Badminton series, the result being a win for Shanghai by 6 matches to nil. The detailed scores follow:—

SINGLES.

Shanghai		Tientsin.
Sullivan	beat	Gotch	15—4,	15—12
Meise	beat	North	15—3,	15—0
Hutchison	beat	Williams	15—1,	15—3
Caie	beat	Fabre	15—10,	15—8

DOUBLES.

Sullivan and Meise beat Gotch and North 21—12, 21—6

Hutchison and Caie beat Williams and Fabre 15—1, 15—3

As the scores indicate, Shanghai had an easy win and outplayed their opponents except in the case of the singles match between Sullivan and Gotch. This was a magnificent exhibition of Badminton at its best, as the players were very evenly matched and the games were much more evenly contested than the scores suggest, the deciding factor being the strength of Sullivan's smashes.

COMPANY MEETINGS

ORIENTAL COTTON S. & W. CO.

Annual Meeting

The seventh annual general meeting of the Oriental Spinning & Weaving Co., Ld., was held on Saturday, meeting at the office of the general managers, Messrs. Arnhold & Co., Ld. Mr. H. E. Arnhold presided, supported by Messrs. A. J. Welch, W. R. McBain and E. E. Ellis, directors, and there was an attendance representing 42,023 shares.

The Chairman said: We are having our annual meeting this year somewhat earlier so as to give me an opportunity of addressing you before my departure, for as some of you are aware I am leaving for Home this afternoon. When I addressed you last year, I pointed out that the outlook was gloomy, and I regret to say that this forecast has been borne out. Fighting between the various political factions has continued sporadically at intervals all over the country, and the trade routes have been beset with bandits and robbers, with the result that there has been no confidence, without which trade is paralyzed. The yarn market has consequently been depressed and although we operated favourably in cotton and could have sold our raw material at a very handsome profit, it has been impossible to work the Mill at a profit.

Our weaving plant has been working the full year and has proved itself to be a sound investment as we have made money on our cloth all through the year. It has found a ready market at prices which compared favourably with old-established chops.

The outstanding feature of the year has been the extremely high price of the new crop of cotton. This was largely due to the great demand for wadded garments in North Japan as a result of the earthquake and consequent fires in Tokio, Yokohama, etc, and it was enhanced by the shortage in the American crop, which has driven up the prices for American Cotton to a very high level, and the result is in considerable shipment of the China staples to America and Europe.

The Cotton situation out here has been aggravated by the great extent to which local staples are being watered, which occurs regularly whenever cotton values are high. The unfortunate state of affairs, both politically and with regard to the cotton situation, still continues. Trade languishes owing to the absence of a Central Government capable of exercising effective control over the Provinces.

With the price of cotton at a level which brings the cost of the manufactured yarn to about Tls. 20 per bale above market price for the spun yarn, mills cannot take the risk of covering their requirements far ahead. Many Chinese mills have already closed down, and it is probable that most mills will have to go on half time after the China New Year.

The outlook cannot, therefore, be considered encouraging, but China is a country of surprises. The statistical position is strong, and if the various political parties can come together, with the result that fighting does not recur, and that a real effort is made to suppress banditry, a revival of trade would set in which would enable the mills to operate satisfactorily, provided they would be in a position to obtain sufficient cotton.

Turning to the accounts, you will notice that had it not been for the heavy charge of interest, there would have been no loss on the year's working. At the last annual meeting, I emphasised particularly that the company was under capitalized, and I recommended an increase of capital. Unfortunately, owing to the difference of opinion amongst the shareholders, this increase of capital did not become available to the Company until the second half of the year, and but for this, the amount shown for interest would have been very much lower.

At the end of the year we held stocks of 2,022 bales of yarn and 3,221 bales of cloth which we could have sold at the time at prices which would have wiped out the loss, but in view of the position of trade and the higher prices anticipated after China New Year, your General Managers decided to carry the goods into the new year, rather than sell them into the old year and wipe out the loss.

Waste Plant:—This is a new item appearing in the accounts. It was decided during the year to instal a waste-spinning plant, which, it is anticipated, will fully repay its cost and very much improve our production. As we had sufficient floor-space in the Mill to accomodate this plant, further outlay for buildings has become unnecessary. The waste-plant has now arrived and is being erected, and we anticipate its working at an early date.

Buildings:—These have been slightly added to by the addition of a new Transformer House in a more central position near the Weaving Shed.

Spinning Plant: — Increase Tls. 51,707.69. This increase is due to the purchase of a number of new carding machines and speed-frames, thus bringing our preparation machinery into a more efficient state. This new machinery is now working, and we have already seen an increased production as a result of the same.

We have written off nothing for depreciation for buildings and machinery as the cost of the new cement-floors in our No. 1 Mill, the re-adjustment of our plant, etc., have been written off "Working Account," and our Depreciation Account of Tls. 1,000,000 is far in excess of what would be necessary if we had written down our plant and buildings from year to year on the recognised scale.

The following resolutions were formally carried:

Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Welch: That the statement of accounts for the 12 months ended December 31, 1923, as audited and presented be passed.

Proposed by Mr. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Welch: That the sum of Tls. 98,590.47 be transferred from general reserve and applied to the balance of profit and loss.

Proposed by Mr. Welch, seconded by Mr. J. A. Moller: That the appointments of Mr. R. W. McBain and Mr. E. E. Ellis to the board of directors be confirmed.

Proposed by Mr. J. S. S. Cooper, seconded by Mr. McBain: That Mr. A. J. Welch be re-elected a director of the company.

Proposed by Mr. McBain, seconded by Mr. Ellis: That Mr. E. A. Mackay, C.A., be re-elected auditor to the company at a remuneration of Tls. 1,250.

THE NEW ENGINEERING WORKS. LD.

Annual General Meeting

The annual general meeting of the New Engineering & Ship Building Works, Ltd., was held at the rooms of the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce, on Saturday. Mr. H. E. Arnhold (the Chairman) presided, supported by Messrs A. W. Brankston, C. A. Skinner, C. R. Burkill, C. G. S. Mackie (directors), C. A. Momber (secretary), and a number of shareholders, the total holding represented being 96,312 shares. The secretary read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report.

The Chairman said: Before proceeding with the business of the meeting, I would like to refer to the death of our late friend and manager, Mr. J. Bleeker, who was associated with this company from its inception up to the time of his retirement in 1916. He showed the greatest interest in the company, and it was largely due to his efforts that it developed so rapidly and successfully. The last seven years of his life were spent in retirement in New Zealand, where he passed away a few weeks ago, and I would like to record a tribute to his memory and to his work during the many years he was associated with us.

I would also like to explain the reason for holding our meeting so much earlier this year. As some of you may be aware, I am leaving for Home to-day, and the meeting is being held earlier so that I may have the pleasure of being able to address you before my departure.

The report and accounts for the year ending December 31, 1923, having been in your hands for some days, I will again follow the usual custom and ask you to take them as read. The amount standing to the credit of profit and loss account, including the amount carried forward from last year, amounts to Tls. 232,000.49, which you will shortly be asked to approve of for appropriation as follows:—

	Tls.
To pay a dividend of 5 per cent on the Ordinary shares	52,500.00
To pay the preference share dividend of 8 per cent.	120,000.00
To carry forward balance	59,500.49
Total Tls.	232,000.49

The above result, although showing substantial reductions as compared with the year 1922, is, in the opinion of your board, gratifying and encouraging. The great depression in the engineering and shipbuilding trade, to which I referred when addressing you last year has not only continued but become more pronounced and has resulted, so far as our company is concerned, in a reduced amount of construction work and so far as this side of our business is concerned I am afraid I cannot forecast any hopes of material improvement until we see a revival of trade in this part of the world. Notwithstanding this unfortunate loss of work, I am gland to lay before you a balance sheet showing sufficient profit not only to pay our preference dividend but also to pay a small dividend of 5 per cent. on the ordinary share capital of the company. Every effort is being made to effect economies in working to meet the strong competition we now have to face and I ad pleased to inform you that during the past year very considerable reductions have been made in the heavy overhead charges which a large organization, such as ours, are compelled to carry.

Turning to the balance sheet, you will find that there has been a certain amount of capital expenditure incurred during the year. Land account shows an increase of Tls. 2,968.34, chiefly covered by the cost of levelling and preparing the company's residental land for the erection of further residences, which we find we are compelled to put up to face the ever increasing housing problem for members of our staff. Buildings, plant, machinery, etc., show an increase of Tls. 27,177.15, which has been incurred by the rearrangement and equipment of our workshops, a programme decided upon during the year, with a view to reducing operating costs, the benefit from which will be realized in future. Considerable additions in tools and improvements have been made in the company's equipment generally to enable work to be handled more expeditiously and economically.

Stocks—Tls. 488,305.60. This figure shows a slight increase on last year, but in actual fact has been materially reduced, the higher figure standing in our books at the end of the year being very largely accounted for by a large amount of material recently imported for a vessel now under construction at the works. Works in progress Tls. 255,647.74. This figure is chiefly made up of two vessels, one a cruiser for the Chinese Maritime Customs Service and the other an attractive, experimental vessel for use on the Tahu Lake; both these vessels are well in hand and should be completed and delivered within a few months time. Sundry Debtors—Tls. 210,239.74. Although this figure is considerably higher than that appearing on the balance sheet last year, you can rest assured it is perfectly sound and the reserve of Tls. 8,899.38 shown in the accounts is more than sufficient to cover any doubtful debts. The rise is also largely accounted for by a very gratifying increase in repair work towards the end of the year. Payment has been already received in respect of a considerable portion of these outstanding.

Investments—Tls. 845.00. This covers the same holdings as last year, being a number of Telephone shares and Shanghai Municipal Council Debentures. Cash in hand—Tls. 299,181.69. This is a very satisfactory position and enables the company to finance the dividends which you will be asked to approve.

Turning to the other side of the balance sheet, there is, I think, little for me to say. The capital, reserves and dividend equalization fund remain the same as last year. The depreciation fund has been increased by Tls 25,000, notwithstanding the fact that the entire cost of maintenance and repairs has been written off against profits. Very careful attention is paid to the question of the company's plant generally and the depreciation fund when applied to this asset on the other side of the balance sheet reduces this item to a very low and conservative figure. Bills Payable—Tls. 3,724.57. Sundry Creditors—Tls. 94,549.66. These two amounts represent the normal outstandings at the year end and have since been almost entirely liquidated.

This, gentlemen, is all I have to say, but if any of you require any further information I shall be pleased to furnish it to the best of my ability.

No questions were asked and the formed resolutions were carried unanimously.

PERMATA RUBBER ESTATES

Annual General Meeting

The 13th annual general meeting of shareholders of the abovenamed company was held on Thursday afternoon, February 14 1924, at the registered offices of the company, No. 44, Szechuen Road, Shanghai, Mr. J. Frost presided, and was supported by Mr. T. H. Harris, Director, Mr. E. Mortimer Reid, Director and representing the Secretaries, and there were shareholders present, representing 7,942 shares in the company.

The Secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report, the Chairman said:—

Gentlemen, the report and accounts having been in your hands for some time, I will, with your permission, take them as read. In the report your Directors have, as usual, given you all the information possible and I have therefore little to add to it.

On July 17, 1923, we sent you a circular giving full details of the purchase of a small estate known as Nyalas which is about 60 acres in area and immediately adjoins our property. This estate contains trees of ten and 12 years old which have not been tapped for 18 months.

Having the increased amount allowed to be harvested by the acquisition of the Nyalas area, it will be possible to reduce the f.o.b. costs by about 2 cents per lb. over the whole production. This saving alone on the 91,671 lb. which it is estimated will be allowed to be exported, is equivalent to nearly $2,000, whilst on the extra amount allowed to be exported by acquiring this area, and on the basis that 25 cents per lb. profit is obtained, gives a further $2,750, making a total profit of approximately $4,750 directly and indirectly estimated to be obtained from this area.

Considering the purchase price on this basis and also that only 60 per cent. of standard production is allowed to be exported, the value of the acquisition can better be understood.

From the accounts you will see that we made a profit for the year of Tls. 15,298.62, which together with the balance brought forward from the previous year, leaves Tls. 31,721.65 at credit of profit and loss which we recommend be dealt with as follows:—

Pay a dividend of Tls. 0.30 per share	13,595.10
Carry forward	18,126.55
Tls.	31,721.65

Later on I shall put forward a resolution to this effect. The all in cost at 8.71d. per lb. shows a slight increase over last year but this should be reduced by the addition to our acreage. Our investments show a considerable change as we had to dispose of these in order to pay for the Nyalas Estate.

Mr. Noël resigned from the board on leaving for home and I should like to place on record our appreciation of all his conscientious work and the keen interest he always took in connexion with the affairs of the company.

A special word of thanks is also due to our agents in Malacca, Sime, Darby & Co., through whose good offices we were enabled to purchase the Nyalas Estate, and whom, in a large measure, we have to thank for a successful year.

This is all I have to say, Gentlemen, but before putting resolutions to the meeting, I shall be pleased to answer any questions to the best of my ability.

There were no questions, and the following resolutions were then put to the meeting and carried unanimously:—

That the directors' report and statement of accounts for the year ended October 31, 1923, as printed and circulated, be adopted.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. T. H. Harris.

That the balance at credit of profit and loss account be dealt with as follows:—

To pay a Dividend of Tls. 0.30 per share to all shareholders Tls on the register on February 14, 1924, absorbing	13.595.10
To carry forward to the next year's account	18.126 55
Tls.	31.721 65

Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. E. M. Reid.

That the appointment, as director, of Mr. E. Mortimer Reid, in place of Mr. E. W. Noël resigned, be confirmed.—Proposed by Mr. J. R. Moodie, seconded by Mr. W. J. Monk.

That Mr. T. H. Harris be re-elected a Director of the Company.—Proposed by Mr. Kenneth Martin, seconded by Mr. J. R. Moodie.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be elected auditors to the company for the ensuing year at a fee of Tls. 300 for Shanghai and Malacca.—Proposed by Mr. A. Masseurs, seconded by Mr. W. Thompson.

WEIHAIWEI LAND & BUILDING CO., LD.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Weihaiwei Land & Building Co., Ld., was held on Tuesday at 10 Canton Road. Mr. A. J. Welch presided, supported by Messrs. R. E. S. Gregson and E. E. Clark (dirctors). There were present shareholders representing 2,432 shares.

The notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report having been read, the Chairman said:—

The report and accounts have been in your hands for some days and with your permission I will take them as read. The working account shows Tls. 230.79 more profit than last year, accounted for principally by an increase in rentals of Tls. 336.03, less increase in salaries and wages of Tls. 40.70 and increased Land Tax Tls. 26.92, and other small differences. Profit and loss account, after providing for depreciation of 10 per cent. on furniture and 2½ per cent. on the cost price of all buildings, shows a balance at credit of Tls. 7,355.17, out of which it is proposed to pay a dividend of 6 per cent. or Tls. 1.20 per share, absorbing Tls. 4,408.80, and to carry forward the balance of Tls. 2,946.37. Leases for the coming summer have already been signed for eight bungalows, and the other three will be signed within the next few days. Regarding the future, there is still no definite news about Rendition, and we do not know what is going to happen.

There being no questions the formal resolutions were then proposed and carried unanimously

Volunteer Corps.

"A" Company, British.—2nd Lieut. C. T. Birdwood to be Lieutenant, dated January 25, 1924.

Long Service Medal.—Upon the recommendation of the Commandant, the undermentioned members of the Volunteer Corps are awarded the Council's Long Service Medal:—

Headquarters.—Lieut. T. G. Drakeford.

British Infantry Reserves.—Lieut. J. C. Bosustow.

American Troop.—It is notified that the date of formation of this unit is September 10, 1923, and that the official title will be the "American Troop."

Tramways.

The Commissioner of Police has reported that the experimental [illegible] gates which have for some [illegible] in use on a few cars and [illegible] appear to have answered [illegible] purpose for which they are intended, namely, to prevent persons from standing on the foot boards or from boarding or leaving a moving Tramway vehicle.

It is considered, however, by the Police that the gates are none too high or too stoutly constructed and in recommending that the Council give permission to the Company to equip all their stock with gates, the Commissioner of Police suggests that if, as seems possible, these gates should prove to be not sufficiently strong or sufficiently high, it be understood that the requisite steps should be taken by the Company to improve them.

Mixed Court Report for December.

Registration in Foreign Consulates.—On October 31, a Chinese civil case was filed, the basis of the action was the return of certain cheques of the value of $103,000. On the following day an action was filed through the Portuguese Consulate against the plaintiff in the first action claiming $93,000 and interest due on certain cheques which formed part of the claim in the Chinese action. The Chinese case came up on December 20 for the hearing of a motion by the plaintiff in the foreign action for leave to intervene. The Bench consisted of the American Assessor and a Magistrate with the Portuguese Assessor watching the interests of the intervenor. Strong exception was at once taken to the nationality of the intervenor, who it was alleged, was not a Portuguese at all but a Chinese born in Kiangsu and a person who had always held himself out to be a Chinese citizen. After much argument the American Assessor and the Magistrate ruled that as the action was a purely Chinese civil case the Court was not competent to decide the intervenor's nationality and even granting that he were not a Portuguese, the Portuguese Consulate had asserted an interest by filing the intervenor's petition, consequently the case would be tried by both Assessors and the Magistrate. When the foreign action came up two days later before the Portuguese Assessor and a Magistrate, the first point to be decided was an application for a change of venue on the grounds that the plaintiff was a Chinese citizen and not a Portuguese but this was dropped as the Portuguese Assessor opened the proceedings by stating that as the petition had been filed through the Portuguese Consulate the usual and proper procedure was for the case to be heard by him and a Magistrate but in the present instance the Portuguese Consulate was quite prepared to and as a matter of fact did drop from the case and from its character as a foreign civil action temporarily waiving the status of the plaintiff. This, he continued, was not to be taken as forming a precedent of any kind, and as there were American and Portuguese interests involved, the two Assessors concerned would sit and hear the action as a purely Chinese civil one. The Court's final decision was that both the actions would be heard together.

Firearms.—Six persons were charged with being in possession of firearms. One, a Russian, convicted of importing and keeping for sale nine revolvers and one pistol together with ammunition, was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment and deportation. This decision, on the application of prisoner's counsel, was subsequently rescinded, the Court ordering that he be released subject to his finding a responsible person who would guarantee his return to Russia. Another, a German seaman, charged with being in possession of five automatic pistols and 250 rounds of ammunition, admitted that he bought the weapons in Germany and was selling them for $135 each. He further stated that on his last voyage he had been approached by a number of Russians and Chinese with the request that he bring back with him firearms and ammunition for them. He was sentenced to six months and expulsion.

Unrecognized Foreigners.—There were twenty-one unrecognized foreigners charged but with the exception of the two already mentioned in the previous paragraph the only serious charges were two cases of larceny in each of which the Court gave a sentence of one month's imprisonment to be followed by deportation.

Civil Cases.—Chinese civil cases awaiting a first hearing have increased by 25 to 312, and the foreign civil list by 48 to 107.

KIANGWAN RACES

Liesenfield's Easy Champions' Win from Ataman and Capella Eyes

Though it was dry at Kiangwan last Friday, the weather conditions were still very unpleasant, for it was bitterly cold, with a strong wind blowing into the ponies' teeth all down the straight. The going had not improved noticeably, for there was too much water on the course before and the track was very sticky in the drying wind.

The big event of the day was the Champions, which Mr. Morriss probably could have won with any of his qualified ponies. He only had Liesenfield saddled and in charge of Mr. Stewart it simply strolled away from the field though the rest were led by the electric Ataman, who showed up in his very best form but could make no impression on the winner.

The day will be remembered for the record dividend paid by the pari-mutuel on a course in the Far East and but few bigger can have been paid anywhere, as the odds worked out at over 1,000 to 5. The winning pony was Pennsylvania, a fine looking animal and one which has done some good times in training, but which Mr. Allan sold as it performed so poorly in racing. Under young Mr. Encarnacao he won the New Year Stakes very comfortably and there had been but two tickets taken on it on the pari-mutuel, so that the handsome dividend of $5,730 was returned.

With the course still in a very bad state and the weather again bitterly cold, the racing for the concluding day of the New Year meeting at Kiangwan on Saturday was very moderate. The Grand National was won by Mr. Morriss' Petersfield, who outran his stable companion, Leichfield. Mr. Day this time sent out a winner for the Griffins Steeplechase and won the race very easily with Theatreland, ridden by Mr. Dalgarno.

PRESENTATION OF CUPS

The formal opening of Mr. T. U. Yih's beautiful Chinese garden beyond Mr. Burkill's bungalow at Kiangwan and the presentation of the cups won at the China New Year Race Meeting of the International Recreation Club were pleasantly combined on Sunday at a tiffin given by the Stewards of the International Recreation Club in the pavilion in the gardens. The gardens will not be at their best until about the end of March, but even on the dreary weather of yesterday they presented a beautiful sight and showed to the best advantage the wonderful work of the Chinese landscape gardener. Mr. Brodie A. Clarke presided, with Mr. W. G. Gerrard in the vice-chair and others present included Messrs. G. Wuilleumier, K. F. Chang, V. S. Chow, S. F. Yih, K. D. Soo, M. H. Pou, S. Matsumoto, S. F. Yih, Kum K. Yien, Tong Shao-yi, T. M. Wilson, J. Zellensky, A. G. Hill, Major H. E. Keylock, W. Hill, H. K. Strachan, A. G. Horniblow, A. P. Finch, A. W. Olsen, K. K. Chang, Geo. Dallas, E. Y. Sheng, J. H. Tam, T. U. Yih, G. L. Ho, F. Milner, Yu Ya-chang, C. T. Parsons, E. Lirde, C. C. Whitehead, K. H. Chun, T. T. Chow, Dr. T. K. M. Siao, Wm. Hu, Y. Wong, J. Liou, L. P. Quincey, B. S. Sheng, V. M. Haimovitch, P. C. Wu, H. Tomono, Z. W. Yu, W. A. Dalgarno, C. Encarnacao.

After an excellent tiffin, the Chairman paid a tribute to Mr. T. U. Yih's work in founding the International Recreation Club. He said that probably there was no other sportsman, Chinese or foreign, who could have made the club the success it had proved to be. Innumerable difficulties were encountered in its early days, but Mr. Yih always was most wonderfully optimistic, he smiled at every trouble, he always did the right thing and finally he brought everything to a happy conclusion.

Mr. Brodie Clarke then presented the cups—the Griffin Steeplechase Cup to Mr. W. A. Dalgarno (jockey for Mr. "Day"), the Race Club Cup to Mr. V. M. Haimovitch (jockey for Mr. K. D. Soo), the Club Cup to Mr. W. Hill (jockey for the Sheng Co stable) and the Novices Cup to Mr. Ozorio (uncle of Mr. Encarnacao, the winner, who was unable to be present). All the recipients made suitable responses and Mr. Y. S. Day, the popular secretary of the club, spoke on behalf of Mr. Yih, thanking all racing men, both foreign and Chinese, for all they had done on behalf of the sport and promising his further help to the limit in the furtherance of good sport and good fellowship.

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY

Belfast, Feb. 9.

The international Rugby football match between Ireland and England was played here to-day in showery weather before a crowd of 16,000. England beat Ireland by 14 points to 3.

The ball was very slippery. Ireland was continually attacking for the first 20 minutes and the Irish fullback, Crawford, narrowly missed a penalty goal from just inside the Irish half. A beautiful movement by the English backs resulted in Corbett getting across, but the try was not converted. This was followed by an Irish rush to the English line, and Douglas dashed over. Crawford, however, failed to convert and the score at half time was 3 points to 3.

On the resumption the Irishmen pressed heavily, their forwards playing with desperate energy, but they were met by a sound defence. After a time the Irish attacks became spasmodic and less sustained. England pressed and, after neat handling by the backs, Wickes scored an unconverted try. Then followed a couple of tries by the English three-quarter, Catcheside, the first being converted by Conway. England thus won by 14 points to 3.—Reuter.

AUSTRALIAN SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIPS

Hobart, Feb. 10.

The Swedish swimmer, Arne Borg, won the half-mile championship of Australia to-day in 9 min. 57-4/5 sec. Charlton, who beat Arne Borg, over the same distance in 10 min. 5[illegible]-4/5 sec., a world's record, at Sydney, is not competing in the championships as he is reserving himself for the Olympic Games.—Reuter.

Mr. J. G. Priestwood, who appeared for the defence, dwelt upon the fact that accused was a young man, married, and a first offender, and had been drawn into this by a police informer. He suggested that to send him to prison would be too drastic, and that the Magistrate would be showing neither weakness nor sympathy, but saving him from the social penalties of a conviction, if he treated him as a first offender.

A CASE FOR IMPROVEMENT.

His Worship—No British subject should in any way be mixed up with the traffic in arms. It is a crime which must be dealt with by imprisonment and there can be no question of a first offender, except perhaps in the case of a youngster who really does not know the very serious nature of the offence.

Mr. Priestwood—I am submitting that.

His Worship—The accused is 27, and must have known of the serious cases which have recently occurred.

Mr. Priestwood—It is a shame that he should be sent to prison because the police laid a trap.

His Worship—Why did he find himself in it? It is a testimonial to the police that they got the right people in the net.

Counsel again urged that the court take into consideration the fact that accused was a young married man, but his Worship observed that the logical end to that argument would be that in future only bachelors might be punished. He regretted the necessity of having to deal severely with accused, but must send him to prison for three months. He could appeal at once if he thought the sentence too severe.

A RUNAWAY MOTOR CAR

Curious Accident in Range Road and its Police Court Sequel

C. E. Fisher, a ship's officer, appeared before Mr. G. W. King at H.M. Police Court on Thursday charged with having dangerously driven a motor-car in Range Road on Wednesday afternoon; further, with driving it while under the influence of liquor, and without a driver's licence. He pleaded not guilty.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted and Mr. M. Reader Harris appeared for the defence.

A Chinese police constable who was on point duty at the corner of Range Road and North Szechuen Road, gave evidence that he saw the motor-car jammed against a telephone pole and several Chinese lying on the ground. Defendant got down from the car and witness arrested him.

FOUR OR FIVE PEOPLE INJURED.

Mr. Maitland explained that four or five Chinese were injured, one seriously and the others only slightly. Defendant was under the influence of drink at the time.

Mr. Reader Harris said defendant did not dispute that he was in the car at the time, close to the driver's seat. He was perfectly sober. His explanation was that, having alighted from the car, he leaned over to get a bag for his friend and in so doing dropped his pocket book under the driver's seat. He then got in the car to find it, and must have accidentally set the car in motion, the driver having left the engine running and the car being in gear.

P. C. Nicolsky gave evidence that directly after the accident he saw a Chinese woman and child lying injured on the ground, and a smashed ricsha. The defendant was drunk, and when he got out of the car could not walk straight. He told witness that he did not drive the car.

Dr. Amos Wong, of St. Luke's Hospital, gave evidence that five Chinese were injured in the accident, one of them seriously, but the latter—a woman who was suffering from shock—was not likely to die.

The chauffeur of the car, which was hired from the Eastern Garage, stated that he picked up the defendant and two other foreigners at the Palace Hotel and, after leaving one at the General Hospital, drove on to Range Road. The two foreigners stood on the pavement in Range Road while witness removed the bag, and then a $5 bill was handed to him for the fare. Witness went to get change, and on returning in three or four minutes saw the car moving, the defendant driving it. Witness followed the car to the Haskell Road corner where it had collided with a telephone pole.

A ZIGZAG COURSE.

In answer to the Magistrate, witness said that he left the engine running, but the gear was on stop clutch. Defendant had hold of the steering wheel and was steering a zigzag course.

Police Sgt. Doyle, who was on duty at Hongkew Station when the defendant was brought in, described him as being drunk.

Asked what signs of drunkenness he noted, witness said that defendant was unsteady on his legs, smelt of drink, and gave his age as 96.

Defendant—I said I was born in 1896.

Witness added that defendant summoned his own doctor to examine him, but he did not know Dr. Bryson had said that Fisher was sober.

Chief Inspector O'Toole and Sub-Inspector Jones also gave evidence that defendant was under the influence of drink when taken to the police station.

For the defence, Captain B. A. Thompson, second Marine Superintendent of the C. N. S., said Mr. Fisher was employed by the company as a chief officer and had an excellent character. He had been to the dentist on Wednesday afternoon and called at the office between 3.30 and 4 o'clock, at which time he was quite sober.

AN UNFORTUNATE POCKET BOOK.

Defendant then gave evidence as to visiting the dentist, who administered two cocaine injections before drawing a tooth, and, after visiting his ship and the company's office, he called at the Palace Hotel to pick up a friend. Here he had a brandy and milk while waiting for the car. Describing what happened at Range Road, witness said that he got back into the car to find his pocket book which he had dropped, and before he knew what was happening the car was careering down the road and he did not know how to stop it. He only put his hand to the wheel when he saw the car was about to collide with a ricsha. He had never driven a car and knew nothing whatever about starting, and he could not explain what caused this car to move.

Mr. W. L. Thomas, who was in defendant's company, said that after he left the car he looked back and saw defendant groping on the floor for something, and it was then that the car started. It started to move across the road, and witness thought it was going to hit the wall on the other side, but then it started on another tack, and squared up a bit.

Addressing the court for the defence, Mr. Harris mentioned that an instance of a car being accidentally started occurred at Hongkong recently, a coolie starting the car of Mr. A. G. Stephen, the vehicle landing over a cliff.

CASE DISMISSED.

His Worship, in giving his decision, said the prosecution had given no reason why defendant should wish or attempt to drive the car, and only left it to be inferred that he suddenly took it into his head to go on a joy ride. It was within the bounds of probability that a car might have moved off suddenly in this way. As to the evidence for and against the defendant being drunk, he concluded that, while the police must be regarded as somewhat of experts, they were mistaken in this case. The defendant would be discharged.

A BUSINESS COMPLICATION OF 1914

Tangled Suit Between British, American and German Firms Dealt with by Judge Lobingier: Judgment for Tls. 13,000 Against Bank

A lengthy judgment in a case arising out of the business complications caused in 1914 by the war has been delivered by his Honour Judge Lobingier in the United States Court for China. The plaintiffs were the Chemische Fabrik Griesheim Elektron, who were represented by Mr. Fessenden, and the defendants the International Banking Corporation, represented by Mr. Chalaire, while Bradley & Co. Ld., for whom Mr. G. H. Wright appeared, were intervenors in the case.

This is an action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful surrender of a deposit in the defendant bank under the following instructions which are admitted in the pleadings:

Shanghai, Oct. 12, 1914.

The Manager
International Bank,
Present.

We shall be much obliged if you will open a tael account in the joint names of Messrs. Siemssen & Co. and ourselves on the following conditions:

(1) Cheques drawn against the account to be signed by both Mssrs. Bradley & Co., Ld. and Messrs. Siemssen & Co.

(2) Any exchange required for the account to be fixed with the International Banking Corporation.

Yours faithfully
(Sgd.) Bradley & Co., Ld.

END TO BUSINESS RELATIONS.

Intervenor, a British corporation, had been for some time selling to Chinese goods furnished by plaintiff, a German corporation, and it is conceded that the purpose of this deposit was to meet the emergency created by the world war which terminated all business relations between the two. Defendant, being a corporation of a then neutral country, was chosen as the depositary of the fund to be realized from continuing sales by intervenor of stocks on hand. By March 3, 1915, this fund aggregated Shanghai Tls. 24,622.17, which amount defendant surrendered on April 30, 1919, to the intervenor without the signature of the other party named in the instructions. Meanwhile intervenor, with the approval of its consular authorities, remitted to the English Public Trustee an amount in sterling which it admitted owing plaintiff. The proceeds, however, were in taels which had risen in value, and the deposit at the time of its withdrawal was worth in sterling nearly twice the amount remitted. The crucial question is whether plaintiff or intervenor had the title to the deposit.

THE LEGAL PRESUMPTION.

In conducting this inquiry we have the advantage of starting with a well recognized legal presumption.

"The law presumes that a deposit belongs to the person in whose name it is entered and. . . where such a joint deposit is made, the presumption is that the interest of the joint depositors is equal."

The bank is estopped to question the depositor's title and the burden of overcoming the presumption rests upon anyone who questions it. Since intervenor alleged that it was "the sole owner" of the deposit it had the double burden of proving that allegation and of overcoming the presumption and for that reason, and because it alone had a witness at the trial, it was called upon to produce its evidence first.

We have searched the record in vain for evidence which would meet the burden thus assumed by the intervenor. The sole witness was its managing director who handled the transaction in question and who must be presumed to have stated the case as favourably to the intervenor as the facts would justify. He shows that intervenor sold plaintiff's goods at prices fixed by plaintiff thereby eliminating one of the tests which would make intervenor a purchaser. It received as its entire compensation a commission of 10 per cent., deducting therefrom "storage, firm insurance and any incidental charges other than duty."

The balance, it would seem, belonged to plaintiff; for it is not seriously disputed that intervenor was an agent of some sort. The original contract transfers to Bradley & Co. die Vertretung (representation, agency) in Shanghai. In a letter to defendant two days before it surrendered the fund, intervenor says:

"Before the war we were agents for the Chemische Fabrik Griesheim Elektron."

Intervenor's managing director shows that the agency was of the delcredere kind. Now it is elementary that an agent cannot profit at the principal's expense.

THE QUESTION EXCHANGE.

Nor do we find any specific evidence to the contrary. True, the witness says, that intervenor's liability was in gold while the sales to Chinese dealers were usually in taels. But that would seem to be merely a detail in the transaction. Plaintiff's title to the balance due it would hardly be affected by the medium of payment. The question of exchange was undoubtedly an important factor in producing the situation out of which the controversy arose. But we cannot see that exchange greatly affects the legal rights and obligations of the parties for the simple reason that exchange does not appear to have ever been definitely settled by agreement between them. Intervenor, indeed, fixed a rate of 2/6 in remitting to plaintiff and when fixed it seems to have been a normal rate and therefore not questioned by plaintiff. But there is no pretence of an agreement that said rate should continue indefinitely or that intervenor should reap the profit of the phenomenal rise in exchange. Of course, had plaintiff agreed to this rate in advance it could not have complained of intervenor's profit or out of its own loss. But no such agreement is claimed. It is true that the witness states that Mr. Michaelis, plaintiff's agent, wanted him to remit to New York the sterling sum which intervenor admitted owing. But even this appears contradictory to his other testimony, "we had no interview with Mr. Michaelis and no agreement with him as to the rate at which we should pay in our sterling indebtedness."

INTERVENOR'S ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

Nor are we left to negative evidence alone on this point. For on the same date of the letter of deposit intervenor wrote plaintiff's agent as follows—:

October 12, 1914.

K. Michaelis Esq.
C/o Messrs. Siemssen & Co.
Present.

Dear Sir,—We beg to advise that in accordance with our conversation with you we have opened an account with the International Banking Corporation in the joint names of Messrs. Siemssen & Co. and ourselves into which the money due to the Chemische Fabrik Griesheim Elektron will be paid during the continuance of the war. Kindly confirm the arrangement. Please note that we undertake no responsibility for any liability that may attach to Messrs. Siemssen & Co. in the matter.

Here then we have an express acknowledgement by intervenor that the money constituting this deposit was "due" plaintiff. True, the letter does not state expressly that it was all so due, but such must have been its meaning since no deposits of proceeds of sales were made until after deducting intervenor's commission, which constituted its entire compensation. This would seem to dispose of the contention that the deposit was for the purpose of "security." It could not have been mere security if it was "due" plaintiff. It is true that intervenor was at that time forbidden by the law of its country to make actual payment to plaintiff. But this arrangement was evidently a substitute for payment. The money was recognized as "due" plaintiff and the deposit was arranged "during the continuance of the war" after which actual delivery would no longer be prevented. The facts here differ from those in the case relied upon by intervenor in at least two important particulars: (1) There was no commission; "the surplus of all profits" made by the party who sold the goods was retained to his credit: and (2) There was no agreement like that just quoted recognizing the funds in question as "due" the party who furnished the goods.

NO RETENTION OF INTEREST.

We are unable therefore to find from the evidence that either defendant or intervenor has met the burden of overcoming the presumption of plaintiff's title to this deposit. But we do find the evidence sufficient to overcome any presumption that intervenor retained an actual interest in that deposit. Had it done so it would clearly not have written as it did on October 12, 1914, and its expression at that time, long before any controversy arose, is more reliable than any subsequent one. Nor do we think intervenor has established its averment.

"That on or about April 30, 1919, and for sometime prior thereto and thereafter, intervenor did with due care and diligence seek the aforesaid Siemssen & Co. in Shanghai, and did fail to find said Siemssen & Co. or any one authorized to act for it in signing, as a joint signatory, cheques drawn against the Shanghai taels account, and that it was informed that the said Siemssen & Co. was not then in existence in Shanghai."

April 30, 1919, was nearly six months after the armistice. Meanwhile the Germans including plaintiff's agent had been deported from China.

A BREACH OF CONTRACT.

We must find that defendant committed a breach of its contract in surrendering this deposit to the intervenor and the only remaining question is the measure of damages.

Intervenor alleges:—

"That on or about April 30, 1919, intervenor did, with the consent and concurrence of and through His Brittannic Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghai, deliver the sum of sterling £3,077/15/5, then owing by it to plaintiff, to His Britannic Majesty's Public Trustee Custodian of Enemy Property for England and Wales in full payment of its indebtedness to plaintiff."

The remission of the amount alleged is fully established by the evidence. Indeed it is admitted in plaintiff's brief and practically in its answer, though the actual receipt of the money by plaintiff is denied. Direct receipt, however, was impossible during the world war because plaintiff and intervenor were subjects of powers which were at war with each other and all contractual relations between them were suspended. Both Britain and Germany enacted legislation prohibiting payments to residents of enemy countries. At the close of the war the belligerents provided methods of liquidating these suspended claims.

TREATY OBLIGATIONS.

It seems clear that while intervenor could not, between 1914 and 1919, have made payment direct to plaintiff, it could and did remit a sum to an official of its own government which expressly assumed responsibility for plaintiff's claim. Not only so but each government agreed to forbid its nationals to effect payment in any other way. Now both plaintiff and intervenor are bound by this treaty and it may be presumed that the officials of their respective governments have proceeded regularly and performed their duties thereunder.

Nevertheless intervenor so late as January 26, 1923, wrote:

"As you will see from these account sales, our indebtedness to you consists of a sum of £3,077.15.5. If you have not received the amount from the Public Trustees through your government, we are quite prepared to take up the question of recovery and payment direct to your goodselves."

STEPS TOWARDS PAYMENT.

We need not, therefore, adjudicate whether payment has been effected. But we must find from the evidence that intervenor has taken steps to that end. Should payment ultimately fail through intervenor's fault, plaintiff would have its remedy in the court of intervenor's nationality. Eliminating the item thus remitted the situation appears as stated in plaintiff's brief as follows:

"Approximately Tls. 12,300 at exchange 5½ were appropriated by Bradley & Co., Ld. from the original deposit of Tls. 34,623.17 to make this payment. After making this payment as described there remained a balance of approximately Tls. 13,000. This sum Bradley & Co., Ld. admit was appropriated to their own use."

It is this balance of Tls. 13,000, which defendant surrendered to intervenor in breach of the former's instructions and contract and in our judgment it affords plaintiff's measure of damages.

JUDGMENT FOR TLS. 13,000.

The concluding portion of the judgment deals with a legal point

LAW REPORTS

LAW OF PROMISSORY NOTES

In What Cases Is It Possible to Bring Forward a Defence to an Action?

The question as to what defence can be raised to a claim on a promissory note was argued in a case which came before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner on Monday, when a Japanese merchant named S. G. Kamei sued Linton H. de Coser (formerly describing himself as Linton H. Steward), for payment of $800 due on a promissory note.

Mr. A. Covey appeared for plaintiff and Mr. Thomas Addis for defendant.

The matter came up on a motion submitted by Mr. Covey for leave to strike out certain clauses in a defence to the action filed by defendant. In the clauses objected to it was set forth on behalf of defendant that on October 21 he arranged to purchase a garage for plaintiff at a cost of Tls. 9,500 and was to receive 5 per cent. on the purchase price as commission, having, at plaintiff's request, waived his claim on the vendor for a similar commission. It was then arranged that in lieu of payment of the commission plaintiff would give defendant a one-third partnership in the garage, of which defendant was to become manager. The partnership, said Mr. Covey, was not given, nor was the commission, Tls. 475, paid. Defendant admitted the promissory note, but claimed that his signing it was conditional upon his being made a partner. Having been engaged to assist plaintiff in his business at a salary of $200 per month, he was discharged without notice, and claimed $200 damages for wrongful dismissal, by way of further set-off to the amount of the promissory note. Counsel asked that these clauses in the defence be struck out, the transactions referred to being separate from that in which defendant signed the note for money received.

His Lordship said he did not see how the set-off could be made against a non-British subject unless he consented to an action for damages for wrongful dismissal.

ALWAYS GREAT DIFFICULTY.

Mr. Covey pointed out that in any case where a promissory note was held there was always the greatest difficulty in finding any defence whatever.

Mr. Addis argued that the matters set forth in the defence were all part of the same transaction, and that defendant only signed the promissory note in expectation that plaintiff would carry out his promises.

His Lordship—You can only set-off against a foreign defendant in this court in respect of things which absolutely arise out of the same transaction. You cannot bring an action against him here for wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Addis contended that the signing of the note was conditional upon defendant's either getting the commission or being made a partner.

Mr. Covey replied that defendant's proper course would be to bring an action against plaintiff in the Japanese court.

His Lordship granted the application in respect to all the paragraphs named excepting that in which defendant claimed that the signing of the promissory note was conditional upon his being made a partner.

THE CLAIM ADMITTED.

The case in which S. G. Kamei sued Linton H. Coser for $800 with $80 interest on a promissory note and costs came up on Tuesday at H.M. Supreme Court.

Mr. Addis stated that the defendant would admit the claim, but asked for a stay of execution. Proceedings were being taken by defendant in a case before the Japanese Court and until judgment was given in this case he did not think his client would be able to find the money.

HONGKONG ORDINANCES

More Cases of Companies' Inadvertance in Filing Share Returns

Before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H. M. Supreme Court on Tuesday, Mr. M. Reader Harris applied on behalf of the Pung Wo Manufacturing Co., Ltd. for an extension of the time for filing with the Registrar of Companies returns of allotments of shares made respectively on August 17, September 5, November 15 and December 7, all in the year 1923, pursuant to Section 90 (1) (a) and (b) of the Hongkong Companies Ordinance 1911. Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate, represented the Registrar of Companies.

Mr. Reader Harris said that the company was incorporated on August 17 with a nominal capital of Tls. 350,000 divided into 35,000 shares of Tls. 10 each. Up till the end of September 27,600 shares had been allotted and returns of such allotments were duly made to the Registrar of Companies. Other shares, however, were allotted—on October 22 five shares to Pan Chi-seng and 10 shares on December 15 to Chi Ong-cheng—and no returns of the allotments had been made. It was purely an inadvenence due to the fact that the officials responsible did not know the law.

Mr. Wilkinson raised no opposition and the application was granted.

A similar application was made by Mr. Reader Harris on behalf of the China General Omnibus Co. in respect of certain shares. Mr. Harris stated that the nominal capital of the company was Tls. 1,000,000, divided into 100,000 ordinary shares of Tls. 10 each. Up to the end of July 34,-163 shares had been allotted and returns of such allotments were made to the Registrar of Companies, but five shares were allotted to E. H. Baker on August 17, 10 shares to Yuen Sze-miao on September 5, 200 shares on November 17 to Mr. Eugene Wihlfahrt and 2,000 shares to Mr. Hung Yue-fong on December 17. No returns had been made of these owing to inadvertence.

This application was also granted.

SEQUEL TO SHOOTING AFFAIR

Two Men Charged in Police Court with Negotiating Opium Sale

The accused in the Avenue Joffre shooting case were again before Mr. G. W. King at H.M. Police Court last Friday, W. H. Shaw and Charles Lowry being charged with entering into negotiation with a Chinese, Woo Sih-yih, for the sale of opium, and with stealing from the same person the sum of $885 by means of a trick.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted, Mr. Tycho Wing and Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for Lowry, and Mr. Goldring and Mr. G. Sellett defended Shaw.

LARCENY BY A TRICK

In outlining the case for the prosecution, Mr. Maitland said it was one of larceny by means of a trick. A Chinese named of Woo got into touch with the accused who offered to sell him some opium. On December 6, Woo went to No. 128 Boone Road, where the accused were, and handed over $400 to one of them in an upstairs room. After waiting for some time, the defendants went downstairs and later one of them came up with an empty bag, stating that the other defendant was filling another bag, and adding that they wanted more money. Woo handed over another $450, and the man went downstairs again to get "the cargo." The Chinese waited for some time, but neither of the accused appeared again, and upon going downstairs, a small boy told him that the foreigners had left the house some time previously. Subsequently, Woo found the accused at another address, and got back $150 and a promissory note for the balance, but no further repayment had been made. The last offer to repay the $700 was made on the night the accused were arrested on this charge.

His Worship—Is it an offence under Chinese law to traffic in opium!

Mr. Maitland—Yes.

Mr. Maitland—Yes.

OPIUM BUSINESS.

Complainant gave evidence bearing out counsel's statement, saying that upon being introduced to the accused he was taken to 218 Boone Road by a Russian woman and there talked opium business. When the first $400 was handed to Shaw, Lowry said that more must be paid, and when he hesitated "the Russian missy" assured him that it would be all right, Lowry being a man who did big business. A few days later, a Mr. Rokatoff called at witness's house and repaid $150, and Shaw had since offered to repay the whole amount, but nothing more had been received.

In answer to Mr. Wing, witness said this was his first deal in opium, and, knowing nothing about the business, he thought the accused would be able to give him the necessary information.

Did it not occur to you, when they were unable to produce the opium, that they also knew nothing about the business and were as helpless as you were?—They got the money, and I got nothing.

Witness added, in answer to further questions, that he was quite content to accept their promissory note for the money not returned. He did not sue them in the British Court for fear of losing face in being mixed up with such a business.

In answer to the Court, witness stated that he did not smoke opium himself, and was purchasing it for Chinese users.

Hermann Auslander, of 128 Boone Road, gave evidence as to accused having rented a room at the house in December; and a house boy employed at the place spoke as to the visit of Woo on December 6, when the two accused left by the back door of the house, leaving Woo upstairs.

Det.-Sgt. Schmidt gave evidence as to taking possession of some luggage belonging to the accused at the Savoy Hotel, and—in answer to Mr. Wing—said it contained nothing incriminating.

This was the case for the prosecution.

COUNSEL'S INTERESTING SUGGESTION.

In asking that both cases against Lowry be dismissed, Mr. Wing said neither of the charges would ever have been brought but for the previous day's proceedings in the shooting case. In order to fortify the position of Detective Emilianoff, every possible effort had to be made to convict the two men. The accused never intended to rob Mr. Woo, and there was no evidence of fraudulent or dishonest intention. Lowry might have been dazzled by the sight of the money, and might have thought it was an experiment which might be worth trying; but he knew nothing about opium, had not got any opium, and did not know where to get it, and the thing failed. At the most, it was a hope on the part of Lowry that he might find himself in a position to fulfil a promise which, admittedly, involved doing wrong.

Mr. Sellet made a similar plea on behalf of Shaw, but his Worship said he must hear what explanation they had to make.

The proceedings were adjourned until Monday.

Story of the Defendants

The case for the defence was heard at H. M. Police Court on Monday, before Mr. G. W. King, in connexion with the prosecution of W. H. Shaw and C. Lowry, who were charged on remand with entering into negotiation with a Chinese, Woo Sih-yih, for the sale of opium, and with stealing from the same person the sum of $885 by means of a trick.

Mr. E. T. Maitland appeared for the prosecution, Mr. Tycho Wing and Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for Lowry, and Mr. Goldring and Mr. G. Sellett for Shaw.

Lowry went into the witness box and gave evidence that he had known Shaw for some time. Witness met Woo about a week before December 6—the date of the alleged offence—in the house of a Russian lady in Paoshan Road. The lady asked whether he knew anybody who could procure opium, and witness said he could not do it himself as he knew nothing about opium. At the urgent request of the lady, however, he promised to try and get in touch with somebody who did know, thinking that Shaw might possibly know somebody who could supply the opium. He saw Shaw, who said he would do what he could. On December 6, witness introduced Shaw to Mr. Woo and the Russian lady at a house in Boone Road. Witness then went downstairs and waited for about a quarter of an hour, Shaw then coming down and carrying in his hand a small attaché case, and they went out together, witness accompanying Shaw as far as Szechuen Road.

VANISHED CASH.

He saw Shaw that night about 9 o'clock, and was told that the Chinese had given him $850 with which to try and obtain opium, but that he had unfortunately lost the money. Witness himself did not handle the money and had none of it. Shaw afterwards asked him if he would help to settle up with Woo, and witness agreed, and borrowed $200 from a compradore, giving it to Shaw to pay to Woo. The money was later repaid by Shaw. Two days later witness telephoned to Woo and asked if Shaw had returned part of the money, and the reply was that he had and that everything was all right.

His Worship—Do you know anything about opium, Lowry?

Defendant—No.

Do you think dealing in opium is a clean business?—No.

Then why did you introduce these people to Shaw?—Because the Russian lady was so urgent about the matter.

Do you know that by saying what you have you have placed Shaw in a very bad position in this court?—Yes.

Was that a friendly act?—No.

AN UNFORTUNATE GAME OF CARDS.

Shaw next gave evidence, saying that upon being asked by Woo to get some opium he promised to do so because he was pretty well known to the Customs and the ships, and Woo gave him about $800 for the purchase. After the interview, witness told Woo to remain upstairs for a time and let witness get away first, because it would look bad if he were seen leaving the house with a Chinese. Woo agreed and remained upstairs. Witness admitted that he played cards with the money and lost it, afterwards going to Woo and promising to pay back what he could and giving him a promissory note for $850 payable on December 22. Woo appeared to be perfectly satisfied. Witness repaid a certain amount, and there was an outstanding balance of $700.

After hearing addresses by counsel, his Worship said it seemed they had not had all the evidence they might have had. He would have liked to save seen the Chinese middleman and also the lady in question, but it was perhaps as well she kept out. Lowry had tried to get out of the net by implicating Shaw, but Shaw had been more frank and fair in his statement. He found both men guilty of entering into negotiations for the sale of opium, into which charge the second one of larceny was dovetailed and really provided more evidence of the actual transaction alleged in the first charge. However, there had been no evidence that either of the accused at any time dealt in opium, nothing to show that they were in negotiation with people who dealt in opium and no opium was actually produced. It seemed therefore to be a case in which he could consider the possibility of a fine. Accused would have to pay the maximum fine of $200 each, with the alternative of three months' imprisonment.

FOREIGNER'S DEAL IN REVOLVERS

Magistrate's Severe Comment on of a Very Dangerous Traffic in Shanghai

A young man named Noble Poignand appeared before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court on Wednesday, charged with entering into negotiations for the sale of arms, contrary to King's Regulations, at 21 Fearon Road on Tuesday.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, for the prosecution, said that accused negotiated for the sale of two revolvers and unfortunately for him he negotiated with a Chinese detective. He was arrested with a Japanese who would be tried in the Japanese court. Mr. Maitland observed that this was one of the worst offences a person could commit in China at the present time owing to the unfortunate condition of affairs, and as to results of such traffic he instanced the case of acting Chief-Constable Rebsamen, who was shot about a month ago. The supplying of arms to robbers and bandits was a more serious offence than that of dealing in opium.

Det. Sub.-Inspector Conduit gave evidence that at 11.45 on Tuesday morning, receiving certain information from a Japanese detective at Hongkew, he instructed a Chinese detective to go to 21 Fearon Road, a Japanese lodging house. Witness followed, and after waiting outside the house some little time saw the accused and a Japanese leave the house with the detective. Witness stopped them and on searching the Japanese found that he carried two pistols and 25 rounds of ammunition. He said he had gone into house to look at the electric lights. Witness asked Poignand to accompany him to the police station and there he said it was the first time he had done anything like this, adding that he had obtained the pistols from the house of a Japanese in Miller Road. This place was searched, but no revolvers were found on the premises.

CHINESE DETECTIVE'S WORK.

Chinese Detective Zee Pao-ling gave evidence of his visit to Fearon Road, in company with a Japanese informer. Accused, who was there with two Japanese, asked witness if he wanted to buy any revolvers and, on being answered in the affirmative, took two revolvers from his overcoat pocket. Witness mentioned that he wanted 12 pistols and 10 revolvers, and accused said he could get plenty more—2,000 if they were wanted. The price of the revolvers was to be $52 and $160 each. They left the house together and the accused were arrested.

In his defence, accused stated that a Japanese named Yoshimura called at his office and inquired if he knew where pistols could be obtained. Witness said he would see, and approached another Japanese named Kawano who gave him two pistols, which he took to Yoshimura at Fearon Road, handing them over to the Chinese detective. Poignand strongly denied that he said he knew where 2,000 pistols could be obtained. He had no idea where any such quantity was to be found, and had never touched the business before. He got nothing at all out of the present transaction, which he undertook simply to help Yoshimura, who was out of work.

His Worship—If he was out of work how was he going to pay for the pistols?

Accused—I cannot say. I did not ask what he was going to do with them, but understood they were to be sold to Chinese.

MRS. NOSKOFF NOT A PERJURER

Re-trial Denied in Fur Trading Case: Her Original Evidence Corroborated

Further reference was made to the notorious "Commandant of Urga," Col. Sipailov, who was described as "the darkest person in the [illegible] of Mongolian events" in a decision given by Judge Lobingier in the U. S. Court Thursday over-ruling the motion for re-trial in the case of the Fur & Wool Trading Co. (D. Biederman) v. Andersen, Meyer & Co. The Court originally found for plaintiffs in a claim for the accounting of the proceeds of a quantity of furs obtained by defendants from Sipailov. The motion for re-trial was submitted on the grounds of the alleged perjury of one of plaintiffs' principal witnesses.

Concerning the evidence of this witness (Mrs. Noskoff) the Judge held that the motion disclosed that plaintiffs knew, long before judgment was rendered, that Mrs. Noskoff was willing to change her testimony. Not having been availed of at that time, her additional testimony could not be regarded as "newly discovered" and was not strictly admissible. Plaintiff's counsel [illegible] that [illegible] and Mrs. Noskoff had again been heard. Her new testimony, he [illegible] was based on [illegible] to, that portion of her testimony most relied upon.

The motion contained the averment "that plaintiffs in fraud of defendants, persuaded said Anna Noskoff to testify falsely." The only evidence offered in support of this averment was the statement of Mrs. Noskoff that her testimony was in consequence of [illegible] letter from Raskin, plaintiffs Trustee [illegible], under date of November 9, 1921.

It would be observed that the passage quoted contains no suggestion that Mrs. Noskoff should testify falsely.

PROMISED TO BE HAGGED.

Her very first letter written on April 17, 1921, immediately after the occurrence, recited:—

"We were summoned to the Commander's Office several times during the day, whereon were promised to be hanged and, finally, were ordered to sell the goods of your firm."

Of course such a transaction was not a good deal and it would seem that Raskin was doing no more than protecting his firm's interests in bringing out that fact and the consequences of any other interpretation. His language might have been more diplomatic and discreet, but it did not amount to a threat.

As to payments of money by defendant to Mrs. Noskoff, there was to be found the true reason for such charges as her testimony as she did make. No evidence of [illegible] could be found, but the Court did find that the amount in dispute, which she testified Mr. Tien had paid [illegible] was not extortionate, was the money which she knew was given not only for the furs then purchased, but also at a time when he himself was disinterested.

None of the original findings were based upon Mrs. Noskoff's testimony alone. In every instance corroboration was looked for [illegible] none of it now as the case of the second hearing. But it was corroboration of her original testimony and not of its changes.

We [illegible] have found no [illegible] Sipailov, as he is called, acted on behalf of Noskoff and Mrs. Noskoff'," the Judge proceeds. "It would surely be a [illegible] that one who seizes another's property under threats of death acquires thereby authority to act on behalf of its custodian. If any fact is apparent [illegible] it is that whatever Noskoff and his wife did in this matter was done under the direct compulsion. The instance mentioned in the decision when Mrs. Noskoff was ordered by Colonel Sipailo to point out the goods' is only one. A mere suggestion from that source would have amounted to compulsion. For the notorious Colonel, whose real name seem to have been Sepailoff or Sepailov, was known to stop at nothing in enforcing his will."

ALLEGED IMITATION OF A TRADEMARK

China Soap & Candle Co.'s Case in Mixed Court Against A Chinese Firm

The alleged imitation of a trademark belonging to the China Soap & Candle Co., Ld. (represented by Mr. M. B. Brown) by a Chinese firm, the Ting Fong Soap Manufacturing Co. (represented by Mr. A. M. Preston), was the subject of an important hearing at the Mixed Court on Monday morning. Mr. C. E. Whitamore (British Assessor) and Mr. Lee Sieu-mei (Chinese Magistrate) occupied the Bench.

At the last hearing, the prosecution informed the Court that as there had been a considerable number of infringements of their business trademarks during the past years, they had found it necessary to institute criminal proceedings against defendants as other methods had proved to be ineffective. The seal bearing the imitation marks in this case was of a different quality to the soap which accused sought to imitate. It was much inferior. The result was that they (the complainants) had received many complaints from their agents in different sections of the country as to this and other imitations. While a recent case against a retailer was dismissed on the ground of insufficient evidence, the case in which the present defendants were charged was adjourned until yesterday.

THE CHINESE CRIMINAL CODE.

The full charge against defendants on Monday was that they manufactured and sold "a certain article namely soap, bearing [illegible] and Chinese characters namely Peh Tien in imitating and so closely resembling the device and Chinese characters namely Peh Gee used by complainants on their soap as to be calculated to deceive thereby injuring the business and credit of complainants contrary to articles 242 and 359 of the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code."

At Monday's hearing, the defence was proceeded with and the general manager stated that he himself had other business and put the business of his factory in the charge of a man named Dien. Part of the business consisted of manufacturing soap for customers who suggested the names for the soap and provided the dyes for marking.

Dien was called and stated that in this instance he had been approached by a broker named Ling, who asked him to make the cases of the Peh Tien soap and suggested the name. Witness as the case queried the character Tien, but had been assured that Peh Tien was a proper name and mark. Witness then made 140 cases and delivered them to the [illegible] who had been discharged. His people had been exceedingly [illegible] and there was no thought of imitating trademarks belonging to complainant or any body else. His company was one of the largest soap factories in Shanghai.

The Magistrate observed that there was no such character as "Tien" in the Chinese dictionary.

Mr Preston argued that there was, and the Assessor said there was none in "Giles' Dictionary."

An accountant of the defendant firm was called to prove that the profits of the transaction were very small.

DEFENDANTS' INTENTIONS.

Mr. Preston then argued that the small profit in itself showed [illegible] there was no [illegible] of fraud. The business of the company was to make soap and the fact that they had carried out an order for a customer was not at all unusual. There was no standard concerning trademarks by which accused could be guided, so that he could not say whether there was an infringement or not. If there was an official record or gazette, it would be different, but there was none. Counsel then proceeded to cite the case of the Evening Light Soap, in which the same company were defendants. In that case defendants had given an undertaking not to imitate complainant's trademarks. At that time defendants had applied to the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce for registration of the trademark, but the Ministry refused this on the ground that a Chinese company had already registered the name and mark. They did not know at that time that the trademark in that case had anything to do with complainants. Shortly afterwards, a suit had been instituted against them as a result of which they gave an undertaking to imitate the brand no more, it being stated that the mark had been registered with the Customs here. There was no record to guide defendants. submitted counsel, and he could not see how complainants' business and credit had been injured in view of the fact that it was an inferior soap and sold at an inferior price. On the whole, he said, one Chinese character differed from that of complainant.

Replying, Mr. Brown stated that the Shanghai District Magistrate had issued a proclamation forbidding the manufacture of the Peh Gee Soap by any firm other than complainants. The accused had been convicted once previously, in 1914, for the same offence. Counsel pressed for a heavy penalty, a term of imprisonment, instead of a fine, for one of the officers of the company.

Mr. Preston stated that the present manager had no knowledge of a conviction which did not occur in his time, but in the time of his ancestors.

The Court reserved their decision until Wednesday morning.

The Maximum Penalty

We have imposed the maximum penalty because we consider this to be a very gross case of fraudulent imitation and an infringement of the laws of trademark," said Mr. C. E. Whitamore (British Assessor) at the Mixed Court on Wednesday in fining Shen Ching-foong, manager of the Ting Feng Soap Factory $100 for infringing a trademark of the China Soap & Candle Co., Ld.

In the course of his judgment, the Assessor (who sat with Magistrate Li) said that the Court had considered the case very carefully and had come to the conclusion that, in view of the character of the case, under Article 243 of the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code, no conviction could be sustained. Under Article 289, however, the Court was satisfied that an offence had been committed and a conviction would be entered accordingly. The maximum fine under this Article, the Assessor said, was $100. A short term of imprisonment had been suggested by the prosecution, but with this the Court could not agree.

Mr. M. B Brown, who prosecuted, remarked that there were 23 cases of the imitation soap in Nantao which were seized and detained by the city police, and the Chinese authorities were not inclined to deliver them up to complainants. He considered a proper case for the soap to be surrendered and returned to complainants so that it could be melted down.

THE PAUL REGENDANZ AFFAIR

Question Raised of Mixed Court's Jurisdiction over Ships in Harbour

"In reading over the rules of the Mixed Court of 1869, I find that this Court has jurisdiction in the Treaty Port of Shanghai. This to my mind certainly includes vessels on the Huangpu in the harbour of Shanghai." This view was expressed by Mr. N. A. Allman (American Assessor) at the Mixed Court on Thursday, in connexion with the case arising from the fracas on board the str. Paul Regendanz on January 19. He added, "Although the complainants have left the jurisdiction of this Court, the accused admit that they took part in and intended the assault. They will be sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment from date of arrest."

At the outset of the case, Mr. A. S. Allan, who originally appeared for the prosecution on behalf of the captain and officers, said that, as his clients, the complainants, had left Shanghai and as he had no instructions to proceed with the case, he was not prepared to argue on the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. R. G. McDonald (who, with Mr. L. K. Kentwell, defended) stated that he understood that Dr. O. Fischer, who appeared for the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, wished to address the court on the jurisdiction question, and he (Mr. McDonald) would postpone his argument until Dr. Fischer had finished.

FOREIGN COMMISSIONER'S PROTEST.

Dr. Fischer, addressing the Court, stated that the case must be decided without any further action because the complainants had left the jurisdiction of the Court in spite of the fact that on February 1, the International Mixed Court issued an injunction against the steamer restraining her from leaving Shanghai. Nevertheless, counsel was instructed by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs to make certain remarks with reference to the jurisdiction in this case and to state that the Mixed Court was not competent, and never was, to try this action. It appeared from the charge sheet that there were four complainants, some of whom were Germans and one Norwegian. It appeared from the record that the warrants against accused were issued by the American authorities. The steamer was flying the flag of the Republic of Panama, which had no treaty rights in China and counsel was instructed that the United States authorities in China protected the interests of the Republic of Panama but that, in the opinion of counsel and according to a former case decided in this Court, did not give and could not now give the United States authorities the right to claim jurisdiction or the right for the American Assessor to hear the case in the Mixed Court. It was true, said counsel, that one of the complainants was a Norwegian but it appeared that the Norwegian Assessor only took an interest in the case at the third hearing whereas it was the duty of the Norwegian authorities, if they desired to claim jurisdiction in the case, to issue the warrant and sit in the case from the very beginning.

Mr. Allman remarked that the American Assessor sat in his capacity as Assessor when he issued the warrant, not because the United States authorities claimed jurisdiction in the case.

Dr. Fischer referred to the record of the case which showed that the captain accompanied Superintendent Woodfield, of the River Police, to the United States Consulate to make out the charge.

Superintendent Woodfield was called and corroborated this statement.

PROBLEM FOR CONSULAR BODY.

In delivering judgment, the Assessor made the remarks mentioned above, and informed Dr. Fischer that if the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs did not agree with this ruling, he had better take it up with the Consular Body as [illegible] was [illegible] been and not the Court. The accused in this case should have gone to the United States Consulate and got their wages at the very beginning or they should have gone to the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs to lay their grievances with him, but they could not take not law into their own hands. Of course, it had to be admitted that they were ignorant men. Anyhow the Commissioner could take the matter up with the Consular [illegible]

Dr. Fischer stated that that would be done, but so far this was the first decision of the Mixed Court in which such an opinion was expressed by an Assessor.

THE ACCUSED'S INTENTION.

Mr. McDonald:—In view complainants' departure, it obvious that the case must dismissed. This is greatly to regretted because if the case has been heard, I would venture to say that defendants have complete defence. I had a number of other witnesses and case has not been completed it had been heard in full, aspects of the case would have proved to be entirely different.

The Assessor—The accused have admitted that they intended the assault and that they carried iron bars for this purpose. admitted taking part assault.

Mr. McDonald—I beg to differ Accused have admitted nothing of the sort. They might have prepared for a fight with the new crew, they may have intended to intimidate them, but did not intend to assault foreign officers, and this charge with which they accused. We have a complete answer to that.

Superintendent Woodfield ed that he had received a bill for $40, hospital expenses for the wounded men, and as a matter of humanity he would like to know who would pay this. Would Mr. Allan? He counsel for complainant.

Mr. Allan—As counsel for complainants, I would like to get hold of the captain myself for my fees. (Laughter).

Mr. McDonald stated that he would be responsible for the hospital bill.

THE MAGISTRATE'S COMMENT.

Judgment was then entered by the Assessor as stated, but the decision of the Magistrate, translated, was as follows:—

In this case the complainants have left Shanghai. This, being the case should allow for its dismissal. However, as accused have admitted that they took part in the assault, we hereby order that they shall be sentenced to terms of imprisonment for periods of 21 days each, from date of arrest, which terms have already been served. With reference to the death of Hsia King-yung who died as the result of wounds inflicted on him by pistol shots by one of the complainants, an inquest has already been held. The defendants should therefore file suit against the said foreigner in his consular court. Apart from bringing this matter to the attention of the Chien-cha-sho (the Procurator's Office), they should also notify the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs.

A message from Reno (Nev.) states that two Chinese, sentenced to death in the District Court for the murder of a compatriot, will meet their fate in the lethal gas chamber. They are the first Chinese in America to suffer the extreme penalty by the new method.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS

To be Submitted to Free Vote of the House of Commons: Government Impartial

London, Feb. 7.

Reuter's Agency learns that the Imperial Conference resolutions will be moved in the House of Commons from the Government bench and submitted to a free vote.

The resolutions are regarded as very important, emanating from a body which the Government holds in the highest respect. Each will be explained by the Minister in charge. If there are points with which the Government does not entirely agree, it will explain its position. If the resolution involves extra taxation, the Treasury will give its view.

The procedure in Parliament of the matter will be exactly the same as if the Government itself were responsible.—Reuter.

PROTECTION DROPPED

But Conservatives Concentrating on Imperial Preference

London, Feb. 8.

It is understood that yesterday's meeting of the Unionist leaders convened by Mr. Stanley Baldwin, including the Earl of Balfour, the Earl of Birkenhead and Mr. Austen Chamberlain, resolved, in view of the verdict of the electorate, to eliminate the general protectionist policy from the Party's programme but to advocate a tariff to protect the particularly depressed industries which will prove a necessity to the satisfaction of the Board of the Board of Trade and also to maintain the principle of imperial preference within the limits laid down by the Imperial Conference. —Reuter.

UNIONIST POLITICAL GATHERING

Leadership and Party Policy Discussed: The Question of Imperial Preference

London, Feb. 11.

Over 500 members, including a considerable number of defeated candidates and 200 Peers, attended a meeting of the Unionist Party at the Hotel Cecil this afternoon to decide questions of leadership and the future policy of the party.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin, who was given a warm reception, briefly stated the Party's policy.

The Earl of Balfour moved, and Mr. J. F. P. Rawlinson seconded, a resolution of confidence in Mr. Baldwin as leader, which Mr. Austen Chamberlain supported. The resolution was unanimously carried.

Mr. Baldwin declared that the policy of a general tariff on imported goods must be dropped in favour of Imperial preference and extensions of the Safeguarding of Industries Act, whereby special assistance would be given to distressed industries which could prove to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that they required some form of protection.

An Emphatic Declaration.

Later.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin's speech at to-day's Unionist meeting outlining the future Conservative policy was warmly applauded, especially his emphatic declaration of his intention to stand fast and unhesitatingly to everything decided at the Imperial Conference, fighting if necessary to the end. The ex-Premier announced that he would confer with agricultural interests to devise a practical policy to assist the industry. He declared that the Conservatives' great enemies of the future would not be the Liberals, who were moribund, but Labour which was very much alive. "You are not going to beat Labour on a policy of tranquillity, negation or sitting still." Mr. Baldwin urged the party to examine in a modern light the number of pressing domestic problems and prepare a social policy ready for the next election.—Reuter.

"SECRET PACT" SQUIB

French Press Pleased with Mr. Macdonald's Attitude

Paris, Feb. 8.

With extraordinary unanimity the newspapers refer to the excellent impression created by the British Government's attitude in regard to the Lloyd George "interview." Even the "Echo de Paris" joins in the chorus. Satisfaction is expressed at Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's haste to justify his good faith toward France which M. Poincaré greatly appreciated. The most friendly sentiments are voiced as regards the Labour Cabinet.—Reuter.

A Wholesome Change.

London, Feb. 10.

In a speech at Burnley, where he has been adopted as the Labour candidate for the by-election, the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Mr. Arthur Henderson, referring to the correspondence between Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and M. Poincaré, expressed the opinion that already a wholesome change had begun to operate in Britain's relationship with France and that this change would find its full expression presently in a conference not only between Britain and France but, so far as the Government could influence it, all the countries in Europe and the United States, and that such a conference would make the most effective and satisfactory beginning in laying the foundation of a new international order founded on cooperation and goodwill.—Reuter.

THE NAVAL BASE AT SINGAPORE

Chain of Oil Reserves for an Oil-burning Fleet: The Value of the Battleship

London, Feb. 13.

Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery, the former First Lord of the Admiralty, lecturing on the naval defence of the Pacific at the Colonial Institute to-night, regretted that the Government had stopped the present work commitments at Singapore, but was glad to hear that the question was being carefully investigated and that no decision would be taken without consultation of the Dominions affected.

He claimed that the battleship would always remain the kernel of the great complex, comprising the fleets of the future. The British fleet would ultimately be entirely oil-burning, necessitating a chain of oil reserves, which was the great reason for developing Singapore.—Reuter.

NATIONALIST PARTY IN INDIA

Attempt to Force the Hands of Government

Delhi, Feb. 7.

Bombay, Feb. 8.

The first pronouncement of Mr. Gandhi's views since his release takes the form of a letter addressed to Mr. Mohamed Ali deploring the Hindu-Mohammedan dissensions and declaring that without unity of all communities all talk of Swaraj is idle. The only remedy for growing pauperism in the land is the spinning-wheel. Two years of solitude and hard-thinking in gaol have made him a firm believer in the efficacy of a constructive programme, to carry out which they need never resort to civil disobedience though his belief in the efficiency of that method is not weakened.

Mr. Gandhi concludes by urging his followers not to quarrel with the moderates, and adding that Englishmen, too, are friends. The struggle is against the system and is not against the Englishmen administering it.—Reuter.

Self-Government Impossible But Concession Foreshadowed

Delhi, Feb. 9.

Replying to a crowded Assembly on a motion in favour of full self-governing Dominion status for India and provincial autonomy, Sir Malcolm Hailey said that immediate granting of full responsibility was impossible, but the Government would undertake an official inquiry with a view to removing the difficulties revealed in the working of the Government of India Act.

The debate was adjourned.—Reuter.

Rejection of Convention to Prepare a Constitution

Delhi, Feb. 13.

The Legislative Assembly today rejected a resolution in favour of summoning a representative convention to prepare a Constitution and submit it to Parliament.

In the course of further debate Mr. Patel urged Indian control of the Army, but wanted British officers and troops to stay (laughter).

Colonel Gidney contended that it was nonsense to expect a fully responsible Government without a proper Army.

The Council of State passed an unofficial bill, already adopted by the Assembly, regulating the entry into and residence in India of persons domiciled in other British possessions. SEPARATISTS IN THE PALATINATE

Unpopular Movement Quelled by Public Demonstration in Hand-to-hand Fight

Cologne, Feb. 10.

With the Separatists' evacuation of the public buildings at Wiesbaden, Worms, Bingen and Alzey the Separatist movement has practically disappeared in south Rhineland except at Mainz and a few unimportant villages. The Separatists, attempting a coup at Bingen, were disowned by the French and ejected by the loyalists. The movement, however, has had a recrudescence in north Rhineland, especially at Duesseldorf, where Herr Matthes has started a new campaign in conjunction with Communists.—Reuter.

Berlin, Feb. 13.

It has never been doubted that the Separatists' days in the Palatinate are numbered, once the support hitherto accorded them is withdrawn, and the events at Pirmasens are regarded as warning the Separatists elsewhere to fade out of the limelight as quickly as possible.

The accounts of yesterday's affair depict most bloodthirsty scenes. The Separatists, armed with rifles and grenades and numering about 40, were barricaded in the building and refused the repeated demands of the attackers to come out. The crowds swelled to enormous dimensions, armed with all available weapons, like axes, sticks and knives. They were unable to break down the barricades, so set fire to the building with benzine. Forcing their way in, they engaged the Separatists in a hand-to-hand battle until the latter surrendered. Howls of execration greeted the exit of the Separatists. The maddened crowd brushed aside the guards and massacred the Separatists like dogs, including the leader, Herr Schwab, whose body was thrown into the flames. Thereafter followed a man-hunt for Separatists through the streets of Pirmasens. Several were found and shared the fate of their comrades.

The French troops remained perfectly neutral and it was not before five o'clock in the morning that French and Moroccan reinforcements arrived in motors and surrounded the burning building.

An affray between Separatists and the populace at Kaiserlautern to-day resulted in two persons being killed. The Separatists at Zweibruecken, hearing of the events at Pirmasens, hastily quitted the town.—Reuter.

It is reported that 14 separatists and three besiegers were killed and 20 besiegers wounded. It is stated that the separatists fired on and bombed a crowd which was attempting to storm the building, the latter set fire to the building, after spraying it with benzine with fire hoses.

The separatists ceased fire and pleaded for mercy but several were massacred as they emerged, including the leader, "Government Commissioner" Schwab. The French attitude was neutral.—Reuter.

FRENCH FINANCES

Paris, Feb. 4.

After a week of preliminary skirmishes between the Government and the Opposition, the Chamber of Deputies to-day embarked on a lively discussion of some hundred articles comprising the Government's financial proposals. The Opposition hotly opposed the first article, aiming at at least Frs. 1,000,000,000 reduction in administrative expenditure and authorizing the Government to modify statutes by decree. The Left deputies complained that the provision was unconstitutional and dictatorial and hinted at the danger of a dictatorship on the Italian and Spanish model.—Reuter.

FRANCE'S POLICY IN THE RUHR

Extensive Modification Urged: An International Loan and Neutralization

Paris, Feb. 12.

That French opinion with regard to the Ruhr policy is changing is the consensus of articles in the Opposition press, commenting on an article by M. Sauerwein in the "Matin" which is believed to be inspired. M. Sauerwein, after admitting that everything received by France has been swallowed up by military expenses, advocates extensive modification and even abandonment of the occupation of the Ruhr in exchange for a new system of guarantees, which would be placed in the hands of the inter-Allied Governments and not merely in the hands of the French and Belgian Governments. This indicates that France would expect full payment through an international loan and a neutralized Ruhr and Rhineland if it consents to an inter-Allied instead of a purely French and Belgian settlement.

The "Oeuvre" says that this is a return to commonsense and a programme which will point to realization of the Cannes Conference when M. Briand fell.—Reuter.

PERSIAN OILFIELDS

New York, Feb. 9.

The Minister says that, desirous of shaking off British and Russian economic domination, Persia opened negotiations with the Standard Oil Company in 1921, inviting exploitation of the northern provinces. The Anglo-Persian Oil Company, whose claims to the concessions have been proved null, succeeded in bluffing the Standard Oil Company, which then offered to enter the field on a 50/50 basis with the Anglo-Persian Oil Company. The Persian Government rejected the offer and the Standard Oil Company later changed their attitude and offered to take over the entire concession. The Sinclair Corporation had meanwhile made a favourable offer.

The letter adds that the terms of both the Sinclair and the Standard Oil companies were rejected because the royalties were considered inadequate.

The Persian Legislature then passed an oil law authorizing a grant to "a reputable and independent company of the United States." The law provided that the concessionaire must arrange a loan of least $10,000,000 to Persia through American banks. The law was submitted to the Standard Oil Company, which did not reply, but the Sinclair company made counter-proposals and an agreement was finally signed last year accepting the concessions on a basis closely following the law.

It now remains for the Persian Parliament, which is being convened next month, to ratify the agreement, without which the concessions are ineffective.—Reuter.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

THE RE-ASSEMBLING OF PARLIAMENT

A Bombardment of Questions: Prime Minister's Strong Speech: No Need For Nervousness: Restoration of Good Relations With France

London, Feb. 12.

The House of Commons re-assembled quietly, but the Ministers were soon bombarded with questions on domestic and foreign policy. The Conservatives were no keen on putting supplementary, controversial queries that only half the usual number of questions were disposed of in the first 40 minutes.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, who made his first Parliamentary appearance as Prime Minister, did not shed any new light on questions of foreign policy. He afterwards made a statement with regard to Ministerial salaries, declaring that he would not draw a salary as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Mr. J. R. Clynes, the Deputy Leader of the House, would draw £5,000, instead of £2,000, which was the Lord Privy Seal's usual emolument. Viscount Haldane, the Lord Chancellor, desired to receive £6,000 instead of the £10,000 to which he was entitled.

The Prime Minister said that he was not going to resign as a result of any snap division, but only if he were defeated on substantial issues or if a direct vote of no confidence, moved by responsible leaders of either of the other parties, were carried. He thanked the calm, sane businessmen, who had warned investors not to make fools of themselves owing to the advent of a Labour Government. He appealed to the country to keep steady.

Mr. Macdonald defended the order of the Minister of Health rescinding the order of Sir Alfred Mond imposing surcharges on the Poplar Board of Guardians in respect of excessive out-relief. He declared that Mr. John Wheatley's order was an insignificant mechanical operation and no indication that the Labour Government was going to encourage extravagance by any spending department.

Imperial Conference Resolutions.

The Government, Mr. Macdonald, continued, would submit all the Imperial and Economic Conference resolutions to the House. They would indicate their views regarding each and would provide the House with every item of information on the matter in the possession of the departments. Decision would be left to a free vote.

Mr. Macdonald hoped to have the report of the Imperial Wireless Committee by the end of the week and that it would be possible to settle the matter finally.

The Government would carry on the inheritance of the social measures, mentioned in the King's Speech. The Government were aiming at building £500 houses with an average rental of 9s. a week, including rates.

The country sooner or later had to become acquainted with the driving hand of Labour and it would be very glad that it had come sooner.

Referring to the apprehensions expressed by Sir Robert Horne on his return from America with regard to the Labour Government, the Prime Minister said that the sooner that sort of thing was proved sheer bosh, the better it would be for everybody concerned. He hoped that the experience the country and the Empire were going to have of Labour government would make it impossible for any such statements to be made in the future. The Government was not going to pursue a policy of tranquillity but a policy of confidence. He proposed to take the decision of the Commons with regard to the ratification of the Lausanne Treaty and also of the Treaty of Tannec.

The Unemployment Question.

With regard to unemployment, the Government would aim, firstly, at the restoration of trade, pending which there must be adequate maintenance of unemployed. The Government would speed up the trade facilities scheme and extend the period of operation of the export credits. An authoritative committee would be appointed to survey the national finances for the guidance of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The building trade would be guaranteed work over a term of years and he was confident that a working agreement would be reached with that trade. The Government would not have a tariff or bounties for agriculture but would adopt a system of loans or guarantees for agricultural cooperative enterprises and would re-establish the Agricultural Wages Board.

The Recognition of Russia.

The Prime Minister was sure that there would be a considerable impetus to trade as soon as the recognition of Russia was completed by economic acreements but we must not be too impatient to reap the harvest of the Opposition (ironical laughter). A complete statement of all the outstanding points between the two countries would be sent to Russia. One of the most important was cessation of anti-British propaganda, on which he would certainly insist. Before the end of the week M. Rakovsky, the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires in London, would be on his way to Moscow for final instructions with regard to the opening of negotiations.

Relations with France.

Relations with France had drifted under the Conservative Government so far that they could only have resulted in a fresh European war. He hoped that complete agreement would be reached in a few days with regard to the Palatinate and before the end of the year France and Britain should be whole-hearted cooperators with the other nations in establishing the conditions of a European settlement. Reparations was the first bar to a general settlement and, when this was reported on, it would be time to make another survey of all questions, including debts.

The Prime Minister paid a tribute to the hearty response of M. Poincaré to his approaches. "Our diplomacy," he added, "must be perfectly straight, absolutely frank and quite sympathic. It only asks for a similar response from the other side. France has nothing to fear from any policy we pursue and I am sure nothing will arise between us but goodwill, honest dealing and sincerity. We must consider the problems of reparations and the Ruhr from the point of view of France, Britain and Europe and must do everything to find a satisfactory agreement, above all remembering that time is running a tragic race against us."

With regard to Russia, Mr. Macdonald proposed to send to Moscow a complete statement of our cutstanding difficulties. The Soviet Government had agreed to appoint Russian members of an Anglo-Russian Commission, to which would be referred all details regarding debts and other questions.

The League of Nations.

In conclusion, the Prime Minister said that there must be an agreement on armaments, therefore he would do his utmost to increase the representative character and the authority of the League of Nations. Germany must enter the League and he hoped that Russia would enter. He was confident that America, as soon as she knew that the problem was being worked out from a new point of view with enthusiasm and idealism and without more expenditure on armaments or more European rivalry, would be ready to join.

Mr. Macdonald concluded by moving the adjournment. Mr. Stanley Baldwin and Mr. Asquith agreed, the former remarking that Mr. Macdonald's speech had been of surpassing interest. Commander Kenworthy, Independent Liberal Member for Hull, and Colonel John Ward, Independent Labour Member for Stoke, however, opposed adjournment.

Major Barnie, Liberal Member for Bootle, subsequently interrupted the debate by moving a private member's bill, which was negatived.

On the Government motion the House then adjourned.

Lord Haldane's Speech.

Later.

In the House of Lords, Viscount Haldane, the Lord High Chancellor, enlarged on Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's statement with regard to foreign affairs and dwelt at length on the importance of maintaining friendship between Britain and France. He declared that security was what the French in their hearts desired most. He did not wonder at it. The British Government wished France security almost as much as she wished it herself. The only difference was the difference of methods.

Viscount Haldane pointed out the impossibility of reducing armaments until a better method of security had been obtained by some sort of common mind among the European nations. He said that, if France would come with them into consideration of this other method of security, they would not only assure her an untroubled future, but would secure relief both for France and Britain from a very heavy burden.

Marquess Curzon replied banteringly. He stated that his apprehensions had been sensibly relieved by what he had heard from Viscount Haldane.—Reuter.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin's Speech on Foreign Affairs: Liberal Leader and Poplar

London, Feb. 13.

In the House of Commons today, supplementary questions poured in from all sides in connexion with a reply by Mr. C. G. Ammon, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, with regard to the future of the Singapore scheme. Mr. Ammon laid stress on the fact that the present Government had always contended that adequate reason had not been shown for the very large proposed expenditure, but he thought that it was only right to examine the case for the scheme before announcing a decision. This was being done and in the meantime fresh commitments would not be entered into. The effects of the recent terrible disaster in Japan which Commander Kenworthy said would put Japan out of the running for another decade was receiving attention in that connexion. Mr. Ammon added that £13,000 had been expended on the scheme up to January 20 and that signed commitment totalled another £34,000. Liabilities, the extent of which was at present unavailable, had also been incurred on work which was being carried out in respect of railways, roads and water. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty said that the Dominions would be consulted.

Our Continental Debtors.

Later.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the Opposition leader, resumed the debate in the House of Commons to-day. He trusted that the Government would very carefully consider the views of the Dominions on the Singapore base. He wished the Government well in the fresh negotiations with France. The Prime Minister believed that by sweet reasonableness we could bend Europe to our will, but sweet reasonableness might be carried to excess without reaping the rewards due to it (cheers). He asked whether the Government proposed to abandon the Safeguarding of Industries Act.

In Mr. Baldwin's opinion the Government would find it almost impossible to carry out its Russian policy. He asked what exactly was meant by the Soviet Union and with whom we were really going to make arrangements. All our continental debtors, he declared, were eagerly watching and hoping that we were going to surrender our claims against Russia, whereupon any hope of collecting our debts from other European countries would disappear. He emphasized the terrible risk to the world if Bolshevik propaganda in Asia ever bore fruit, and the bloodshed and misery which would result if anarchy were called into existence among the teeming millions of the East (Opposition cheers).

In conclusion, Mr. Baldwin said that he sympathized with the loftiness of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's speech, but he felt that a short term of office would prove that the world was too hard for the Prime Minister's idealism.

Liberal Leader and Poplar.

Mr. Asquith, who followed Mr. Baldwin, approved the recognition of Russia. He wished to know the Government's attitude with regard to the Safeguarding of Industries Act.

The Liberal leader then made reference to Poplar, saying that the Liberals regarded the matter as one of capital importance.

Referring to Mr. Wheatley's rescission of his predecessor's order which imposed surcharges on the Poplar Board of Guardians in respect of excessive out-relief, Mr. Asquith said in the plainest and most unequivocal terms that, unless the Government could see its way to reconsider the action of the Minister of Health, there was not the slightest chance of that administrative act receiving the countenance and approval of the House of Commons (loud Conservative and Liberal cheers).

The Labour Members constantly interrupted Mr. Asquith, who declared that the matter did not affect Poplar alone. The action of Mr. Wheatley, the Minister of Health, was discouraging and paralyzing to other distressed districts, which were manfully fulfilling their duty (Conservative and Liberal cheers). Mr. Asquith declared that the time had come to reform the chaotic London Government and to reconsider the basis of the Poor Law itself (Ministerial cheers).

Mr. J. R. Clynes, the Deputy Leader of the House, promised that an opportunity would be given later to discuss Poplar and kindred subjects of controversy. The fullest facts would be given to the House.

Russian Credits.

The speaker emphasized that the Prime Minister did not intend to treat Russia differently from other countries in the matter of credits. Replying to interruptions, he said that the internal conditions of Russia were beside the point. The Government wanted to arrange better trade relations, and the documents, already exchanged between Russia and ourselves, amply provided for the necessary security on the subject of propaganda.

Mr. Clynes doubted whether the Government could be expected to regard the Safeguarding of Industries Act as a means of relieving unemployment.

In conclusion, the Deputy Leader said that the Government hoped to enlist the support of the House in its attempts to deal with social needs. He declared that it was impossible for the Government to approach the question of a capital levy without national approval.

The House of Commons devoted the evening to what was virtually a debate on tariff reform on the motion of Mr. J. S. W. Milne, Conservative Member for Kidderminster, advocating the appointment of an expert committee to inquire into the most effective method of dealing with the problem of safeguarding industries. After characteristic arguments for and against Imperial preference, etc., the motion was rejected by 290 votes to 103.

The House then adjoured.

The "Times" and Singapore.

Feb. 14.

In an editorial article on Mr. C. G. Ammon's statement with regard to Singapore, the "Times" says that no reasonable objection to this course can be taken, but urges the necessity of conducting the examination in an open-minded spirit and not with the object of justifying a pre-conceived policy. The journal points out that the Dominions have already approved the scheme.

The Labour organ, the "Daily Herald," interprets the statement by Mr. C. G. Ammon, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, as meaning that it would be "very costly and dangerous" for the Singapore scheme to be dropped.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 13.

Official circles are most appreciative of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's cordial tone towards France and are convinced of his sincerity and determination to appreciate the French point of view. They are confident that the practical task of working out a solution of the various questions will be carried out in a spirit of mutual understandng and conciliation, based on the new cordial atmosphere.—Reuter.

THE RUSSIAN REPLY TO BRITAIN

Cordial Reception of Recognition: Readiness to Settle All Claims: Special Emphasis on Abstention from Propaganda

London, Feb. 9.

It is understood that the Russian reply to the British Note according recognition to the Soviet Government will be handed to the Foreign Office to-day and that it closely follows the lines of the recent resolution of the Second Congress of the Soviets, expressing satisfaction at Britain's recognition and declaring that cooperation between the people of Britain and Russia remains one of the first cares of the Soviet, which would make every effort to settle all disputed questions and misunderstandings and develop and consolidate economic relations.

Later.

The Russian Note is couched in diplomatic language. It expresses readiness to replace treaties which have been denounced or which have lost their juridical force in consequence of events during or after the war. The Soviet Government will therefore send plenipotentiaries to London, whose tasks will also include settlement of mutual outstanding claims and obligations as well as determination of means to restore Russia's credit in Britain.

The Soviet emphasizes that mutual confidence and non-interference in internal affairs remain the indispensable conditions for the development of friendly relations between Britain and Russia.

The Note intimates the appointment of M. Rakovsky as Chargé d'Affaires pending the appointment of an Ambassador.—Reuter.

ITALY'S TREATY WITH THE SOVIET

Far-reaching Commercial Bargain and Recognition

Rome, Feb. 3.

The Italo-Russian settlement is of a double character, having important commercial and diplomatic clauses, which means Italy's recognition of the Soviet Government. Immediately after ratification, which will probably be by decree, it is expected that the Government will nominate M. Jordansky as Ambassador to the Quirinal and Italy will probably make Marchese Paterno Ambassador to Moscow. M. Jordansky who has been in Rome since the death of M. Worowsky, has been the moving force on the Russian side of the negotiations.

The commercial part of the settlement will last for three years with special transit rates for Italian goods on Russian railways. Russia promises to supply hard grain for Southern Italian factories, while Italy allows the Soviet Government to take over property formerly owned by the Tsarist Government, including the former Russian Embassy. The agreement also provides for the trade with the Black Sea Ports being reserved for Italian ships. It also includes a clause stating that both countries will shortly revive the exchange of consular officers on pre-war conditions.

Regarding the restoration of the property of Italians in Russia, the Soviet Government are agreeable to restoration to the owners on condition that the owners agree to share their profits with the Soviet Government. The "World," however, learns that this aspect of the settlement has yet to be examined in detail. Italy's de jure recognition of the Soviet Government is embodied in the first clause of the agreement, which is followed by the Soviet's promise to abstain from political propaganda in Italy.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

Rome, Feb 7.

The Italo-Russian Treaty has been signed.

PLAGUE IN RUSSIA

Grave Outbreak on East Side

London, Feb. 9.

A serious outbreak of bubonic plague in East Russia is reported. The whole Government of Astrachan has been proclaimed as affected. Drastic conbative measures are proceeding. Ninety anti-plague detachments are working in Kirghiz province and six in Kalmuck province.—Reuter.

RUMOURS OF DISORDER IN RUSSIA

Riga, Feb. 9.

It is reported that insurgents under General Sicheff have formed a provisional government in the Blagovestchensk district of East Siberia. The Soviet Government accuses the Chinese of assisting them. Khiva was said to be surrounded by insurgents under Junaid Khan on January 26.—Reuter.

COMMUNISM BREAKING UP IN RUSSIA

Riga, Feb. 10.

It is reported from Moscow that at a meeting of the Communist Executive to-day M. Zinovieff said that it was imperative to follow M. Lenin's tactics. They must at all costs get closer to the peasantry even if force were necessary. He foreshadowed great cleansing operations and declared that the present arguments, if allowed, would continue to tend to destroy the Red Army and the State.

The Political Department passed a resolution ordering the provincial Communist branches to cease quarrelling and observe the strictest party discipline.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 11.

A Moscow despatch states that M. Rykoff, in his first public speech since he succeeded M. Lenin, indicated that he would carry out M. Lenin's foreign policy. It was not one of aggression, he declared, but so long as the international situation was disturbed by the aftermath of the Versailles Peace Treaty the Red Army must be maintained.

Unrest in Russian Army.

Feb. 11.

It is reported from Riga that travellers from Moscow report that the authorities ordered the disbandment of the famous Lett Regiment in Moscow owing to its mutinous actions. The regiment refused to be disbanded, but the Tartar Regiment overcame its resistance after a short fight.—Reuter.

Later.

The Federal troops are reported to have decisively defeated the rebels on Saturday in a battle lasting 11 hours at Ocatlan. Heavy casualties resulted on both sides, those of the Federal forces numbering 349.—Reuter's American Service.

Later.

The Federals' victory at Cootlan on Saturday is described as the worst reverse the rebels have ever suffered on the western front. The rebel casualties amounted to thousands. — Reuter's American Service.

SCHEMES FOR EMPIRE DEVELOPMENT

The Trade Facilities Act

London, Feb. 13.

In the course of a speech at Burnley, instancing the Government's determination to speed up the operations of the Trades Facilities Act and the scheme for export credits, Mr. Arthur Henderson, the Home Secretary, said that the Government had increased the amount guaranteed for trade facilities by £5,000,000. The Government had confirmed the late Government's decision for a loan for construction of the Kenya-Uganda Railway, half of which would be expended in Britain, while the Colonial Office was examining other large schemes for Empire development.—Reuter.

DUTCH NAVAL INCREASE

Government Set on Its Project Despite Former Defeat

Amsterdam, Feb. 9.

The Government's memorandum relative to the naval estimates for 1924 shows that in spite of rejection of its former measure the Government intends to introduce a new naval bill. It is not expected, however, that this will be dealt with by the current session as restoration of State finances has preference.

In the meantime the Government has submitted proposals to construct two flotilla vessels, two destroyers and one submarine mine-layer for the East Indies, and six reconnoitring aeroplanes for service in Holland.

HONDURAS REVOLUTION

U.S. Cruiser Sent to Protect American Citizens

Washington, Feb. 8.

The U.S. cruiser Rochester has proceeded to Honduras in response to an appeal from American residents there.—Reuter's American Service.

Note.—A revolutionary movement is developing in Honduras as a result of the expiration of the term of office of President Gutierrez. Senor Carias has proclaimed himself President and, although no hostilities are yet reported, the situation is threatening.—Reuter's American Service.

THE 48-HOUR WEEK

British Labour Ministry Urged to Enforce It

London, Feb. 8.

A deputation from the Trades Union Congress waited on the Minister of Labour to-day and urged immediate steps to give legislative effect to the Washington Convention with regard to the 48-hour week.

The deputation quoted statements in support of their contention that ratification of the Washington Convention in foreign countries had been largely help up by Britain's attitude and that there had therefore been a tendency to lengthen hours of labour.—Reuter.

A LOCK-OUT IN NORWAY

Employers' Strong Attitude

Christiania, Feb. 13.

The National Association of Employers has proclaimed a lock-out of 12,400 workmen from February 28. The lock-out applies to breweries, electro-chemical and chocolate works and printing presses, except newspaper offices.

Note.—This decision follows the action of the National Association of Trades Unions in calling a strike in sympathy with the dockers, who are on strike against a reduction of wages.—Reuter.

THE ANGLICAN AND ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES

London, Feb. 6

The Archbishop of Canterbury in a statement to Convocation at Westminster to-day emphasized that the Malines conversations, which have lasted for the last two years between unofficial representatives of the Anglican and Roman Catholic Churches with a view to exploring the outstanding barrier between the two Churches are not even within measurable distance of negotiations, but are conducting private conversations about the respective history and doctrines of the Churches of England and Rome.—Reuter.

FRENCH LOANS TO LITTLE ENTENTE STATES

London, Feb. 6.

It is understood that replies have been received from Rumania, Poland and Yugo-Slavia to the British inquiry as to how far the liens to which these countries are subject as succession States are likely to be affected by the loans recently concluded between them and France. All are very affable and alike maintain that the assets at the disposal of the respective Governments are more than adequate to guarantee both the older and the newer obligations.—Reuter.

DANISH PRINCE AND DOLLAR PRINCESS

New York, Feb. 9.

Dr. James Green has announced the engagement of his daughter, Eleanor, to Prince Viggo of Denmark, a nephew of Queen Alexandra. Prince Viggo is at present at Ottawa where on Monday he will attend the marriage of his brother, Prince Eric, to Miss Lois Booth.—Reuter's American Service.

Ottawa, Feb. 11.

Prince Waldemar of Denmark, Mr. Mackenzie King, the Canadian Prime Minister, and Lord Byng, the Governor-General, representing King George, were among the 400 guests at the wedding of Prince Eric of Denmark and Miss Lois Booth to-day.—Reuter's American Service.

GERMAN RAILWAYS

Paris, Feb. 9.

It is reported from Coblence that the British and French High Commissioners have reached an agreement with regard to the railways in the Cologne zone.

The agreement, it is stated, provides that the Cologne railways shall remain under German direction, but the Regie shall have the right to send trains through the zone.

French political circles are very pleased with the settlement, which is due to the friendly conciliation of both sides. The French emphasize that relations are in an excellent position for dealing with the paramount issues on which a general European settlement depends.—Reuter.

THE DOCKERS' DISPUTE

London, Feb. 8.

It is understood that the employers who conferred yesterday are prepared to meet the dockers halfway with regard to their demand for a two-shilling increase of wages.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 11.

The negotiations in the dockers' dispute have broken down, the dockers having rejected the offer of the employers to meet the wage demand half-way.

Later.

The Ministry of Labour has intervened in the dock dispute and has summoned a meeting of the parties to-morrow.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 13.

While the conference between the Minister of Labour, Mr. Thomas Shaw, and the representatives of dockers and employers adjourned late yesterday evening without reaching a definite conclusion, a much more hopeful spirit prevails. It is understood that the dockers will be offered an immediate increase of 1/- per day and a further 1/- per day later.—Reuter.

TUTANKHAMEN'S TOMB

Luxor, Feb. 11.

M. Lacau, the director of the Egyptian Department of Antiquities, arrived here to-day in anticipation of the raising to-morrow of the lid of Tutankhamen's sarcophagus. Egyptologists believe that several mummy-cases will be found enclosing the mummy.—Reuter

Luxor, Feb. 12.

The lid of the sarcophagus has been raised and Tutankhamen's mummy has been found. When the lid was raised it revealed the most splendid gilded mummy case ever found in Egypt. The case is three metres in length.

Later.

The opening of the mummy-case is such a formidable operation that there is no question of undertaking it this year.—Reuter.

Luxor, Feb. 13.

Owing to alleged discourtesy of the Public Works Department, Mr. Howard Carter has closed the tomb of Tutankhamen and abandoned the work.—Reuter.

Anti-Saloon League Leader Imprisoned

AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Mr. McAdoo's Self-Vindication

Washington, Feb. 8.

Mr. William Gibbs McAdoo formally announces that he has terminated his professional services with Mr. Doheny and that he desires to testify at the oil leases inquiry. He declares that his life is an open book. He has betrayed no trust and has not enriched himself at the expense of the country or of the people.

Later.

The oil lease committee will hear Mr. McAdoo at his own request to-morrow.

Feb. 9.

The oil lease committee has deferred the examination of Mr. McAdoo for a week.

Later.

Further sensational testimony to-day developed from the investigations of the senate committee into the oil leases, when Mr. Bonfils, the publisher of the "Denver Post," alleged that the Sinclair, Doheny and Standard Oil and allied companies had conspired to assure the award of the Teapot Dome oil lease to the Sinclair Corporation.—Reuter's American Service.

Sensational New Development

Washington, Feb. 11.

Mr. William G. McAdoo, who until recently was the most favoured candidate for Democratic nomination to the Presidency, gave evidence before the Senate investigation committee to-day. He stated that he did not know Mr. Doheny before he resigned the Secretaryship of the Treasury. Mr. Doheny employed him and his firm a year later in connexion with their Mexican difficulties. Mr. McAdoo had now terminated his services with Mr. Doheny. The ex-Secretary of the Treasury declared that he had learned to appreciate the importance of oil to railways and also to modern warfare.

A first-class scandal arising from allegations of corruption in connexion with the granting of Government concessions and oil leases in Wyoming has necessitated the appointment of a special Senatorial committee of investigation, which has summoned a number of eminent witnesses. The affair had a dramatic development to-day when the Senate passed a resolution demanding the resignation of Secretary of the Navy Denby.

Answering the Senate's resolution regarding Secretary of the Navy Denby, President Coolidge says that no official recognition can be given to the passage of a resolution relating the Senate's opinion concerning members of the Cabinet or other officials under Executive control.

President Coolidge adds that he does not propose to sacrifice an innocent man for his own welfare nor to retain in office any [illegible]. As soon as special counsel advise him regarding the validity of the oil leases he will take such action as seems essential for full protection of the public interest and he will not hesitate to request the resignation of any officials whose conduct in this matter warrants such a step.—Reuter's American Service.

A Fresh Sensation

Washington, Feb. 13.

The report that President Coolidge is preparing to withdraw the nomination of Mr. Silas H. Strawn as special Government counsel in connexion with the oil-fields affair has provoked a fresh sensation. It is declared that the nomination of Mr. Strawn's colleague, Senator Atlee Pomerene, will also probably be withdrawn. Opposition against both nominations developed in the morning papers, in which it was stated that the withdrawal of one of them was due to the fact that the nominee was connected with the directorates of two Standard Oil banks.—Reuter's American Government.

Mr. McAdoo's Candidature

Washington, Feb. 12.

Mr. McAdoo has requested the Democratic leaders of the various States who support his Presidential candidature, to meet in Chicago as soon as possible to determine whether his employment by the Doheny oil interests makes him unavailable as their nominee. "If they think I am unavailable," he added, "I shall gladly withdraw, but, if they think I should lead, I will do so with all my power."—Reuter's American Service.

STRIKE OF GERMAN SEAMEN ENDED

Negotiations to Begin: Men Repatriated

London, Feb. 8.

The strike of German seamen in British ports is off. Negotiations have been agreed on.

Feb. 9.

Six hundred German seamen, who have been on strike, have left London for Hamburg, repatriated by the Seamen's Union, an official of which explained that they were being repatriated in the interests of the shipping community and the world generally and also as a protest against the action of certain shipowners in chartering German bottoms on account of cheapness rather than using their own vessels, as a consequence of which hundreds of British seamen are unable to obtain work. Captain Tupper said that, if any men were penalized by the German ship-owners, strike action in Britain would be resumed and all German shipping in British ports would be completely boycotted.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 7.

The Chamber of Deputies to-day registered a vote of confidence in the Government by passing an important clause of the financial proposals by 333 votes to 205.—Reuter.

U. S. NAVAL BUDGET

Washington, Feb. 9.

The Appropriations Committee has approved the annual naval appropriation bill providing for an expenditure of $272,000,000, of which $30,000,000 will be available for the completion of over a score of vessels under construction.

The total is $4,500,000 less than the budget estimate and $23,000,000 less than that allotted to the Navy last year.

The bill also provides for an expenditure of $14,500,000 for aviation, which is slightly below that for last year.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICA AND WORLD POLITICS

Pres. Coolidge on Prospects of German Debt Solution and the U. S. Cooperating

New York, Feb. 12.

Addressing 2,000 diners on the occasion of Abraham Lincoln's Birthday banquet, President Coolidge promised immediate and unshrinking prosecution of all found guilty of complicity in the oil scandal. He defended the sale of arms to Mexico.

The President eulogized the British funding plan as an exhibition of the highest type of international honour.

Referring to the inquiry of the committees of experts, he declared that a prospect of a European settlement had arisen which held promise. Any settlement would no doubt call for European funding and financing, which would be a doubtful success without American participation.

The present time did not appear propitious for a further effort to limit armaments, but, should a European settlement be accomplished, something might be hoped for in that direction. The United States was ready to join the other Great Powers when yet there appeared a reasonable prospect of agreement in further limitation of competitive armaments.

The export of such capital as was not required for domestic business and which the American people felt could be profitably exported, having in view financial returns, the enlargement of American trade and the discharge of America's moral obligation of bearing her share of the burdens of the world, was entirely in accordance with the choice of their own independent judgment and ought to be encouraged.

President Coolidge expressed the opinion that there could be little criticism if the Government or private interests furnished other countries with military [illegible] for purposes of national defence and policing, but they wished to discourage rather than encourage such traffic.—Reuter's American Service.

THE THURINGIAN DIET

Berlin, Feb. 11.

The elections to the new Thuringian Diet have resulted in a crushing defeat for the Socialists, who have hitherto had a strong majority in the Diet, but are now replaced by the bourgeois bloc. From 80 to 90 per cent. of the electorate voted.

The result is symptomatic of the general swing towards the Right, which is occurring in Germany and will undoubtedly be repeated at the general elections to the Reichstag, probably in June.

The election to the Diet of the Free State of Luebeck has also converted the Socialist majority into a minority against the bourgeois parties.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Mr. John Fowler

New York, Dec. 31.

The "New York Times," in an obituary notice of Mr. John Fowler, a member of the United States diplomatic forces in China for many years, who died on December 29 as the result of a fall at Winchester, Mass., recalls his distinguished services in China during the Boxer uprising.

During his service as Consul at Chefoo, Mr. Fowler, at his own expense, chartered and operated two steamers, which rescued from the interior of Shantung several hundred foreigners whose lives had been imperilled by the Boxer uprising. President McKinley included praise of Mr. Fowler for this act in his message to Congress in 1900. In addition, the foreign community of Chefoo presented him with a silver punch bowl for the assistance rendered to them.

He was decorated by the Emperors of both Japan and China and received the thanks of the Russian, Japanese, Chinese, British and Canadian Governments for the aid which he had given to the citizens of those countries during the years of his Consulship in Chefoo. Mr. Fowler was appointed United States Consul at Ningpo in 1890, where he remained until 1896, when he took up the position of Consul at Chefoo, which he held until 1912.

At the time of his death Mr. Fowler was 65 years of age and for the last few years had been almost blind. His hearing failed him during his service in China as the result of severe strain during the trial of an American marine charged with murdering a Chinese girl in Shantung.—Reuter's American Service.

Lady Hewitt

London, Feb. 11.

The death is announced of Lady Hewitt, the widow of the late Sir Thomas Hewitt and the mother of Lieutenant-Commander H. G. Hewitt, who is on his way Home from Hongkong, as the result of a fall.—Reuter.

Professor Loeb

New York, Feb. 13.

The death is announced of the famous physiologist, Professor Jacques Loeb.

Professor Loeb had been head of the Department of Experimental Biology of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research since 1910, and received honours from nearly every European country. He was born in Germany in 1859 and studied medicine at the Universities of Berlin, Munich and Strasburg, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine from Strasburg University in 1884. He came to America in 1891, after having held posts at the University of Wurzburg, the University of Strasburg and at Naples. He became Professor of Physiology of the University of California in 1908. His outstanding published works are: The Heliotropism of Animals; Physical Morphology; Comparative Physiology of the Brain and Comparative Psychology; Studies in General Physiology: Dynamics of Living Matter: Artificial Parthenogenesis and Fertilization; the Organism as a Whole: and Forced Movements, Tropisms and Animal Conduct.—Reuter's American Service.

THEFT OF AEROPLANE PLANS

Paris, Feb. 9.

A French engineer, a Russian woman and a Russian foreman have been arrested in connexion with a theft of designs of new aeroplane engines at the Breguet aeroplane works.

Correspondence seized, it is stated, shows that those arrested had relations with persons abroad.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 10.

The Russian foreman, Mindouk, is an ex-officer of General Wrangel's army and the father of the arrested woman typist. He is said to belong to the Moscow police and was taken prisoner by the Bolsheviks. The new motor, the plans of which were stolen, took two years to construct, and it is claimed that it would have revolutionized aviation. It is stated that the police believe that the plans were intended for the Soviet Government, by whom they would have been communicated to Germany. It is rumoured that much more serious activities of a band of German and Russian spies have been discovered.—Reuter.

POLITICAL PLOT IN ECUADOR

Nipped in the Bud: Alleged Attempt to Assassinate the President

Ecuador, Jan. 12.

Advices from Quito say that the police of the capital have discovered a widely extended plot to assassinate the President of the Republic, Dr. Tomayo, and other political leaders.

Thirty-eight arrests, it is said, have been made including the staff of the newspaper "Humanido," which has suspended publication.

The instigator of the plot was frustrated in an attempt to take the life of Colonel Juan Manuel Lasso, a candidate for the Presidency. Other prominent persons marked for assassination, the reports assert, were General Leonidas Plaza and Senor Gonzalo Cordoba. The latter is the Presidential candidate of the Liberal faction in the National Assembly.—Reuter's American Service.

CONSERVATIVE HONOURS

Mr. Gershom Stewart Knighted

London, Feb. 8.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin's resignation honours list comprises one peerage, five Privy Councillorships, nine baronetcies and 16 knighthoods.

Sir John Butcher receives a barony. The K. B. E. is conferred upon Mr. Gershom Stewart for Colonial and Imperial services.

Note.—Sir John George Butcher, K.C., is Conservative Member for the City of York. He first entered the House of Commons in 1892 and remained a Member until 1906. Since 1910 he has again been the representative of York.

Mr. Gershom Stewart has been member for Wirral since 1910. He was enagged in business in Hongkong from 1882 to 1906, during which time he was a member of the Legislative Council and held other offices.—Reuter.

LANCASHIRE UNIONISTS

A Talk to Party Leaders

London, Feb. 10.

After a three-hour private conference at Manchester presided over by the Earl of Derby, which is reported to have been marked by some plain-speaking, the Council of the Lancashire Federation of the National Unionist Association adopted a resolution by an overwhelming majority against retaining the Protection policy in the party programme. The conference protested against the leaders embarking on a General Election without consulting the party organization throughout the country and urged the establishment of a method of liaison between the party leader, the central office and the local organization.—Reuter.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

Collar-bone Healing Nicely

London, Feb. 8.

The Prince of Wales's collar-bone was broken by a simple fracture, which has been surgically attended to by a London specialist. His Royal Highness is in bed at York House and is as comfortable as circumstances permit.

Later.

Sir Stanley Hewett, Surgeon Apothecary to the Prince of Wales, issued a bulletin this afternoon stating that there were no complications and that His Royal Highness was progressing favourably.

Feb. 9.

The Prince of Wales passed a good night and is progressing well.—Reuter.

GERMAN CURRENCY

An Important Plan

Berlin, Feb. 10.

The first committee of Allied experts, under the presidency of General Charles G. Dawes, has issued a communiqué stating that its labours have led to the unanimous adoption of a plan for the establishment of a German gold note bank which would exchange its own notes for the notes of the Rentenbank and of the Reichsbank. The President of the Reichsbank agrees in thinking that carrying out of the plan would prove a very important step towards the final stabilization of Germany's currency and the balancing of her budget. The committee will urge on the Reparations Commission the necessity of carrying out the plan with the utmost despatch.—Reuter.

GERMAN HOSTILITY TO LATE DR. WILSON

Likely to Prejudice German Loan in America

New York, Feb. 8.

The indignation aroused throughout the country by the neglect of the German Embassy to half-mast its flag in honour of ex-President Wilson is reflected in a statement in the "New York Tribune" that some financial circles are of opinion that the incident may seriously affect the prospects of any German loan in America.—Reuter's American Service.

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

The Tragedy of the Western Highlands: Becoming a Land of Aged Poor Through Emigration: Unemployment and Thrift: Glasgow Savings Bank's Record Year

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Dec. 31.

Great distress, as you are already aware, prevails in the Western Highlands and Islands of Scotland due to the almost total failure of the crops and the fishing; but it must be added that the present state and immediate future of the Highlands as a whole is very far from hopeful.

The people are declining in numbers year by year. The younger and more robust leave for other and more hospitable scenes. This year alone has witnessed the departure for the Colonies, principally Canada, of thousands of the best life of the straths and glens, with the result that to-day more than ever before the Highland population consists of a large proportion of the older folks. These struggle as best they can to eke out their existence from the harvest of both land and sea, and it is wonderful how comfortable and contented they make themselves in their lot. In normal seasons their life is tolerably happy. They have at least a sufficiency of life's necessities. Such luxuries as they enjoy come from their kith and kin who have wandered to the cities of the South or have crossed the seas, and it is to their credit that the sons and daughters of the North, where they are at all able, dutifully remember the old folks at home.

The present distress in the north-west, has been in existence since early in the present year, but nothing has been heard of it by the outside world owing to the sturdy independence of the Highland people and their reticence in complaint.

It is perhaps forgotten, or unknown, in many quarters that the war has told its sad tale in the Highlands more than in other parts of the land or Empire. No doubt the war has had its disastrous effects elsewhere, but in the Highlands specially so. Before 1914 the younger population of the north and west had been diminished by losses through emigration. But when the war came, practically every able-bodied man joined up for service with either the land or sea forces, and they did so mostly during the first three months of the fighting. From Lewis alone came almost its entire population of the able-bodied for service in the Navy and such Highland Territorial regiments as the Seaforths had their full strength over in France by November of 1914. Naturally, having been so early in the trenches and on the high seas and continuing their service right through the stress of war, the casualties among them was correspondingly large, and when the war was over it was found that but few of these fine fellows returned to the home scenes. This deprived the older folks of their main supports, leaving father and mother to carry on, with an outlook as sad as it was hopeless.

NO TOURISTS EITHER.

Added to this there came the great change in the social as well as the Economic condition which has completely revolutionized the life and work of the north. The old country families—regarded as "land fathers" in the Highlands—one by one felt the pinch of reduced incomes or, what meant the same thing, the increased cost of living and the growing burdens of taxation. The effect on the people generally, in the rural districts, was a blow from which they are still suffering. Along with this, the old-time wild sports of the north—deer-stalking and grouse-shooting, with angling—have been since 1918 but the ghost of their former selves. This has meant less employment for the large number of men who used to be engaged for two or more months in the year as ghillies; and so forth, at good pay. The tourist seasons in the Highlands have also been failures since 1914, with the obvious consequence to the very large number with suitable country cottages who depended for no little part of their livelihood on the streams of visitors from the south.

What of the future? At the moment the representatives of several Colonies are in the Highlands lecturing on the prospects offered under the British Flag abroad, and large numbers are leaving their northern homes for new life under other skies. That may be good for those other lands, but it bodes ill for the Scottish Highlands and Islands—and for our industrial centres at home which hitherto have reaped the benefit of the infusion of Highland blood among the city population.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND THRIFT.

There was published recently a table showing the number of persons out of every 10,000 of population who were in receipt of poor-law relief in the chief industrial centres of Great Britain. For Scotland the figure was 887; but while in Edinburgh it was only 446, in Glasgow it was 1243, a proportion exceeded only in Paisley and Greenock, where the figure was 1,304, the highest in the United Kingdom. Those figures give some idea of the extent to which the Clyde area has been affected by the trade depression of the past two and a half years.

Conditions throughout England have been bad enough; but in Glasgow they have been three times as bad. There would have been little occasion for surprise, therefore, if the cumulative effects of Glasgow's passage through the worst period of trade depression experienced by any British industrial area in modern times, had been reflected in a serious decline in the deposits of the Glasgow Savings Bank, an institution whose depositors are mainly of the working class. But during the past year the amount deposited had exceeded the amount paid out by over £300,000, which balance, along with accrued interest added to the accounts brought up the total deposits to the record figure of £20,183,208.

The bank has proved a sheet-anchor for many decent people who, but for the encouragement it had given to their instincts of thrift and independence, might have found themselves in desperate straits. The kind of people who have built up a bank balance are not the kind who go finally "under" and yield to the demoralising influences that are, unfortunately, affecting a certain proportion of the unemployed. This satisfactory record in thrift is repeated in Edinburgh, and indeed in every place in Scotland where a savings bank has been instituted.

EYESIGHT, GOLF AND BILLIARDS.

A discussion has been going on in west of Scotland newspapers on "muscle and sport," and this recalls a theory voiced by a gentleman some years ago. He was very keen upon golf; he read and studied everything connected with the game, and at last he came to the conclusion that he could never become a scratch or first-class player. He possessed everything he was told was necessary to become such, but he discovered for himself that he lacked the one thing essential, and that was what he called "equal" or "true" eyesight.

In his search for perfection also he discovered that among his friends ability at golf was always equal to ability at billiards. The one thing common to these two games is eyesight, and on investigation among his circle and club members he found that a person's proficiency at each of these games depended almost entirely on their possession of equal or true eyesight. He asserted that very few people have true eyesight, and that their ability at golf and billiards depended entirely on the difference between the strength of one's eyes. His theory was that only a player with equal eyesight could ever be a first-class player, as the others, with unequal vision, were seeing things at a false angle, more or less, and therefore were incapable of keeping a true line.

GOLFER'S PARADISE.

If the North Berwick people go on with that proposed new course at Fidra it may be the proud claim of that part of East Lothian around Gullane and North Berwick to assert that it is possessed of greater golfing facilities than any other corresponding area in the world. The whole district is simply a network of golf links and even North Ayrshire from Bogside to Prestwick, with its numerous progeny, must take a back seat to it in point of numbers of courses.

WHO WANTS THE "FLOATER"?

I cannot find among Scottish golfing professionals very much support for the idea of J. H. Taylor to adopt a "floater" or other light ball. In a talk with Arthur Butchart and Tom Fernie, our present and past champions, both announced themselves as vigorous opponents to such a step. The view of these players is that the interests of the mass of players, not the professionals, are to be consulted. It is they who have made the game what it is, and their enjoyment of it must be encroached upon by fads for champions.

"WANGLE" COMES TO STAY.

The Oxford dictionary might neglect a word that has been in illicit but current use for some time, but when one of almost Prime Ministerial rank utters that word a seal is set upon it. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has just conferred recognition upon the verb "to wangle," in a speech he delivered at his native town of Lossiemouth, and in a sentence which has caused quite a nice little seven days' squabble. Why should anyone object to its use? It is an excellent word signifying, if one may be permitted a definition, to adjust matters by the use of ingenious and unconventional expedients for the purpose of achieving a desired end. Thus, when one's motor cycle goes wrong, one wangles it by methods which the motor engineers would scarcely approve. One wangles a perfectly preposterous call at bridge by a piece of bluff. One gets a day off from duty by wangling. But the field of illustration is infinite, as all ex-Service men will admit.

PREMIERS OF HIGHLAND BLOOD.

A North Country Tory says there is only one consolation in the prospect of a Socialist Government—the Premier will be a Mac. It may be added that if Mr. Ramsay Macdonald is called upon to take office he will succeed another member of the clan, for maternally Mr. Baldwin is of the Macdonalds. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was entitled to wear a great West Country tartan, and Mr. Gladstone had a Robertson strain in him. The Earl of Rosebery is descended from the Argyle Campbells, though somewhat remotely.

BRITISH RAILWAY'S NOVEL POSTER SCHEME

Stations Captured by Revolutionaries in Colour and Design: Smoke Writing on Night Skies: Roadside Signs Removed by Famous Firm

From Our Labour Correspondent.

Manchester, Dec. 30.

The recently published news that 12 Royal Academicians and five Associates of the Royal Academy have been commissioned by the London, Midland, and Scottish Railway, to design posters for their line, has created no little interest in Great Britain. The scheme dates from last autumn when the railway company commissioned Mr. Norman Wilkinson, the celebrated painter of marine subjects and the inventor of naval camouflage, to design three posters for them. Mr. Wilkinson had previously designed several very successful posters and took great interest in the art. He suggested to the railway authorities that it was time a definite poster policy was adopted. They took up the idea with great enthusiasm and asked him to organize it.

He at once approached Mr. Frank Brangwyn, Mr. G. Clausen, Mr. D. Y. Cameron, Mr. M. Griffenhagen, Mr. George Henry, Sir David Murray, Mr. Julius Olsson, Sir Bertram Mackennal, Sir William Orpen, Mr. Augustus John, and several other world famous artists, and commissioned each to do a poster. The railway company indicated the subject or place they wished to be represented and the artist was then given a free hand in its interpretation. Many of the designs are already completed. Mr. George Henry has done Edinburgh; Sir David Murray, Conway Castle; Mr. Cameron, a Highlands poster; and Sir William Orpen a driver and fireman on a modern locomotive.

THE FUTURIST'S CHANCE.

Britishers who have been abroad for many years may think that this announcement indicates something like a revolution in railway poster art. From 10 to 20 years ago the average railway poster was a very stodgy affair. It was either a muddy reproduction of a poor water colour painting, or a trite composition representing some seaside resort blessed with an impossibly blue sea. The one or two exceptions only emphasized the dull commonness of the majority. Since the war all that has been changed. A galaxy of brilliant young artists have awoke to the fact that the super-rich are more interested in motor cars than art; that the buyers for the provincial art galleries usually play for safety; and that the publications where new work stands a chance of reproduction have a very limited clientèle. The poster is practically the only outlet for them, for poster buyers are as keen on new ideas as other picture buyers are conservative. The outcome of this enterprise has already turned our railway stations into miniature art galleries for revolutionaries in colour and design. Ten years ago Austrian, French, and German posters could be detected at a glance, as their designers had mastered the fact that poster designing was an art in itself. Nowadays many continental efforts are quite drab looking in comparison to the home made article. Not a few of these riots in colour lack point, inspiration, and beauty, but on the whole they are an immense improvement on the hack of the past.

It is probable that the delightful series of posters for the Underground Railway, that began to appear about 12 years ago, encouraged the great railway companies to develop this phase of their activities. Many public buildings and private individuals have gone to considerable trouble and expense to obtain copies of these posters. Series of them, with all advertising matter trimmed away, and suitably framed, are to be seen in many of our newer public libraries, where their decorative effect is much admired.

A WELCOME REPENTANCE.

Art critics and lithographers are curious to see what the Royal Academicians will make of their new medium. Many of them have never designed a poster before and should bring an entirely fresh outlook to it. If they merely paint a picture in their usual manner and expect the printer to reproduce a facsimile of it everyone will be disappointed and the art of the poster will receive a considerable set-back.

A week after the announcement of this renewed interest in poster art the famous Shell Mex. Ltd., distributors of "Shell" motor spirit, decided to remove the whole of their roadside advertising signs in Great Britain. This decision has given more delight to lovers of the English countryside than the publicity scheme of the London Midland and Scottish Railway has to art lovers. The directors of "Shell" in announcing their welcome decision state that they have been much impressed with the evidences of dislike for this kind of advertising and they hope and expect their competitors to follow their example. Everyone who has seen their glaring enamelled iron signs staring over the hedgerows or marring the green beauty of the wayside pastures will echo that hope. It is curious how the motor car that unlocked the beauty of the English countryside for so many thousands of people served also to spoil the charms it revealed.

Against these happy improvements in the amenities of Great Britain (for everyone who has been stranded for a hour or two at one of our railway junctions will realize what a boon a collection of clever posters are) there must be debited some new proposals to make an advertising use of the skies. Aeroplanes are to manœuvre at night above the streets with illuminated puffs of Somebody's Soap and Somebody-else's Meat Extract. It is reported that the Government looks with particular favour on this idea in the hope that it will provide experience for aeroplanists in night flying. For ourselves we must confess that our sympathies are with those aesthetes who declare that their only escape at present from the coruscating electrical vulgarities of the shopping streets is to look upwards at the "star sown vault of heaven." It is a pity that this relief is likely to be denied them in the future. Some consolation is to be drawn from the brief period of popularity of smoke writing in the sky. When the first aeroplane scrawled "Daily Mail" in black smoke across the empyrean there were many prophets who foretold legions of imitators, but the idea has completely died out.

A ROUND-THE-WORLD AIR FLIGHT

Washington, Jan. 12.

The Army Air Service Board considering the round-the-world flight decided to-day that the attempt would be made "on or about April 1 next," and would start from Seattle.

"The around the world flight," said a statement issued by the Board, "is expected to leave Seattle on or about April 1 next, when it will proceed upward along the coast of Alaska en route to the Aleutian Islands. It is expected that each of the four Douglas world cruisers, the planes selected for the flight, will have six changes of motors before the circumnavigation of the globe by air is finally concluded."

Lieut. Clayton L. Bissel, advance officer of the first division of the flight, will be sent to Attu Island, Aleutian group, to investigate airway and landing facilities. He will leave here on January 12.

The flight is divided into six divisions, the second extending from Attu Island to Nagasaki, the third ending at Calcutta, the fourth at Constantinople, the fifth at Hull and the sixth at Washington.

Lieuts. La Claire Schulze and Leslie Arnold, two of the army aviators who have been chosen to take part in the attempt to fly round the world next spring, have gone into training preparatory to the trip at Langley Field, Va. They will go through an intensive course of preparation under the direction of Major F. L. Martin.—Reuter's American Service.

ASTRONOMICAL RESEARCH

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 10.

Another universe of stars has been discovered and measured. Photographs made at the Harvard Observatory show that a faint and nameless luminous haze in the sky in the constellation of Sagittarius, the Archer, is another universe like ours, although perhaps smaller. Formal announcement of this will shortly be made in the bulletin of the Harvard Observatory by Dr. Harlow Shapely, director.—Reuter's American Service.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

LABOUR AND NATIONAL PROBLEMS

Moral Welfare in China Squadron: Big Profits from Persian Oil Investments: The Question of Empire Defence: Redistribution of British Fleet

London, Feb. 14.

In the House of Commons today, replying to Viscountess Astor, Conservative Member for Plymouth (Sutton), Mr. C. G. Ammon, Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, stated that the prevalence of venereal diseases in the China Squadron was matter was unfair to the Anglo-Persian Company, the British Government had no intention whatsoever of reconsidering its decision.—Reuter.

Problems of Defence.

London, Feb. 14.

The House of Commons to-day ernment's declaration of policy. A division was not challenged.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the Prime Minister, declared that the Committee for Imperial Defence was exploring the whole problem of defence in a much wider sense than hitherto, not merely from the point of view of the strength of the Army, Navy and Air Force, but from the point of view of civil, foreign and international policy. He said that the Government would not remain in office for five minutes after a division of the House had deprived it of a sense of duty.

The Liberal Member for North Lambeth, Mr. F. Briant, gave notice of a resolution condemning the action of the Minister of Health in cancelling the Poplar order and remitting any likely surcharge under it.—Reuter.

Malta, Feb. 14.

It is understood that the redistribution of the Fleet, which is now taking place, practically amounts to reversing the positions of the Atlantic and Mediterranean Fleets in commission. Dispositions have already been made or are impending, including the accepted certainty that the 1st Light Cruiser Squadron will be despatched to the Mediterranean at the conclusion of the Empire cruise.—Reuter.

Persian Oilfields Profits.

London, Feb. 14.

In the House of Commons today, replying to three questions with regard to the Government's decision not to sell its holding in the Anglo-Persian Oil Company, Mr. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that the Burma Oil Company had apparently been prepared to pay between 75 and 80s. for shares. This would represent a profit of nearly 6s. on the original price and about a sovereign on the current market price on 5,000,000 shares.

The Government after full investigation was satisfied that it would not have been in the public interest to part with the shares to a syndicate. Also, in particular, naval interests for which the original investment in the independent oil company had been made, would have been seriously prejudiced.

Mr. Snowden added that, as the existence of doubt in the would largely undo the work of the Washington Conference, which has so greatly improved our relations with Japan." As a substitute for the proposals, Mr. Hughes suggested that Japan should be placed on the same basis as other nations. Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION

GERMAN SEPARATISTS AND COMMUNISTS

Berlin, Feb. 14.

Everything is quiet at Pirmasens. Two Separatists and one civilian have died as a result of wounds, and the total death-roll is 31 Separatists and nine civilians.

A Communist demonstration took place in Stettin yesterday evening. Communists fired on the police from houses, wounding one. The police returned the fire, killing one Communist and wounding seven.

Events similar to those at Pirmasens occurred at Badduerkheim in the Palatinate. The Separatists refused to evacuate the town and a crowd stormed their headquarters, killing six. French gendarmes intervened and dispersed the crowd. A curfew has been proclaimed.—Reuter.

Allied Intervention.

London, Feb. 14.

As the result of further communications between Britain and France, an agreement has been reached on the Palatinate question. A commission will shortly be despatched to the Palatinate, composed of British, French and Belgian officials, to advise the Bavarian Local Council regarding the carrying on of the administration pending the establishment of a new, permanent administration. The chief task at present seems to be arming the police and disarming the population.—Reuter.

Further Casualty List.

Berlin, Feb. 15.

The latest casualty figures at Pirmasens are 15 Separatists and 13 civilians killed and 15 Separatists and 15 civilians wounded. Seven persons were slightly wounded. Seven persons were slightly wounded at Badduehkheim.—Reuter.

FRANCE'S POLICY IN THE RUHR

No Indication of Any Change at Present: Adherence to Irreducible Minimum

Paris, Feb. 14.

That a change in the French policy in the Ruhr is not so imminent as is believed by the Opposition press appears in an article by "Pertinax" in the "Echo de Paris," declaring that the idea of a volteface on the part of M. Poincaré is purely imaginary, asserting that France adheres to her irreducible minimum in the Ruhr and doubting greatly whether Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and M. Poincaré will reach an understanding.

It is noteworthy that even supporters of the "Matin's" suggestion, like the "Ere Nouvelle," emphasize that if France is prepared to abandon her economic system in the Ruhr and Rhineland, she will maintain her military control. The "Ere Nouvelle" forecasts the possibility of a commercial treaty between France and Germany. The "Matin" is believed to have been inspired by M. Millerand and the "Echo de Paris" by M. Poincaré.—Reuter.

AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Further Developments

Washington, Feb. 14.

Developments in the oil case are ensuing with sensational rapidity. A startling statement by the banker, Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip, yesterday, alleging an excessive price paid to President Harding in connexion with the sale of his newspaper, the "Marion Star," shortly before his death, has aroused much resentment and Mr. Vanderlip has been subpœnaed to testify before the investigating committee.—Reuter's American Service.

Later.

The Senate Oil Committee to-day decided to inform President Coolidge that Messrs. Strawn and Pomerene were unacceptable as special Government Counsel. President Coolidge consequently withdrew Mr. Strawn's nomination, but not Mr. Pomerene's as he considered that no evidence disqualifying him had been produced.—Reuter's American Service.

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Jan. 9.

After sightseeing in dockland, where they inspected the huge bonded stores and cold storage warehouses of the Port of London Authority, Mr. Chang Chien, Jr., and his colleagues of the Chinese Industrial Mission, who were recently in London were shown over the world's greatest power-house in Lot's Road, Chelsea, where Underground officials escorted them through the various departments. Nearly an hour was spent there and then the visitors were taken to Earl's Court Station to see working the great electric signal cabin.

"It is astonishing," ejaculated Mr. Chang Chien as he and his fellow-countrymen watched the signalman passing trains along the route. Suddenly the attention of the delegation was attracted by the great illuminated diagram of the section of the line controlled by the particular cabin. Slowly patches of red moved along the maze of lines representing the rails.

"What is that?" gasped one member. "Look, the red patch moves." It was explained that the red patch represented a train approaching the station, and a second red patch moving in the opposite direction another train.

"Accidents are, humanly speaking, impossible with this system" said Mr. Evan Evans, assistant superintendent of the Underground, who entered into the technicalities of the diagram.

"It is all so wonderful" said Mr. Chang Chien. "We have seen the Paris Underground and its power-house, and we were very much impressed, but I think that we have been even more impressed by the system here.

"All is so clean, so smooth-working, so scientific. In the London power-house there is no rushing about, no excitement among the workmen. Each seems to have his task and know exactly how to do it. We have no electric underground in my country, but if ever we do have one the London Underground system will be our model. It is so scientific, so fascinating."

Interviewed in the visit to the docks, Mr. Chang Chien said; "On our return we will present a report on the whole range of industrial activities in the countries which we have visited. We wish to bring China into touch with the economic conditions of the world. We were much impressed by the fine port facilities, especially the internal arrangement of the ware houses and the quick handling of the merchandise. This is the first visit of myself and most of my staff to London, and we were greatly impressed on our way to and from the docks by the well-kept streets and office buildings.

WONDERFUL LONDON.

Over and above all, it is the majestic size of London that strikes us; and though I know New York and other great ports, I have never seen anything that conveyed such an impression of might, of vast trade, of speed in handing it, of variety and intelligence in the devices for the business, as I did at the London docks. The Royal Victoria, the Royal Albert, the George V, and the other docks we visited have opened our eyes, and we shall convey as much in our reports. London people must be proud of their docks."

"They don't go to their docks or the Tower" he was told.

'Ah, well' said Dr. Chu, "As I said, "Englishmen can often tell me of the wonders of China, but I shall go to the Tower. I have already made a tour of the parks. I saw them in the sunshine, and really they are an extraordinary possession for a huge commercial city. There are so many of them—such a chain of them they pleased me more than I can say: and I think that visitors coming to London for the first time, as we have done, must compliment London on its almost incredible cleanliness."

"In China now," continued the speaker, "we have most things that you have here, but on a smaller scale. There are motor-buses, not flocking through streets as do yours, but employed on long-distance services from town to town. Our wireless has not yet reached the pitch of broadcasting to private houses with receiving sets of their own. The underground system of railway has yet to be introduced."

When votes for women and female representation in Parliament were mentioned, the High Commissioner said gravely:

"I think that to admit women to Parliament is a reasonable step in political evolution. Personally, I do not see why there should attach to the designation "woman" any sex distinction which should be any handicap in the case of an individual intellectually qualified."

WANTED TO SEE A FOG.

So far as the internal condition of China is concerned, M. Chien thinks it is only a question now of unification under the Republic for the country to go ahead in remarkable fashion. "Our natural resources are rich and varied" he said, "We are studying how to adopt western methods. While on this mission, too, we have in mind the machinery which may be required. China has very great possibilities."

"We don't find the weather at all uncomfortable, but we shall be disappointed if there is no fog. We have read of fogs. We have had them described to us. But fog is not something in which imagination can take the place of experience" Dr. Chu laughed—"and it is unseeable anywhere else—unseeable even in the mind's eye. We want to meet it."

ENTERTAINED BY LONDON CHAMBER.

The luncheon to the Commission given by the London Chamber of Commerce was very successful. Mr. R. L. Barclay, of Barclay's Bank, presided, and the guests included Mr. F. Anderson, of the China Association; Sir John Jordan; Mr. David Landale and Sir Newton Stabb. Mr. Barclay welcomed the guests briefly, as did Mr. Anderson in a somewhat lengthy speech. Mr. Chien replied as follows:—

"I come here with more than a sense of pleasure and honour. I have in addition a feeling of fraternal warmth. It is on account of my realization that I come to speak on behalf of, and represent, the organized industrial and commercial interests of China, as embodied in the Chinese National Chamber of Commerce. I bring from it a message of felicitation and goodwill to the London Chamber of Commerce, and an expression of their genuine desire to promote the furtherance of economic relations of the two regions. Judging by the glowing reception accorded me and by the remarks of your President, I am certain that the message and the sentiment will be sympathetically received.

Since I came to London a few days ago I have witnessed daily confirmations of the spirit of cordial and generous hospitality for which the English people is justly praised, and have visited the foremost public and private enterprises which are at once inspiring and instructive. To come to London is certainly nothing short of receiving inspirations of commercial achievements and of world economic solidarity. One would, indeed, be in want of imagination and of powers of observation, if one fails to carry away lessons of value in leaving London.

THE DESERT AND THE SOWN

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, on Sunday Evening January 6

Deserts are fascinating places. They are almost as interesting as cities. Instead of being full of emptiness, it almost looks as if they were more furnished with great things than cities. The only three religions in the world, that have any future are, what may be called, desert religions. Judaism, Christianity and Mohammedanism, for Christianity sprang out of Jewry. Colonel Sykes, who has travelled in deserts more than most men, not natives of deserts, says that monotheism could not have originated anywhere else than in the desert. And his reason is, that the view in the desert, wherever you look, is a Unity, suggests unity; sky and land, level horizon and sky blending are one. No wonder India has "gods many," because nature has been so prolific in growing countless species of plants and animals; so the mind is drawn to multiplicity of gods. But the desert is one. One sees only it and the sky; they seem one plane.

I have taken the title of this sermon from that of a wonderful book by Miss Lowthian Bell, the daughter of a great Scottish ironmaster. She made a journey on the east side of Jordan, all by herself; a thing that no woman would have done 50 years ago, to trust herself alone among those wild people. What will woman do next? It was a wonderful journey. It appears that remains of Roman civilization are far more numerous on the east than on the west side of Jordan. Good houses, theatres, temples show how rich and populous the land was in Roman times. The Turks and other invaders have seen to it, that it will be hundreds of years yet, before it is as it was 2,000 years ago. And it is all because the desert has been allowed to have its way.

THE NEVER-ENDING STRUGGLE.

Suggestive of great thoughts and faiths as the desert has been, it is a terrible thing, she shows. She says, that in that region there are now little patches of cultivation here and there, where the soil is a little kindlier; an acre or two of wheat or barley; sometimes a few more. And these patches of cultivated land are called "The Sown," in contradistinction to the barren desert surrounding them, where nothing grows. It is pathetic to see these little islands of struggling crops in a vast area of sandy desert. For the little patches of wheat are in danger all the time. The wind lifts the sand and blows it over these poor little struggling bits of arable land. The desert is always trying to swallow up the "Sown"; and if the farmer neglects to look well after his little crops of wheat or barley the desert sand will encroach on it until bit by bit, the "Sown" disappears altogether. This will account for the condition of the Eastern side of the Jordan river. Once there was a large population to watch the land, that was sown; to fight the encroaching sand of the desert. It is a case of subtle and persistent encroachment. And when the population was swept away in the terrible wars that marked the Mohammedan conquest, the desert swallowed up the "Sown," all but little patches.

DESERT PROBLEMS.

There is another interesting book about deserts, that teaches the same fact but on a larger scale. This is Professor Gregory's "Dead Heart of Australia." Professor Gregory is a great geologist. He was sent out to Australia some few years ago to see if anything could be done to mitigate the dryness of the Lake Eyre region of Australia. This region is a "lake" on the map, but it is really a desert. It lies low, a good deal of it below the sea-level. The idea was to find out whether a canal could be dug from the sea to turn it into a real lake, this desert area. But Professor Gregory found, that evaporation is so terrific in this region, that 96 inches of water in depth disappears in a year. That is, that if you had a lake 96 inches deep, and no rain fell on it, the air would suck it all up in a year, whereas in England evaporation is only 16 inches a year: And he propounds the idea that there are two belts of aridity round the earth, in about latitudes 40, North and South. In the North there is the Gobi Desert and the great American desert, similarly one in the southern hemisphere. And he believes, that these desert belts are slowly but surely encroaching on the richer and more watered lands to the north and south of them.

It looks like it. It is hard to understand why the Chinese settled first in the north of China, if the climate was as dry then as it is now. Far later than that, there is historic evidence, that the climate was not as dry and desert as at present. The explorations of Sir Aurel Stein, sent out by the Indian Government, have revealed the existence of large populations and cities 1,500 years ago, to the west of the Gobi, where now there is naught but dry sand. Even Chinese scrolls of silk have been found dry but legible after being in the sand 1,500 years. Even when Marco Polo crossed Asia to China it was not as arid as now. These belts of dryness have spread themselves. The desert has encroached on "The Sown." And it looks as if the dried up area was extending. Whence the dry seasons, that bring famine in the north of China, as in 1920? The desert creeps on and on, its sands choking and burying green crops, unless it is watched and cleared off again, and the poor struggling wheat and barley given a chance.

THE NEW YEAR MESSAGE.

This is New Year Sunday. One tries to have a message, which may be of use to us all the year. It is hard to find one that is not trite by reason of oft repetition. But here I think, we have one, that we may all, with profit, keep in mind as the months go circling round, carrying us on to the time when we have to give an account of our lives to the Giver of it, an audit, that we might well keep in mind more than we do.

What then is the "Sown," and what the desert in general? "The Sown" is the whole mysterious but real inner side of things in us; the unseen, the spiritual, the moral; the things that endure; that man so often tries to forget, but cannot. The "spirit of man is the candle of the Lord"; there is that in us, that is of the divine image. There is the yearning for the Infinite, man's dissatisfaction with things that perish with time; "the things that are not seen are eternal"; they are "The Sown"; The little flame of faith in God in all of us is "The Sown": The christian, the religious life in us, that redeems us, slight as it is, from being merely superior animals, is "The Sown"; the Church of the Living God throughout all the world, struggling to keep alight the flame of spiritual life in the world, is "The Sown": All, who believe, that "man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," who have a divine ideal for their life, not to be their own but God's, who are "a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, to show forth the praises of Him, who called them out of darkness into His marvellous light" are the Sown; indeed, God has always had patches of the "Sown" in the world, in all nations; those whom Peter describes "in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him."

THE ENCROACHING ELEMENT.

And the Desert? Everything that encroaches on the divine idea of life, that we have been considering: Everything, that deadens the heart towards God, that scars the conscience; that blinds the vision of eternal things; that hardens one's better feelings; that corrupts the imagination; that beates down our sense of right and wrong; that coarsens the soul; that makes us content with the present, with the pleasure and satisfaction of the moment, as against the christian idea, that our Lord makes so plain, that "man's life consisteth not in the things that he hath," but in God "and every word that proceedeth out of the month of God." The New Testament calls all this "The world"; John calls it "The lust of the flesh, the pride of life, and the pride of the eye." We sum it up as "The world, the flesh, and the devil." All the passions of the flesh, which some men idealize; the dislike of restraint; the material view of life, whether gross or refined; all these are the "Desert." And they nibble and nibble at the life of the spirit in any one of us. They encroach like the sand on the little patch of religious life in us, both in the church and in christian civilization. Our Lord might well tell us to "watch and pray lest we enter into temptation." Isaiah is evidently surprised, that the desert shall blossom as the rose. That indeed is the wonder of wonders, for the desert is so persistent, so aggressive, so subtle in its advances, on the "Sown."

First, notice how true this is of every man and woman in his or her personal life. For some reason or other, God has so ordained, that you can keep nothing worth keeping without care and attention to it. And that is true of our religious and moral life. The desert gains on all the "good instructions," the good examples we have had set us, the ideals of christian living, that in our best moments we have set for ourselves.

PRICE OF LIBERTY.

The "apples of Sodom hang over the garden wall," we are told by a great authority; we may pass them a few times, but then we have a bite at one. "The price of liberty is perpetual vigilance" is an oftquoted, but true saying. The desert farmer can never relax his watch, if he is to have a crop. And it is so in life. The desert encroaches on our private prayers till we gabble only a few words before tumbling, half-asleep into bed, and then drop them altogether, and then wonder, like Lord Morley, how "his old Methodism had faded away." The desert encroaches on our devotions; we come to let "any old thing" take their place, music, social engagements, the country and so on. But men like Isaiah and Paul, and all the saints hold their commanding place in the veneration of the world, not because they listened to violins and danced, but because they "thirsted for God, the living God," for the Christ the "Bread of God."

Anything can be turned to desert sand, if it takes the place of the real things, faith, prayer, reverence, love to God. We do not often think of that, but it is the fact, that far more souls are lost from letting things good in themselves, good in their place, become "the be-all and the end-all" of our life than from love of wicked things. The religious life of even the best christians is only a patch of cultivation in a desert. Let us see to it this year, that we watch encroachments on the little we have.

A DEAD SET.

This is true also of all that we mean by the christian idea of life. There is a dead set against it, in all kinds of subtle forms, from the open contempt of that German philosopher, Nietzsche, who did so much to bring on the war, and who called christianity a slave religion, because of Christ's championing the poor and neglected, to the more refined haters of it. There is a set against its supernaturalism. But Christianity is supernatural or nothing. At Atami where I used to go on holiday, there was a hot spring that gushed up with tremendous volume once a day. You might as well say that that immense volume of superheated water had been boiled in a villager's kettle as that Christianity is "natural," in the sense, that it is just man's effort to find God, and not as it is, God's effort to find and save man. It is the gracious breaking-in of divine power, in a divine Saviour and a divine Spirit into the killing round of the natural. There is a dead-set against this. Don't let the desert sand rob you of this glorious faith, that in Christ a strong hand has been stretched out from heaven to save us: we are not left to be everlastingly stretching up helpless hands to a God, who never gives a sign.

Then, I might show at great length, that there is a dead-set against the christian idea of the moral life. Dr. Watkinson truly says, "The significance of Christ is wholly moral." He "came to make us good" as says Dr. Newman. What then are we to say about this quotation, that Dr. Watkinson gives from a prominent writer on the naturalistic side? "The Ten Commandments are a very crude code of morals for modern civilization." There is a good deal of this kind of desert encroachment in the popular literature of the day. Don't let yourselves be overwhelmed by sand like this. We still need these hoary old commandments, to keep the patch of faith and divinity alive in us.

CHINESE EDUCATION IN SHANGHAI

Does It Need Recasting?

From a Correspondent

With the opening of another school year in Shanghai a few words on education may not be out of place. In the opinion of not a few the whole educational system in Shanghai would benefit by being remodelled. New methods in local schools would check the present phenomenon of some of our best pupils scurrying off to other centres where greater facilities of learning are offered and more modern methods employed. Why should not Shanghai be sufficient in itself? It is distressing to see the departure of promising pupils to Hongkong, Europe and America when the credit of their education might well be preserved for Shanghai. Lack of system appears to blame, and a carefully selected educational board, including representatives of the various branches of study, might do much towards re-organizing and advancing the standard of work in the Settlement.

The youth of this city is not wanting in ability in his particular sphere. As a mathematician he may claim a foremost position, as a linguist he may not be so brilliant. Yet as a capable all-round business man he is no way behind his "brother in arms."

There never was a time in which the prospects of commercial education were brighter than they are now. The testimony of the commercial instructors proves this. Their confidence, which might be attributed to a sort of interested optimism, is abundantly justified by the growth in the number of entries in the commercial classes and the enthusiasm of the pupils. The old apathy has long ago been conquered and the distrust which most Chinese instinctively feel towards new movements has given way to keen and active support; and if the cause of commercial education is in any danger, the peril lies rather in the possibility of overdoing it than in any likelihood of a lack of hearty and sustained assistance.

THE TEACHER'S TIME WASTED.

However, the quality of the material that finds its way into the class-rooms is not always what could be desired. Too much of the teacher's time has to be devoted to the strengthening of weaknesses that ought not to exist in the elementary classes. Yet the raw material does get shaped into something creditable, and teacher and pupil are alike better for the strain and the effort that has achieved that result. The very success of the commercial education movement may prove injurious in the long run if it should lead to a general feeling that all is as it should be and that there is no room for reform and improvement. All is not as it should be. There are grave problems in connexion with the Course System that have yet to be faced. The development of the whole commercial education movement itself will raise question that only a few have yet obviously foreseen.

What places are such elementary subjects as handwriting, arithmetic and English composition to take in any distinctively commercial scheme of training? Shall we frankly recognize that one of the first and most important of the tasks before us is to strengthen the foundations in these subjects which, after all, lie at the base of all effective commercial training? Half the failures in shorthand are due to the want of knowledge of English. The common every-day deficiencies of which commercial teachers and business men complain are weaknesses as to quite elementary matters. What constitutes a sentence, what a paragraph, how and in what way a paragraph should be commenced, when capital letters should be brought into use, how the ordinary punctuation marks should be utilized, these are all rudimentary points on which the commercial school teacher and the office manager have a right to expect that youths from even the elementary schools shall be well informed. Too often they prove to be hopelessly ill-informed.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES.

Whatever may have been the shortcomings of the Chinese in the past in regard to the study of foreign languages, there is overwhelming evidence at the present time of a widespread desire to be able to communicate with men and women of other nationalities in their own speech. Examination statistics bear corroborative testimony to the rapid growth in the number of Chinese students of foreign languages, and examiners' reports record fairly favourable results. Commerce is international. Somehow or other the language difficulty has to be overcome. Every encouragement should, therefore, be offered to those who intend to become clerks to acquire one or more of the great commercial languages of the Continent. There is ample room for liberal and generous encouragement, for the stimulation of the young to work hard till the highest possible stage of linguistic proficiency is acquired.

Employers might in increasing numbers offer special remuneration to those able to use another language in their clerical work. The advantages of an acquaintance with a foreign language are numerous. To understand a language completely is to understand something of the people who speak it; and more of that understanding the commercial world can acquire, the better for commerce generally and for the individual worker in particular.

HEEL-TAPS;

"You can tell a girl's character from her shoes, especially the heels."—A Doctor in a Daily Paper.

By their feet, my dear Boy, ye shall know 'em,
Though her beauty allure and cajole,
And her mind be as pure as a poem,
She may not be sound in her sole!
I implore, by the stars up above you,
That you note what her instep reveals,
Although I'm aware that in love you
Are head over heels!

If she walks with a "brogue,"—
Gracious Heavens!
'Tis a sign she will talk by the yard;
If her shoes are at sixes and sevens,
She'll make a dispiriting pard;
Should she tread on flat feet, 'tis conclusive
The lady won't show what she feels,
But her thoughts will be just as elusive
As slippery eels!

So keep in your mind these mementoes,
Or else the result may be grave;
It is plain if she turns up her ten toes,
She can't know the way to behave
You can't be too careful in choosing;
Look well at each foot as she kneels:
Then there won't be much risk of you losing
Your head over heels!

OUR CANADIAN LETTER

Canada's Permanent Emigration Commissioner in China: Mr. Featherstone's Appointment Confirmed

From Our Own Correspondent.

Vancouver, Jan. 17.

Official confirmation has reached here of earlier advices to the effect that Canada is to have a permanent immigration representative in China, Mr. J. E. Featherstone, the appointee, was formerly secretary to the Hon. Charles Murphy, Minister of Immigration and Colonization for the Canadian Government. The duty of Mr. Featherstone will not be to induce Chinese to come to Canada. Instead, he will check up at ports of departure, the credentials of Chinese applicants for admission to the Dominion.

The Hon. J. D. MacLean, Minister of Education and Public Health for British Columbia, reports a startling increase in the number of Oriental pupils attending the public schools of this province. There are now no less than 2,784 Oriental children in British Columbia schools, 1,346 being Chinese, 1,422 Japanese and 16 Hindus.

OPIUM SMUGGLER CAUGHT.

When an employee of a Canadian Pacific liner is lean one day and stout the next he is an object of suspicion on the part of Canadian Customs officials. A. Worsfold, second electrician of the R.M.S. Empress of Australia, was arrested late on last Saturday night as he left the ship on its arrival here from China and Japan. Worsfold, who lives near here, is a married man with a family. He joined the ship in England just after the British government took it over from Germany. As the electrician who is a particularly thin man, was walking down the gangway, customs men noticed his increased avoirdupois. They followed him along the dock and arrested him. He was immediately searched. Under his buttoned-up coat he was wearing a specially made vest, studded with pockets just the size of tins in which opium is customarily packed, it is alleged. Also on his person was a ticket with the name of J. D. Lee, 466 Union Street, Vancouver. This was believed by Customs officers to be a distributing depôt, as the ticket also bore a signature which was taken as an indication that one delivery had been made. The house was searched but no drugs were found. Several other addresses are now being investigated.

CHINESE SEAMAN IMPLICATED.

On information developing out of the arrest of Worsfold the Customs officials raided the Chinese quarters on the vessel and found a small quantity of drugs; but also got sufficient evidence to warrant the arrest of Lew Sing, No 1 fitter, on a charge of importing drugs, and Lun Kong, engineers' mess boy, on a charge of distributing drugs. Both Chinese have been on the ship more than a year. According to the police, Worsfold while being conveyed in a patrol wagon to the city gaol, is alleged to have stated that he was paid $60 by Chinese on the boat to smuggle the narcotics ashore. When the case came up in court yesterday, Worsfold, who gave a queer explanation as to how he came to have 20 tins of opium concealed in his belt, was found guilty, and is awaiting sentence. According to Worsfold's story to the magistrate the No. 1 fitter came to him and asked him to take a parcel ashore. "I understood it was Chinese joss, or gods, for the new year celebration in February," said the prisoner. "Thinking I would do him a good turn, and as he promised me $60 for it, I never thought any more about it, but said I would do so. Then the No. 1 cabin boy, I think it was another boy anyway, brought me the parcel. I put it on without looking to see what there was and walked ashore. Worsfold said he was to deliver the stuff to an address in Union Street. The magistrate refused to believe the story. The case of Lew Sing was dismissed. That of Lun Kong was adjourned.

CAPT. ROBINSON'S CRUISE.

Captain Samuel Robinson, R.N.R., the well-known Canadian Pacific skipper who has recently been made a Commander of the Order of the British Empire in recognition of the valuable work done by him in relief at the time of the great earthquake in Yokohama, was recently transferred from the Empress of Australia to the Empress of Canada which today reached Panama in the course of her world cruise. Over a thousand persons were assembled on the dock to bid the liner Godspeed on her journey. The fine ship looked spic and span in her new coat of paint as she moved away from the dock to the sound of cheers. Among the leading company officials who are making the trip are the Vice-President, Mr. Grant Hall, and Mr. Charles Murphy, general manager for western lines in Canada.

RICH INDIAN WORLD-TOURIST.

Among recent arrivals here from the Orient was Sir Jerhangir Kothari, O.B.E., of Karachi, India, who is making his seventh trip round the world. A millionaire many times over, during the war he gave a war donation of $2,000,000 to the British Government.

FIRST WHITE ALASKAN.

Guy Colwell, who is credited with being the first white child born in the Kodiak region of Alaska, died recently in Hongkong, according to word received here. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Colwell, reside at Oakland, (Cal.). A few years ago the late Mr. Colwell resigned a position with the U. S. Air Mail Service to take charge of an aeropane factory in China.

THE LATE MISS BATE.

Relatives here have been advised of the death in China of Miss Vivien Bate, a native daughter of British Columbia. For several years before leaving Vancouver for Shanghai to visit her sister she was practising her profession as a nurse. According to a letter received by her father, Councillor Thomas E. Bate, Miss Bate had suffered from heart weakness caused by shock after the death of her sister, Miss Evelyn Bate, who died from drowning.

Belonging, through both sides of the family, to two of the oldest and most highly respected pioneer families in British Columbia, news of her passing was received with sorrow in many homes in this province. She was a grandaughter of Mr. Mark Bate, for many years Mayor of Nanaimo, Vancouver Island, and Senator Planta, one of the British Columbia representatives in the Canadian Parliament at Ottawa, is a family connexion. During the war Miss Bate was keenly disappointed at being unable to reach France, although for some time she served as a war nurse at a depôt.

BIG NATIONAL DISASTERS

A League of Nations Insurance Plan

Big catastrophes, such as those which lately overtook the people of Japan and Central America, have led many people to wonder if some system of international insurance could not be organized to meet the contingency. The League of Nations is the obvious body to organise such a scheme, and it is interesting to notice that the League is well on the way with a scheme.

For some time past a proposal of Senator Ciraolo, President of the Italian Red Cross, has been before the League, for the formation of an International Federation for the relief of people overtaken by disaster. An outline of the scheme has just been circulated to all the States member of the League for their comments. It would provide for an international relief fund, which would be contributed by the States members in an agreed quota, the size of which would be determined by their political, geographic, economic, and financial positions.

MURDER AS A NATIONAL RECREATION

Ugly Figures from the North-West Frontier

Public interest in Great Britain as well as in India is, unfortunately, too frequently focussed on the North-West Frontier of India by reason of the atrocious crimes committed against Europeans.

Some idea of the conditions which prevail in the "dangerous areas," and the difficulties which the police find in bringing the offenders to justice, is afforded by the report on Police Administration in the North-West Province for 1922, which has just been published. Mr. Adam, Superintendent of Police, Peshawar, is quoted as maintaining that "the general attitude appears to be that crime or lawlessness is an issue between the Government and bad characters, in which the general public has no responsibility."

The Inspector-General of Police (Mr. Cocks), who is responsible for the compilation of the report, asserts that only the death penalty cures murder—a comment directed at the fact that the death penalty is inflicted in only a minority of the cases sent for trial.

The state of the general atmosphere which prevails in regard to the free use of lethal weapons—which, of course, most of the natives carry—creates that spirit of lawlessness which leads to the killing of Europeans; and, in analysing this atmosphere, statistics prove an alarming rise in crime. Of the murders committed in the Province in the year under review, 172 were due to relations between the sexes, 261 to blood feuds, and 63 to land disputes. Sir John Maffey, having examined the statistics of crime for the years 1910 to 1922, remarks that, taking reported cases, the figures show at a glance that while under certain heads crime has remained fairly constant, murders, after showing little variation until 1918, went up at a bound from 349 in 1918 to 563 in 1919, 651 in 1920, and 710 in 1921. In 1922 the reported cases totalled 608 but the "true cases" are returned at 733, so that the figures of reported cases, though illustrating the course of crime, do not provide an exact indication of the position in any particular year.

Sir John Maffey also points out that owing to the passion for revenge one murder leads to another, and there is thus a tendency towards an increase of murders in geometrical progression. The inference is that, in the case of the murder of Europeans, if those who commit the crime are caught and hanged, the relatives will carry on what they imagine to be a "blood feud"—"Observer."

THE LEWIS GUN TO BE REPLACED

London, Jan. 4.

The British Army, according to the "Star," is abandoning the Lewis gun, which figured so prominently in the World War, for the Browning gun, an American invention.

The new weapon is more easily carried, and, as it weighs only 15 lb., it can be fired either from the shoulder or from the hip. Its magazine holds 40 service cartridges, which can be fired in 2½ sec. and replaced with a new batch in 2 sec.

Another advantage is that a rifleman can use it at pleasure as an ordinary gun or a machine gun. If he sees one enemy he can fire a single shot, and, if he thus flushes a detachment, he can let the other 39 go one after another.

The Browning guns will be issued as the Lewis guns wear out and are returned to the stores.—Reuter's American Service.

DINOSAUR EGGS ON SALE

New York, Jan. 7.

The American Museum of Natural History, which has a world corner on the dinosaur egg market, decided to-day to sell to the highest bidder, for not less than $5,000, one of the 25 fossilized eggs of the Protoceratops Andrews, uncarthed in Mongolia last July by Prof. Roy Chapman Andrews, curator-in-chief of the division of exploration and research.

Proceeds of the sale said Professor Andrews, would be devoted to the $250,000 fund with which, this summer, he hopes to lead an expedition into the Gobi desert, 1,000 miles from Pek'ng, in search of remains of primitive man as he was from 500,000 to 2,000,000 years ago.—Reuter's American Service.

PRO REGE NOSTRO

What have I done for you,
England, my England?
What is there I would not do,
England my own?
With your glorious eyes austere,
As the Lord were walking near,
Whispering terrible things and dear,
As the song on your bugles blown, England—
Round the world on your bugles blown!

Where shall the watchful sun,
England, my England,
Match the master-work you've done,
England, my own?
When shall he rejoice agen
Such a breed of mighty men
As come forward, one to ten,
To the song on your bugles blown, England—
Down the years on your bugles blown?

Ever the faith endures,
England, my England:—
"Take and break us: we are yours,
England, my own!
Life is good, and joy runs high
Between English earth and sky:
Death is death; but we shall die
To the song on your bugles blown, England—
To the stars on your bugles blown!"

Mother of ships whose might,
England, my England,
Is the fierce old Sea's delight,
England, my own,
Chosen daughter of the Lord,
Spouse-in-chief of the ancient sword,
There's the menace of the Word
In the song on your bugles blown, England—
Out of heaven on your bugles blown!

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY.

A MAH JONG LYRIC

A great many English newspapers employ some whimsical lord who tries with varying success to recapture the inimitable spirit of a W. S. Gilbert or a C. S. Calverley. One of these men, Mr. Gordon Phillips of the "Manchester Guardian," frequently writes some really clever verse, of which the following stanzas Mah Jong are typical. Mr. Phillips assumes the pen-name 'Lucio.'

I propose to take as subject of my song
The prospective growth and triumph of Mah Jong
(In which plan I am supported
By the fact—which can't be thwarted—
There are several well-assorted Rhymes in 'ong')

Do they play it to the beating of a gong,
This inviting, this exciting game, Mah Jong?
At the subsequent collation
Do the guests (with imprecation)
Use a chopstick for their ration
Or a prong?

Does light conversation help the game along?
Does one chatter as one joins the earnest throng?
Or sit silent as a mummy?
Does it need a fourth or dummy?
Is it aught like 'nap' or 'rummy,'
This Mah Jong?

Are there 'local rules,' I wonder, in Mah Jong?
Is the code the same from Bolivar to Bhong?
Though the thought a trifle strange is
It may be the custom changes
As from Harrogate one ranges
To Hongkong.

My inquiries now enwrap me like a thong;
But I'm told a doom has sounded ding-a-dong;
Bridge is fighting for survival,
So, with praises adjectival,
I salute the glad arrival
Of Mah Jong.

AMERICA, JAPAN AND CHINA

New York, Jan. 12

Emissaries of Japan and China, guests of honour to-night at the annual festivities of the Ohio Society of New York, pledged the friendship of their respective nations to each other and to the United States.

"It would be an unmixed calamity for Japan to have any but the most cordial and close relations with China," said Mr. Masanao Hanihara, the Japanese Ambassador at Washington.

Mr. Alfred Sze, the Chinese Minister at Washington, cited as evidence of his country's feeling toward Japan, that Chinese relief ships were the first to reach the earthquake ridden islands of her neighbour after the disaster.

As for the attitude of the American nation toward China, and Japan too, Mr. Sze quoted from a series of international treaties which were documentary proof, he said, of "the position of the United States as a common friend of both countries." Reuter's American Service.

(As Mrs. Shakespeare Might Have Written in 1924)

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The pricemark on thy brim makes the confessing
Of all too-scanty means my sorry fate.

For how can I wear thee but by my paying?
And of that richness I am undeserving
The cost of this fair gift, sad truth I'm saying,
For incomes like to mine is quite unnerving.

I tried it on, thy own worth then not knowing,
The milliner my bank account mistaking,
She took it back again, excuses making.

Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter;
In sleep, a queen; but waking, no such matter.

"MY AMAH SAYS"

By Elizabeth Pepys.

My Amah says that China New Years belongs velly good, in fact plenty ding-hao, but that she had to catch some sleep some time and so it was more better she come back to work this morning. She says that before China New Year every Chinese man makee his house plenty clean, makee move big furniture and sweep in back of it, all same fashion foreign missy. But too muchee rain, small babies no can go outside to play, everybody come inside, bring plenty mud, so no use to have makee clean beforehand.

My amah says that they have plenty chow homeside, velly good chow, more tasty than foreign chow. Foreign style velly funny, not puttee New Year card on door, sendee through mail. Chinese style more ploper. Suppose wanchee good luck in shop, more better put sign on door. Foreign man wanchee plenty noise New Year but he likee jazz; Chinese man likee firecrackers.

Everybody belong very clean China New Year, makee wash clothes, makee shave head, makee wash. Must pay all bills, but foreign man makee plenty bills Christmas time, no pay till summer time. Eye-yah, too muchee chu pop-po dumplings, too muchee nien kao sticky sweet cakes. More better amah catch ploper pidjin just now.

THE BENEVOLENT TRAM COMPANY

"Walking is a first-rate exercise. It is beneficial to get into the habit of not seeing the convenient tari."—Dr. Cecil Webb-Johnson—for handy ricsha or tram.—Ed.)

By Elizabeth Pepys.

There is indeed a deep debt of gratitude which residents of Shanghai owe to the Shanghai Electric Construction Co., Ld. We are not speaking now as representatives of the United Ricsha Owners nor the Amalgamated Hire-Car Association. These commercial institutions have indeed good reason to give daily and hourly thanks to a concern which so unselfishly enlarges their respective enterprises. But it is rather in the interests of the larger public of Shanghai that we rise to say to the Tramway executives: "We thank you, sirs."

It is not, again, simply because this company has enabled us to do away with some of the superfluous coppers which weigh down our pockets and wear holes in our bags, that we raise a paean of thankfulness for the increase of the single fare from three to four coppers. No, the springs of our gratitude rise from a deeper and a finer source. We have not always experienced this rare spirit of appreciation. Nay, as children who do not kiss the rod or the castor-oil spoon we have on occasion said some impatient and even unkind things about the tram service. Now we know better. We sing in fuller realization:

(At least it is to be hoped so)
How dear to the heart are the things that should not be,

The cigarette, cocktail, too-plentiful food.
Health measures sound stupid, and so as a lot we

What? Breakfast, and tiffin, tea, dinner—resign them?

Will we walk? The word raises a chorus of sighs.

It we must we can do it. 'Tis where the tram line then

The secret is now out. Under the transparent veil of conducting a public utility, the Shanghai Electric Construction Co., Ld. is really teaching Shanghai to walk. Were it not for their self-denying refusal to extend their business and their profits by putting on additional rolling stock those of us who cannot afford to ride in motors or ricshas might never realize that generous Providence has provided us with legs which may be used for walking as well as dancing.

THE SOULFUL CORPORATION.

Could we, when we felt so inclined leap aboard one of the tram cars which ply about our busy streets, we might never realize the truth of the poetic gem: My feet they carry me about, they hoist me up the stair, I only have to guide them, and they'll take me anywhere." If tram transportation were readily available, the foreign pedestrian would soon become as rare as the Dodo. Let grateful hymns arise to the Tramways management for preserving the perigranadious advances of avoirdupois weter.

Lest the reader should not comprehend immediately how this compulsory training for Marathons is accomplished, let us outline a typical morning's experience. Being warned by the insidious advances of avoirdupois we released ourselves from the enervating luxury of a private ricsha. Alas, it was all too easy to summon the public wambatsu. At last we made an pact with ourselves. "Aut tramcar, aut itinerans" we said, and we have been walking ever since.

THE DAILY DOZEN.

It works out thus. We arise from the breakfast table to find to our daily surprise and indignation that it is at least 15 minutes later than it should be. We set out to walk the short distance to the tram, regretting that devotion to duty prevents us from walking all the way to the office. At Carter Road there is no tram in sight so we step blithely along to the Country Club, feeling that we are hurrying office-ward as rapidly as circumstances will allow.

Still no tram in sight, so if it is not too late and the day invites we swing off to Mohawk Road. Halfway down the stretch a tram passes. A hundred thousand curses! It appeared to have a vacant seat. "That could have happened once, and we missed it, lost it forever!" A pause on the safety zone to await the next. It arrives too crowded to invite another entry. The clock on the Race Club tower suggests that since no car is in sight the walk might as well be continued. It is. Somehow it is another case of never the tram and the station and your own self altogether.

We walk to the Win-On-Sincere safety zone, and there, painfully conscious of the flight of time, look anxiously for a tram. It comes. But so many people have seen it first that its present unavailability is painfully apparent. It departs without us. Time presses. We grow impatient but the next tram is even more impossible. No self-respecting sardine would consider being packed within it. Another follows equally jammed. Coolies fight to get on. We are all but dislodged from the platform and ground beneath the procession of motors.

THE TARDY OFFICE-WORKER.

A long wait ensues during which one has opportunity to reflect upon the habits of the business public and to conclude that few if any reach offices before 9.05, while the rush continues well on to 9.35. We grow apprehensive. Is it time for the semi-cessation of downtown traffic which occurs each morning after the first mad fury of the business exodus is over? No. Another tram draws up, but in such a state of repletion that the passengers within cannot force their way out much less can those on the outside get in.

The next car which comes along looks equally hopeless but the second class passengers are not easily discouraged and a half dozen more manage to jam in. It looks for a moment as if one-half a coolie would get down town, leaving his other half severed by the gate, behind on the platform. Determined pushing by the passenger, pulling by the conductor and shoving by the inspector get him all inside finally, and the tram moves on.

Finally, a long time afterwards, we secure a seat on the sixth tram to pass, reinforced and strengthened in our determination to walk to the office the following morning. As a physical culture exponent the Tramway Co. is certainly IT.

THE HIGH WAISTLINE

Alarming Rumours from Paris

By Elizabeth Pepys.

A spectacular elevation of the waistline is cabled from Paris and all the leading modistes and their ultra modish patrons here are thrown into spasms on its receipt. Consternation reigns among those who have already given orders for gowns quite devoid of waists or for waists falling somewhere about the knees.

Sundry bold spirits assert that come one, come all this waist shall fly from round my hips as soon as I want it to, and not an instant sooner. Others are soothing flurried sisters with reminders of numerous other advices to this same effect, which have appeared with each succeeding season, only to be disregarded. One party, however, is hastily evolving Empire models, and will flaunt them at the slightest excuse. With the waist elevated to the arm pits and the sleeve practically non-existent, the matter of the waist itself should not be difficult, since it results in little more than a pair of shoulder straps or a berthe.

THE NEED OF CHANGE.

One of the arbiters of the Rue de la Paix declares that his clients are clamouring for a different fashion so that he has been forced to go to another extreme to create the desired novelty. We trust we may be pardoned for polite scepticism on this point, for it has always seemed to us that the designer decreed and all the clientel did was to obey, but we may be obliged to adjust that impression. At all events we are told that skirts will be short enough to reveal the ankles—which is not altogether news to us—and that there will be no trains on ballroom gowns.

IN THE WORDS OF COMMERCIAL EXPERT.

The telegram when received was almost sent to the financial page, where it would doubtless have appeared as: Waists, previously quoted at knees, now at arm pits. Fashion's demand selling rate for waists formerly two, now 4½ feet from ground. Paris on London: ankles to be worn but no trains in ballroom. Local speciality shops rate of discount at least 5%. Style fluctuation due to determined effort to impose French styles. This exceptional augmentation abnormal and to be regarded with suspicion.

A DREAM SONG.

A young man went into a music store the other day and said to the clerk: "Have you got a song called 'You Carry Your Barnacles Hither and Thither'?"

"Do you know who wrote it?"

The young man shook his head.

After a search that lasted a quarter of an hour, the clerk said:

"I'm afraid I can't locate it. Do you know the publisher?"

"No," the young man replied. "In fact I am not certain there is a song like that at all. I dreamed about it the other night and I just wanted to find out."

TESTED RECIPES

Baked Eggplant.

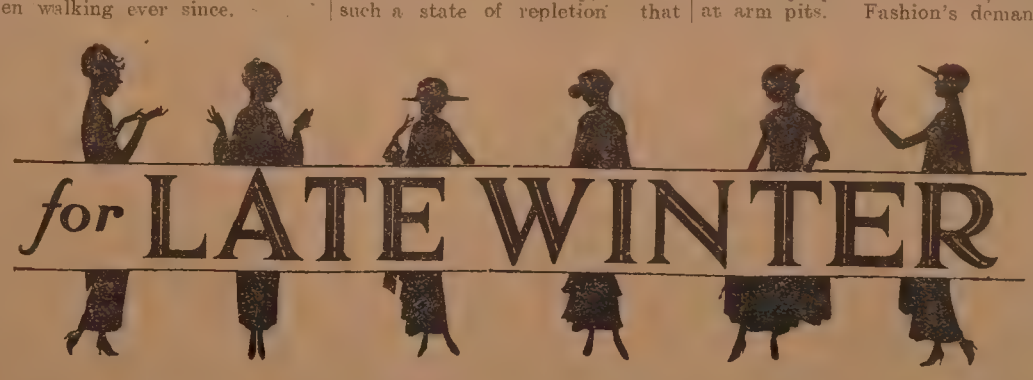
Peel the eggplant, cut in rather thick slices, sprinkle with salt, and let stand under a heavy weight for one hour. Then cover the eggplant with boiling water, add one teaspoonful of salt, and cook until tender, but not mushy. Drain off the liquid and chop the eggplant into small pieces. Place one-third the quantity in a buttered baking-dish, sprinkle lightly with salt, pepper, the chopped green peppers, bread-crumbs, cheese, and bits of butter. Add the remaining portion of the eggplant; cover with grated cheese and bread-crumbs. Bake at 350° F. for thirty-five minutes.

SCALLOPED ASPARAGUS.

Clean the asparagus, cut into short lengths, barely cover with boiling water, and cook slowly until tender. Drain and save the liquor. Melt the butter and pour over the bread-crumbs. Arrange the asparagus and the bread-crumbs in alternate layers in a greased baking-dish; sprinkle with salt and pepper and the onion juice. Cover the top layer with crumbs. Add the cream to the asparagus liquor, heat to the boiling-point, then pour over the asparagus mixture. Bake at 500° F. for fifteen minutes.

BAKED ONIONS.

Peel the onions and boil them slowly until tender, but not too soft; then drain. Scoop a small section out of the top of each onion. Place the onions in a baking-dish, then fill the cavities with chopped, uncooked bacon, and also lightly cover the tops of the onions with the bacon. Sprinkle with the salt and pepper and add the bread-crumbs. Pour the bacon fat and the hot water around the onions and bake at 450° F. until the onions are lightly browned—about forty minutes—according to the size of the onions.



THE END OF THE SEASON WARDROBE

Whether one calls the frocks one is designing or buying "late winter" or "early spring" makes very little difference in their style or material, since spring is likely to be a fairly chilly season in Shanghai. Unless one goes in for the frankly picturesque period gown the skirts still keep their straight and narrow way, diversified with many modifications in the way of flounces, aprons, tunics, ruffles and godets.

Moderation seems to be the key note of the fashion just at the moment, the skirts adapting their lengths to their uses, short for sports, creeping down a bit for the street, but none of them extravagantly long, even for the evening. Despite the reports that the Empire style is to be universally adopted the style books for the spring so far in hand do not bear out that rumour, and indeed there seems to be very little change in the models up to date. The coat frock is particularly popular.

A good way reanimate a familiar dress or suit is to make a new choker, a jabot attached to a band of velvet fitting close about the throat above the round decolletage of the blouse itself. This pleated jabot or rabat is of lingerie run with narrow velvet ribbon. Another way to enable a blouse whose front may have become worn or soiled to finish the season with credit is to insert one of the new mannish shirt fronts, which are making such a hit. Contrasting colours of the same material or organdie inserts are used.

THE BOOK PAGE

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Our average English reader is curiously indifferent to style in his books, so long as he can cry with the hero of fact or fiction, "Once aboard the lugger and the girl is mine!" It shows an upward tendency that the short story, not the mere fragment of a novelist's workshop, but the considered tale, has this year lightened its grip. Mr. Rudyard Kipling, who began our reformation with his "Plain Tales From The Hills," has shown again what can be done with a marketable commodity, apart from anything else. Some time in October the Macmillans printed 35,500 copies of his "Land and Sea Tales," as a first edition. Early in November they printed 22,000 more, and late in November 22,000. Came December, and a fourth edition of 23,000 was needed, and no doubt the printers and binders are, at the moment, engaged on a fifth edition.

Some people thought the day had gone when politicians had time, or energy, or ability, to be also authors. It has certainly returned, thanks in part to the frequency with which public men write newspaper articles. A handsome invitation comes to make them into a book, and with a little licking into shape that is done. Anything which Mr. Asquith writes is shapely from the first, as this "Studies and Sketches" will surely again show. Its subjects range from Dr. Johnson and Fanny Burney, to the Victorian Age and Joseph Chamberlain, whose biography, done by Mr. J. L. Garvin, will, one supposes, be a book of the New Year.

∴

A "big book" which has certainly earned its advance royalties, large as we know these to have been, is Mr. Winston Churchill's "World Crisis." Thanks to its quality of writing and drama of action it made itself a "best seller" in the best sense. Mr. Asquith's "Genesis of the War" is not a work of light reading, but its author has the homage of the intellect of the country, and it is in its third or fourth edition. A volume of addresses which he published several years ago also had an unusual sale for a book of the sort. Now he promises us, through Hutchinson, a series of "Studies and Sketches," and it will be awaited with genuine interest.

∴

Not many books of short stories could hope for the success of Mr. Kipling's "Land and Sea Tales," but Mr. John Galsworthy's "Captures" is to be singled out, alike for its material and its artistic success. He has also made a conspicuous hit with his "Forsyte Saga," all in a single volume, because it has sold nearly fifty thousand copies within a few months. It is a new book in a way since the various tales which make it have hitherto been in several volumes, but many people will call it a "collected edition." The conspicuous triumph with a new "collected edition" has been the Stevenson "Tusitala," which is cheap and good. Moreover, it contains everything by Stevenson ever likely to be published, except his play, "Monmouth" and the letters he wrote to Lady Colvin.

The life-story of Mr. Fawcett, who, though blind, became a Cabinet Minister and Postmaster-General, interested us all. His wife, Mrs. Millicent Garrett Fawcett, is still, happily, with us, and she has written her reminiscences, which Mr. Fisher [illegible] as "What I Remember." Her memory goes back, in particulars to Aldeburgh, where she spent her childhood and where to-day Mr. Edward Clodd, eighty and more but unconquerably young, flies the flag of literature. Mrs. Fawcett may, like him, remember Edward FitzGerald as a [illegible] neighbour of quaint old Aldeburgh Anxbow, her recollections of the town will give us a contrast in English life as between the mid-nineteenth century and the twentieth century.

Now, as a year ago, "The Immortal Hour" is attracting large audiences to the Regent Theatre. The success of the opera, with its haunting music, has naturally interested people in its composer, Mr. Rutland Boughton. Accordingly Mr. Gerald Cumberland has written a biographical and critical study of his life and work, and it will, by-and-by, appear from the Bodley Head. Mr. Boughton has other interests besides music, and the exploration of Glastonbury Cathedral has been one of them. Mr. Cumberland we know for "Set Down in Malice," and one or two other books.

A young author, Mr. David Garnett, and a success which continues with his unusual story, "Lady Into Fox." He has a new one, which may also prove unusual, appearing with Chatto under the title, "A Man In the Zoo," and this will be his third book. His first one was published under a pen name, but he may now, perhaps, think of giving it the value of his own name. Some folk thought, when Mr. Thomas Burke began to write, that he was using a pen name, for a natural simplicity in anything makes some minds suspect things. Mr. Burke has books in hand at present, and he is also dealing with a request to be the literary god-father of a bench of schoolboys in America, a compliment which he likes, and will oblige in full generosity.

CONRAD'S LATEST BOOK

"The Rover." By Joseph Conrad (Fisher Unwin: 7/6).

By Achilles.

"The Rover" is a most breezy volume A cliff on the Mediterranean, overlooking that wonderfully-coloured sea is the scene or overlooks the scene of practically all the events in the story, except those which occur in the reminicensces and rambling self-revelations which flash out in all Conrad's books, and which in this chiefly proceed from the mouth or the mind of the Rover himself. The Rover has been in many prisons and commanded many vessels. He has roved wildly over the world with a flair for striking hot corners.

It is a relief to have a yarn from Conrad not dealing with tropical swamps, South America or Anarchists, and focussing on the coast as opposed to the open sea. The fanning winds of the blue waters dance over the headland, and in the house on the upstanding promontery we overlook the English frigate "Amelia" riding at ease, watching the shore at safe distance from the batteries. She is part of the English squadron blockading the French fleet at Toulon. The Rover plays her a smart trick. We meet Nelson on the "Victory" through the efficacy of the latter, although the naval officers never discovered how they had been duped and the Rover lost his life in the process. Nelson was troubled with a bad cough and nervous agitation and his face bore an expression of suffering which however was in startling contrast to the fire of his one eye.

ATMOSPHERE.

It is remarkable how the atmosphere of the cliff and the sunlit coast dominate the book, more than so the Rover himself or the astonishing Lieutenant Réal and the maiden Arlette. The latter is a close replica of the amazing heroine of Conrad's short story "A Stroke of Fortune" which is one of the trio of his "Tales of Unrest." As in Thomas Hardy's "Return of the Native" the changeless, silent power of Egdon Heath holds sway over the puny human beings who flit across that stage, so in "The Rover" the form of Escampobar and the strip of land and water which it surveys reign over the [illegible] erratic members who perform in this adventurous tragedy, superimposing the superiority of their strength over that of even strong creatures like the Rover. As a rule books dealing rather with people than places are liked. But even when a locality is given precedence characters are necessary to make it stand out: thus in "The Woodlanders" Hardy while allowing the forest to have a very large say introduces us at the same time to one or two of his best creations, such as Marty South. So Conrad, although giving us the happy feeling of being in shirt-sleeves in the summer time on the top of a cliff in the sunshine and the breeze, and stressing place over person, lets us meet fellows whom we like and who capture our attention. It is however certainly not one of his best books.

CHASING A PHRASE.

Justly praised as Conrad is for his prose, outstandingly excellent for a foreigner, admirable even for an Englishman, it is not infallibly sans reproche. He has a weakness in this volume for the expression 'mortal envelope.' He runs it to earth and worries it gently before he lets it drop. But there are rare passages worthy of the man competent to set a standard of prose in the English language.

PIRATES

The Horrid Truth

By Robert Lynd

"The Buccaneers of America." By John Esquemeling. Translation of 1684-5, revised by W. S. Stallybrass. Broadway Translations. Routledge. 12s. 6d.

This is a book written by a seventeenth-century pirate, a Dutchman, who paints his fellow-pirates as the most horrible villains. There could hardly be more unattractive beasts of prey than the robbers and murderers who march in herds through these pages. Such is the glamour of physical daring, and such is national vanity, however, that the first translator praised the book on the ground that it recorded the "glorious actions" of the English nation. It informs us, he declared, "of as great and bold attempts in point of military conduct and valour as ever were performed by mankind, without excepting here either Alexander the Great or Julius Cæsar or the rest of the Nine Worthies of Fame." And by the end of the paragraph he is once more rhapsodizing over the "unparalleled if not inimitable adventures and heroic exploits of our own countrymen and relations, whose undaunted and exemplary courage, when called upon by our King and country, we ought to emulate."

COURAGEOUS DEVILS.

Of the courage of the pirates there is no question. Morgan's overland march to Panama, in the course of which he and his men were driven by hunger to eat the leather bags the fleeing Spaniards had left behind them, was an amazing feat of human boldness and endurance. And the pirates had other qualities that appeal to the romantic part of our nature. "Among themselves," wrote Esquemeling, "they are very civil and charitable to each other. Insomuch that, if any wants what another has, with great liberality they give it one to another." When they had money, too, there was a "Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum" recklessness about them not entirely alien to the atmosphere of "Treasure Island." Esquemeling tells us, for instance:

> My own master would buy, on like occasions, a whole pipe of wine, and, placing it in the street, would force everyone that passed by to drink with him; threatening also to pistol them, in case they would not do it. At other times he would do the same with barrels of ale or beer. And, very often, with both his hands, he would throw these liquors about the streets, and wet the clothes of such as walked by, without regarding whether he spoiled their apparel or not, were they men or women.

These, however, were the most innocent diversions of the pirates that Esquemeling chronicles. For the rest, they more than justify Esquemeling's description of them as "the wicked order of the Pirates, or Robbers at Sea."

Their wickedness, perhaps, is not to be wondered at. Many of them, such as Morgan and Esquemeling himself, had been slaves in the West Indies, and knew freedom only as outlaws. They were outlaws, moreover, upon shores where cruelty was a tradition—cruelty of Indians, Spaniards, Frenchmen, Englishmen, and every race that came to them Roche Brasiliano, a Dutch pirate, hated the Spaniards so bitterly that, on capturing some of them on the mainland on one occasion, he "commanded several to be roasted alive upon wooden spits, for no other crime than that they would not show him the places, or hog-yards, where he might steal swine." Torture of this kind seemed natural to pirates as a means of compelling unhappy mainlanders to show them where they could get food or treasure.

THE CRUEL CAPTAIN.

L'Ollonais, the pirate captain, was as cruel on one occasion, when his Spanish prisoners were unable to direct him by another way out of Puerto Cavallo besides that along which he suspected an ambush:—

> Having asked them all, and finding they could show him no other way, L'Ollonais grew outrageously passionate; insomuch that he drew his cutlass, and with it cut open the breast of one of those poor Spaniards, and, pulling out his heart with his sacrilegious hands, began to bite and gnaw at it with his teeth like a ravenous wolf, saying to the rest 'I will serve you all alike if you show me not another way.'

Esquemeling's book, however, is not a mere compilation of horrors. He does not dwell on cruelties more than is necessary to give a true picture of the lives of the buccaneers, and there is a fine Plutarchian impartiality in the way in which he can set down every vice Morgan possessed and at the same time on occasion let a heroic light play upon his sinister figure. There is something noble about Morgan's reply to those of his men who objected that they were too few to assault and capture so great a town as Porto Bello. "If our number is small," he said, "our hearts are great. And the fewer persons we are, the more union and better shares we shall have in the spoil." Yet, as Andrew Lang says in an excellent essay reprinted in the present book, this heroic leader was a thief who "bilked" his own crews with as little remorse as he plundered the Spaniards.

Lang's essay is a perfect answer to.

A PUBLISHER'S REMINISCENCES

Pulling Down the Park Railings

"Sixty Years a Bookman." By Joseph Shaylor. Selwyn and Blount. 6s.

Mr. Shaylor was born in the West of England in 1844, and after an apprenticeship to bookselling at Stroud he moved to London and joined the firm of Simpkin, Marshall & Co. in 1864. Since then he has had a long and useful career, joining the directorate of his firm in 1894 and performing various public services. His account of the bookselling and publishing business during the 60 years he has known it is full of interest. He tells us of the change of fashion in reading, the notable decline in religious works, and mediocre verse, both of which had enormous sales about the middle of last century.

He has much to say, too, concerning matters of trade customs and terms, and his fellow-booksellers and publishers should not miss these chapters. The general reader will probably most enjoy Mr. Shaylor's more personal recollections, and particularly those of his early life in London. Before going to London he had never been inside a theatre, and his first experience was at Sadlers Wells, where he saw "Hamlet," and was so enthusiastic that he went three nights in succession, and only stopped because funds run out. He helped to pull down the railings in Hyde Park, and got a crack across his back from a truncheon for his pains.

Writing of old Holywell-street, where there were numbers of secondhand bookstalls, he tells us how he once bought what he thought was "a book with not a very chaste reputation" for the sum of half-a-crown. It was done up very carefully in a sealed envelope, and when he opened it at home he found that the volume was an old soiled Common Prayer Book. "I did not get what I expected," he writes, "but perhaps it was better for me that I was swindled." Such odd recollections make up a very attractive little book.

LIGHT-WEIGHT CHAMPIONS

Yea and Nay. Brentano's, Ltd. 6s. net.

This series of lectures and counter-lectures, which was given at the London School of Economics a short time ago in aid of the hospitals of London, is well worth reprinting, despite the widespread publicity it received in the daily Press. For there is a remarkable freshness and sincerity about these able and merry disputants—Mr. Wells and Mr. Osborn fighting again the familiar battle of the international or national teaching of history; Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith and Miss Rebecca West on the sex novel; Mr. St. John Ervine and Mr. Cochran on the commercial theatre; Miss Sitwell and Mr. Noyes on modern poetry; Mr. McCurdy and Mr. Chesterton on modern journalism; "Ian Hay" and Mr. Sinclair Lewis on Main Street and High Street; Mr. A. G. Gardiner and Mr. Guedalla on biographies; the Duke of Northumberland and Mr. Oswald Mosley on the ape and the tiger in man's nature; and the University Unions on Education.

The lectures are fresh and sincere because the disputants were obviously on their mettle. They knew they had to face one another; they could not take refuge in anonymity or fire their shots from the safe trenches of a newspaper office or a private study. Even the chairmen, who purred suavely and sententiously, were in the firing-zone. They said little, but they listened, and there was not only the eager public who actually heard the lectures, but the wider public who read them in the newspapers the next day. These were gladiatorial contests, and the gladiators had sharpened their swords. Mr. Osborn was not only discussing education but keeping a sharp eye on Mr. Wells; Miss West had to contemplate not only her sex in general but Sussex or Miss Kaye-Smith in particular; and the Duke had to fortify himself against the witticisms of Mr. Mosley.

The result was great fun. Indeed, how much our daily journalism and controversial literature would improve if the disputants had to write in the presence of one another! There might be greater moderation, but there would be greater reality. Leading articles would no longer pummel shadows, and there would creep into literature again that courtesy which is born of fear. How compelling, how real, how inspiring is personality when it is embodied in actual flesh and blood!

We confess to one preference among all those talented lecturers, and the preference is inspired by something more than a sense of gallantry. Miss Rebecca West's remarks are very amusing and fruitful, probably because, as her chairman, Mr. Squire, pointed out, she paid very little attention to the subject of the lecture. What sensible person could be bothered to talk or write or think about sex!

We are glad to hear from Mr. Stelling, who was responsible for the lectures, that another series will, it is hoped, be arranged in the early months of next year. If the new series is as good as the old, it will be very good indeed. And why not try and get the chairmen into the arena this time? Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, Mr. Gosse, Mr. Asquith were judicial in the first series. Why should they not be controversial in the next?—"Morning Post."

KUOMINTANG SCHEME OF GOVERNMENT

Conference at Canton: A Bolshevist Form in View: Soviet Agent Advising: Financial Stringency: Merchants' Resistance to Fresh Paper Issue

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, Feb. 2.

During the past few weeks the situation here has not changed very greatly. There has been a large conference of the Kuomintang from all over the country, for the purpose of discussing the formation of a new Government of Reconstruction.

The conference was attended by about 200 delegates from all provinces, including four representatives of Marshal Chang Tso-lin. All the representatives were elected by the members of the party in their various provinces. The form of Government will be on Soviet lines, and Mr. Borodin, the Soviet Representative in Canton, was present at the meeting. The supreme power will be vested in a Committee, elected from the representatives of the various provinces, and will have a Chairman elected from amongst them, who will take the place of a President. The Government is to be inaugurated as soon as possible and it is expected that a start will be made during the current month. It is almost certain that Dr. Sun Yat-sen will be elected Chairman of the Committee.

The financial situation shows little signs of improvement, but the Yunnanese military commanders have been ordered to hand back the Revenue Bureax controlled by them at present at once, and it is thought that they will obey the order. In this case it may be possible for the finances of the Southern Government to be reorganized on a more sound basis. Instructions have also been given for the cessation of the unpopular sales of public property.

The Chinese New Year did not pass without several unfortunate incidents. The urgent military expenses were met by paying the troops with special notes secured on the property of the Nine Charitable Institutions of Canton, but, owing to the fact that the merchants had not had sufficient warning, they in many cases refused the notes and as a result several small fights took place between troops and Merchant Volunteers, in which several were killed on both sides. It is understood that these notes have now been cancelled by the authorities, but what steps they intend to take have not yet been made public. In spite of this there are many shops which have not yet reopened for business after the Holidays, fearing trouble.

The strike of the rice coolies has not been settled yet, and is having a very serious effect on the price of that commodity, the middle quality now selling at only eight catties for a dollar.

There is a complete absence of any news as to any fighting, and it appears that there is a temporary lull in operations. This may be due to the fact that, as is believed in many circles, negotiations for peace with Chen Chiung-ming's followers are in progress.

KIANGSI AND FUKIEN

Some Political Appointments

Peking, Feb. 12.

Foreign telegrams from Kiukiang and Foochow alike state that reports are in circulation that General Tsai Cheng-hsun is likely to be recalled to Peking, owing to friction with Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan of Nanking, and that General Sun Chuan-fang Chu Cheng will be appointed Tuli of Kiangsi, while General Wang Yuan-chuang will replace General Sun Chuan-fang at Foochow. General Tsai, it is stated, will be given a high post on his arrival at Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. Sun Fo, son of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, will soon leave Canton for Moscow, states the Chinese press, and he will be succeeded as Mayor of Canton City by Mr.

THE RENDITION OF WEIHAIWEI

China's Dissatisfaction with Commission's Report: Claim for Modifications

London, Feb. 19.

Acting on the orders of Dr. Wellington Koo, the Chinese Foreign Minister, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Minister in London, to-day conferred with Mr. Ramsay Macdonald at the Foreign Office and presented the Chinese case with regard to Weihaiwei.

China is dissatisfied with the decision of the Anglo-Chinese Commission in that connexion, the report of which is before the two Governments, China claiming modifications especially concerning Chinese sovereignty, and asks the British Government to resume the negotiations.

Mr. Macdonald promised to study the question and expressed a desire that the whole matter of transferring Weihaiwei to China should be completed as quickly as possible.—Reuter.

GERMANY AND CHINA

Peking, Feb. 15.

The Government, according to report, has decided to return the German cable at Shanghai to its former owners. The cable was confiscated by the Chinese Government upon the declaration of war against the German Empire. The report has not yet been officially confirmed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

London, Feb. 18.

In connexion with the reported Sino-German agreement with regard to Germany's war indemnity to China "The Times" says that, as soon as payment is made to China, China should remove the notices of invalidation of her outstanding bonds issued in Germany and that this should be followed by a prompt removal of the Stock Exchange ban on certain Chinese securities. The journal doubts whether Germany has the credits necessary to take full advantage of the opportunity of developing trade with China. —Reuter.

GEN. FENG AND THE LEGATION POLICE

Breach of Traffic Regulations and Avoidance of Arrest: Policeman Assaulted

ACTION TAKEN BY THE DIPLOMATIC BODY

Peking, Feb. 17.

A very regrettable incident occurred in connexion with the traffic regulations of the Diplomatic Quarter on Friday evening.

Owing to the common practice of Chinese driving through the Quarter with one light or three, at dangerous speed, the police have recently been given strict orders to ensure safety by insisting upon motor cars inside the Quarter using two ordinary lights and not the glaring third which is such a nuisance in Peking City. An old regulation prohibits armed outriders from being carried inside the Quarter, in common with the Chinese regulations in the city itself. The regulations are plainly posted at the gates of the Quarter, but recently at night-fall a large number of rickshas and motor cars infringing the light regulations have been stopped at the various gates of the Quarter, while numbers of cars have been stopped and warned owing to the terrific speed with which they have been rushing through the Quarter.

On Friday evening Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang was a guest at the American Legation. He entered the Legation Quarter from the Hatamen with three glaring lights and three outriders carrying Mauser pistols under their coats. Mr. Gailey was in the car with Gen. Feng. On arrival at the intersection of Legation Street and Rue Marco Polo the policeman on duty attempted to stop the car without success. He blew his whistle and the man on duty in front of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank got in front of the car and gamely stood his ground. The car pulled up, and the outriders jumped to the ground and hustled the policeman from in front of the car. The policeman raised his baton and struck the outriders. The policeman received a blow on the face which caused a bruise. Gen. Feng got out of the car, the baton was taken from the policeman and Gen. Feng re-entered the car with the baton in his hand. The car then proceeded, accompanied by a chorus of whistles of warning to policemen on duty further along the street. Gen. Feng threw the baton on to the footpath as the car proceeded.

After leaving the bank, the car considerably increased its speed. The policemen in front of the Yokohama Specie Bank and the International Bank attempted to stop the car, but it swerved around them and went on to the American Legation. Mr. Thomas, Secretary of the Legation Quarter, followed the car to the American Legation and insisted that, when Gen. Feng left the Legation, he should go out by the Western end of Legation Street, lest there should be further trouble.

Peking, Feb. 19.

The Diplomatic Body to-day discussed Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang's recent brawl with the Legation Police and infringement of the Legation traffic regulations.

It is understood that a Note will be sent to the Waichiaopu on the matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Diplomatic Body's Action.

Feb. 20.

The Note from the Diplomatic Body reached the Waichiaopu this morning. It calls attention to the frequent disregard of traffic regulations in the Legation Quarter

WHY THE WORLD'S UNEMPLOYED?

Feb. 18.

WHEN one recalls the desperate search there was for men in the days of the Great War and how much it was impressed on the nations that man-power was to be the deciding factor in the struggle it is amazing that to-day the world seems to team with superfluous men. Money was nothing accounted of in those days. A thousand million pounds! It was a mere bagatelle. You floated your war loan. Old scrip—like the old lamps of the fairy tale—was taken in exchange for new and behold the thing was done. But man-power was different; the human wreckage could not, like the old scrip, be re-written and re-named and sent forth apparently as good as ever. The blind, the maimed and shell-shocked soldiers were of no further use to the Moloch of battlefields and so men were more precious than gold.

To-day all that is changed. Money is scarce and men are superfluous. We have here in Shanghai some seven thousand Russians. Physically and intellectually as good men as could be found anywhere; trained workmen, too, many of them are and yet we have no use for them. Our only problem is how to get rid of them. We have carefully examined every likely solution of our problem; have scanned the horizon for a possible haven for these strangers within our gates who can find no work here and threaten to die of starvation on our streets and it is fair to say we are at our wits' end for no solution is in sight.

At home in Britain there are a million unemployed men. It is true the clouds are lifting. The new year has brought with it a more hopeful outlook and despondency is giving place to optimism. It is true also that there always has been and always will be a certain number of men out of employment. A reserve of man-power is as necessary in industry as in war but when everything that can be has been said in palliation of the circumstances, it still remains true that our superfluous population is a serious menace to the country's welfare.

China is supposed to be a land where the people toil like busy bees and where Satan can find no idle hands to work the mischief he finds for them. But this is the China of the tourist. Ask any Chinese and he will tell you that the number of idle people in China, who live like parasites on the labour of others, is greater than in any country in the world. Look into the Chinese shops as you walk our streets and it will go hard with you to find one that has half as many customers as it has servitors. The bandit menace which occupies such a large space in our columns is largely the result of unemployment. If remunerative labour could be found for the robbers who are terrorizing vast districts, plundering and burning whole villages, they would be metamorphosed into honest farmers as by the wave of a magnician's wand. And the waste of it! Here is the late Lao Yang-ren, a bandit who has led a rabble of untrained followers through three provinces, eluding the government troops when possible and fighting them when battle was unavoidable. Could any trained general have done better? And yet we rejoice when we hear that this old rascal has been shot; forgetting the dictum of the judge who said, "Depend upon it, the worst use you can put a man to is to hang him." But we have hanged him and hope that Honan will now be at peace. But what is to become of his unemployed following? They are scattered but they still exist, roaming hither and thither, hungry and superfluous.

And yet, in spite of this vast army of superfluous men, the world's work is not done. There are millions of hungry bellies that are not filled and millions of shivering bodies that are not clothed. There are roads that should be made and bridges that should be built. If there is an army of unemployed men there is also a wilderness of untilled land waiting to be broken up. The problem of governments is to bring together the waiting task and the idle hands. It may be difficult but it is not impossible. It has apparently been solved in the province of Shansi, for our correspondent tells us that Governor Yen Hsi-shan has turned his army into workmen and set them to build roads, clean up cities and cultivate waste patches of ground. And this unorthodox activity seems to have solved the bandit problem so far as Shansi is concerned; for, so far as we can learn, bandits there are as scarce as snakes in Ireland. We commend the policy of the Governor of Shansi to all those who are frightened by the bogey of superfluous men. Nature has an antipathy to superfluous things. She first disintegrates and then destroys them. The unemployed man is also subject to this law of deterioration. He is first unemployed, then unemployable and finally anti-social. Put a spade in his hand and you immediately start him on the upgrade.

SIR. R. MACLEAY'S REMINDER

Feb. 19.

CERTAIN passages in Sir Ronald Macleay's speech last Friday at the opening of our new building were so important that more attention should be drawn to them than it was, perhaps, possible to give in all the bustle of an unusually crowded week-end. The Minister has been speaking of the rôle of a newspaper as a dispassionate historian and friendly critic and he continues thus:

I fear that in recording and commenting on the present unrest, disunion and lack of stability in the country, we are, I think, too prone to forget that we are ourselves in some measure responsible. It must be remembered that we foreigners originally forced the door of China's exclusiveness and, first by wringing from a reluctant Chinese government extraterritorial rights, special privileges and concessions, and then by opening up the country with railways and by steam navigation on the inland waters—as well as by the moral, religious and educational propaganda of our missionaries—we gradually introduced Western ideas and novel political theories. Subsequently by attracting young Chinese to study in America and Europe we inculcated in the younger generation the belief that our methods and ideals were superior to theirs, and in so doing we sowed the seeds of the 1911 Revolution.

From the aftermath of that upheaval China is suffering and it can hardly be wondered at that she should take some time in passing from "the rule of an autocratic, sacrosanct and inaccessible Emperor to the strange and complex machinery of a democratic form of government based on the rule of the people" and Sir Ronald continues:

It is therefore necessary to maintain a nice sense of proportion, to admit the right of Chinese thinkers to opinions which we do not necessarily share, and to give the recognized Central Government of China, which is in friendly relations with H. M. Government and which I fully believe is sincerely anxious to maintain those relations, the credit for its good intentions.

Such an attitude is not incompatible with a sturdy defence of British interests in China or Shanghai, should these appear to be in any way endangered; nor does it preclude the friendly and candid criticism of events and policies in China, or even the stern reproval of abuses such as opium and brigandage.

Now we may not like the view that the foreigner must admit his share of responsibility for the disturbance in China. And we are fully entitled to plead that that responsibility was incurred in absolute innocence. It cannot be called a crime that foreigners wished to enter China and do business with her, as everybody except the mandarin class was quite willing that they shou'd do. But what Sir Ronald Macleay says is none the less true and in these trying times it behoves us all to look carefully to our steps. On both the Chinese and the foreign side there is a good deal of sore and angry feeling. Foreign scorn is excited by the flagrant falling-away from the virtuous professions of the anti-opium movement of fifteen years ago and anger stirred by the equally unchecked and unrequited outrages of brigands. Meanwhile, Chinese accuse the foreigner of caring for nothing but his own pocket, of presuming to lord it in a country where he is only a tenant, even of deliberately fomenting trouble for his own ends. At no time, say they, does the foreigner evince the least sympathy for the difficulties that China has to overcome. This not altogether just, but also not altogether surprising view has induced in some foreigners a sloppy sentimentality which is probably no less damaging all round than the gunboat policy. What middle course are we to steer between the two?

In the present fluid state of Chinese society, we certainly do not see that any good can come of allowing treaties to be trampled upon. Nor does Sir Ronald Macleay, for he speaks of "a sturdy defence of British interests" as being in no way incompatible with a clearer recognition of our position in this country. While centralized government has broken down and every local chieftain is a law to himself, treaties remain the one stable feature of commercial life. The foreigner who insists that Government shall protect him in the lawful pursuit of business against brigands, licentious soldiers and illicit taxation, helps to secure the same immunities of civilized life for millions of Chinese. And if the Diplomatic Body had tamely permitted Dr. Sun Yat-sen to seize the Kuangtung Customs, the whole of China both now and in the future would have suffered for it. On the other hand, we cannot but think that the foreign Powers are morally committed to something more than a purely passive attitude of patience until China sets her own house in order. Innocent though their responsibility is for her troubles, they cannot evade the consequent duty of helping her to pick up the pieces. That is the feeling which has led to the suggestion that they should issue a friendly invitation to leaders throughout China to join them in seeking for some system by which unity, peace and a permanent scheme of government may be evolved. The popular conception of a Tuchun as a monster disguised in man's form is rapidly dissipated by actual contact with them. There are black sheep in every flock. But we have not the slightest doubt that the great majority of leadng Chinese officials are weary of disorder and genuinely desirous of a better state of things. Mistrust and the terrible backstairs influences of every oriental court keep them asunder and it needs some stronger push than any of them can exert to force them to face their differences in common and adjust them.

As regards this paper's part in current problems, we would earnestly invite our Chinese readers to let us know their views from time to time on the course of events. In recent years they have shown an increasing tendency to send us letters for the correspondence columns and these we greatly value. We may not always agree with what the writers say, but we wish to know what they think and, if they desire to criticize and find fault, they will be assuredly free to do so. Only by learning each other's point of view can we arrive at a common understanding.

MOTOR-CAR PILFERAGE

Feb. 20.

AFTER what we understand has been a period of quiescence, thefts of accessories from motor-cars on the Bund have started again. On Friday night a Baby Peugeot was robbed of its tools, and on Monday evening the lock of a dickey-seat of another owner-driven car was picked and everything valuable abstracted. It happens that both these thefts took place opposite Peking Road, a spot somewhat notorious in the history of this manner of pilferage in the past, and for fear that this is a recrudescence of the former state of affairs, one of the car owners has suggested it to us as a subject for comment. It is one to be approached with great caution, realizing that if we lose a proper sense of proportion we shall readily lay ourselves open to the complaint of espousing class legislation, for after all thefts of or from motor cars are only a phase in the crime of the Settlement and their relative importance has to be judged in comparison with other kinds of crime. The case is by no means simple. There is an impression abroad that owner-driven cars, which inevitably remain unoccupied for long periods of time, are the principal victims of pilferage, but although they are the most vulnerable, this theory is by no means borne out by facts. The Chinese chauffeur's capacity for sleep renders his car almost equally accessible to the pilferer, and knowing something of the various cases which have come up, a former widely-held theory has to be dismissed. At one time it was believed that a union of Chinese chauffeurs was at the back of the pilferage from owner-driven cars, so that people would be forced to employ chauffeurs in every instance. The facts have shown that cars with chauffeurs are just as liable to be the thief's objective as the other type mentioned, and this seems to dismiss the charge.

Inquiry shows that in relation to the general crime of the Settlement thefts of or from motor-cars constitute a very small proportion, and in comparison with the United States—the country where this form of crime is most rife of all—our losses in this respect are infinitesimal. The reason that they are apt to bulk so largely in the public view is that the class in Shanghai most able and ready to make its views known is a car-owning class. Naturally when an owner finds that his tools have been abstracted from his car his annoyance is extreme, and if his chauffeur (provided he has one) has been asleep at the time, this annoyance turns into justifiable anger. There is, therefore, a demand that the Police should do something, and it is seldom recognized that the Police are only staffed sufficiently to look after the general peace of the Settlement. They have not the men to guard each individual motor-car, or each group of cars, and in view of the limitation of numbers, the Force must preserve an accurate sense of proportion between various interests. They are dealing with a matter which is in no sense a great crime wave such as the motor-car thefts of the United States, which we believe still baffle the authorities. They are not even dealing with a local criminal wave such as armed robbery or opium trafficking, which have elicited special measures that are still continuing although many months have elapsed since the evil first became of the first importance. We have to deal with the fact that in the Settlement five motor-cars have been stolen, or it would be more correct to say borrowed for a day or two, and that a considerable number of accessories have been taken from cars, and that the people apprehended and convicted of this form of crime have been for a spanner or a screw-driver order—the man who steals a brass cap and sells it for old metal or who vets a few cents for a spanner or a screw—driver which it will cost the owner a very great deal more to replace. As for the stolen cars, it is practically impossible to get rid of them in this district, and it is generally recognized that when stolen they have been used in some particular scheme of crime—merely borrowed without any intention of depriving their owners of them for more than a few hours.

We have endeavoured to show that in the circumstances of the case the Police Force of the Settlement is not large enough to devote any outstanding portion of its time, as against its other multifarious duties, to the protection of motor-cars alone, by Chinese and cites the Feng Yu-hsiang incident as a glaring example. The Government is requested to draw the attention of the Chinese public to the necessity for Chinese who enter the Quarter to conform with its traffic regulations. The Note makes no demands.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUMOURS OF WAR

Explicit Denial by Gen. Lu of His Rumoured Loan to Tan Yen-Kai

We have received the following letter from Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, Director-General for the Reorganization of Military Affairs in Chêkiang, with reference to a report which appeared in these columns several days ago to the effect that Gen. Lu had made a loan of $200,000 to Gen. Tan Yen-kai, a prominent member of the Kuomingtang, who was formerly Tuchun of Hunan, in order that the latter might make another attempt to regain his lost position. Gen. Lu states:—

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News,
Shanghai.

Sir:—

My attention has been drawn to an article which appeared in your valuable paper a couple of days ago relating to the rumours of further internal warfare. In this report it was stated that I had made a loan of $200.000 to Gen. Tan Yen-kai in order that he might carry out his plan against Hunan which would be the beginning of a general internal campaign.

I do not know where this false report came from, but I can sincerely assure you that it is absolutely false and without any foundation whatsoever.

Of course a newspaper is at liberty and has the right to publish whatever it hears or learns, but do you not think that it would be more proper to investigate, as you usually do, thoroughly into your reports before publishing them, and to find out whether or not there is any truth in them so that you may decide what to publish and what not?

Your paper has won a name for itself for its truthfulness and its justice. It has always been careful to publish only those reports which it has found reliable and it has taken care always to investigate before publication. It would be a pity now to allow yourselves to be cheated by mischievous rumours which tend to do nobody any good but the originators.

I sincerely trust that you will maintain your good name and keep the honour of the paper pure. I have always respected you and the members of your staff hitherto, and I am sure that there will be no occasion for me to change my confidence in you. False and mischievous rumours like these which are intended to cause trouble must, however, be corrected and I am sure you will not grudge me a little space in your valuable paper to publish my statement.

Your sincerely.
Lu Yung-hsiang.

Chekiang, Kiang-su and Anhui Expected to Compromise

Peking, Feb. 13.

Counsels of peace are apparently prevailing in respect of the threatened trouble between the provinces of Chêkiang, Kiangsu and Anhui, for, according to reports reaching Peking, the authorities of the provinces mentioned have agreed to withdraw troops from their respective borders a distance of 50 li. Delegates from these provinces are meeting in Shanghai to decide upon the methods for giving effect to this agreement.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 14. Dr. Lo Wen-kan, former Minister of Justice, following the declaration of his innocence of the charges against him by Mr. Wu Ching-lien, has registered as a Legal practitioner at the Local Court and will resume his former legal practice.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S OFFER TO MARSHAL TUAN

Solatium to Anfu Leader: Handsome Pension if He will Retire

As already reported in these columns, the Peking Government have offered to Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, the Anfu leader, a monthly remuneration of $10,000, in payment of his past services and on condition that he will remain away from public life. Further details of this have been received from Tientsin by one who is in close touch with Marshal Tuan.

It appears that Marshal Wu Pei-fu first made the proposal to President Tsao Kun by telegram that the Government should offer to Marshal Tuan a monthly pension of $15,000 or $20,000 in order that he should be repaid for his past services to the country and that he should remain away from politics and give the Chihli party a clear course to carry out their plans for peace and reunion.

The proposal is stated to have been approved by the Cabinet and President Tsao and Marshal Wu sent Gen. Lu Ching (Minister of War) and Mr. Hsu Yenpeng to Tientsin as their special representatives, but the Aufu leader refused to receive them. This mission proving unsuccessful, a new plan was arranged, i.e., that the Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, should be sent to Tientsin to meet Marshal Tuan. The idea of this was to make use of the Premier's "name and face" to influence Marshal Tuan and get him to accept the offer. It was proposed, should Marshal Tuan accept, that a presidential mandate should be issued by President Tsao granting him the monthly sum and offering him the same "special good treatment" such as has already been conferred upon the Manchus.

With this plan in view, we are told, the Chihli leaders hoped to leave the Anfu party and other anti-Chihli-ites leaderless. Thus the opposition to the Chihli party would be dissolved automatically and no further fighting would be required. Should Marshal Tuan refuse the offer, the only means at the disposal of Chihli would be military force.

However, the matter has been dropped for the present, we are told, as the attention of Chihli is being concentrated upon Admiral Wen Shih-teh who, it is stated, has seized the gunboats at Tsingtao and is now refusing to obey the orders of Admiral Tu Shih-kuei, the Commander-in-Chief of the Navy. Marshal Chi Shich-yuan, Governor-General of Kiangsu, Anhui and Kiangsi has telegraphed to the Government opposing the actions of Admiral Wen, who, it is reported, is receiving the support of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, and states that Admiral Wen's acts are unfortunate, unfair, and unlawful.

CHINA'S TREASURY BONDS

Attacks on Mr. Wang Ko-ming Unjustified

Peking, Feb. 15.

Three hundred and forty-two members were present in the House of Representatives this afternoon when the House discussed the question of the impeachment of Mr. Wang Ko-ming on the ground that he had issued $1,000,000 worth of Treasury Bonds for the expenses of Legations and Consulates abroad without securing Parliament's sanction. Two hundred and eight-two members voted on the matter, but only 280 name-cards had been inserted in the name-box. Consequently the vote was declared to be informal. The actual result of the voting was 213 in favour of impeachment, 67 against and two informal.

Peking, Feb. 15.

Various Chinese newspapers not connected with Mr. Wang Ko-ming's party attack on Mr. Wang in connection with the issue of $2,000,000 worth of treasury bonds to provide funds for the upkeep of Legations and Consulates abroad are wholly unjustified, as the issue was made on September 24, whereas Mr. Wang only assumed office on November 1. The papers point that Members of the Parliament should have been acquainted with this fact, which reduces their attacks on Mr. Wang on this matter to an absurdity.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUSSO-CHINESE CONFERENCE

Soviet Envoy's Conditions: Abandonment of Extra-territorial Rights

Peking, Feb. 19.

The "Far Eastern Times" to-day publishes the following as conditions and wishes alleged to have been expressed by M. Karakhan, Soviet Envoy in the Far East, regarding the opening of Russo-Chinese Conference:—

(1) The formal restoration of diplomatic relations between Russia and China, the immediate exchange of diplomatic and consular officials and the return to Soviet Russia of the Russian Legation and Consulates in China.

(2) The joint administration of the Chinese Eastern Railway on an equality of conditions and the abolition of all obstacles to the sovereign rights of China within the region attached to the Chinese Eastern Railway.

(3) The recognition of Mongolia as a territory belonging to China and the withdrawal therefrom of all Russian troops, the exact date of the evacuation and matters relating hereto to be decided upon at a conference of the representatives of the two countries.

(4) The abandonment by Russia of her extraterritorial rights as well as her concessions in China, reserving to herself the right to hold property.

(5) The settlement of the question concerning the right of navigation to be effected on a basis of equality.

(6) The organization of a commission which is to readjust boundaries of the two countries.

(7) The conclusion of a treaty of commerce and navigation on the basis of the most-favoured-nation clause.

(8) The abandonment of the Boxer indemnity due to Russia and the disbursement of the money is to be discussed at a joint meeting of the representatives of the two countries.

(9) All the old treaties and agreements concluded between the two countries are to be replaced by the new treaty to be entered into according to the spirit of the proclamations made by the Soviet Government in 1919 and 1920.

It is inferred that the foregoing news has emanated from the representatives of Soviet Russia.—Eastern News Agency.

MONGOLIAN SOVIET REPUBLIC.

Tokio, Feb. 18.

A Moscow report says:—M. Karakhkan is preparing to issue a statement on the subject of a Mongolian Soviet Republic. Though Mongols are averse to Soviet troops being stationed in Mongolia yet Bolshevists have on several occasions been requested to continue the military occupation. M. Karakhan protested to China, recently, about the support given to the rebels in Siberia, saying that if any White army should enter China, the Red army will attack them even within Chinese borders.

The negotiations to conclude a Russo-Mongolian Commercial treaty are still in progress.

The Moscow Government is paying much attention to Mongolian horses as there is need of supplying horses to the Russian cavalry forces.—Eastern News Agency.

MILITARY EXPENSES FOR CHIHLI TROOPS

Peking, Feb. 15.

It is reported in semi-official circles that Marshal Wu Pei-fu has telegraphed to the Government requesting one month's military expenses for the Chihli troops in Loyang, Hunan and Szechuen. The request has been referred to the Cabinet for consideration.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

China and the Soviet: The Matter of Recognition: Gold Franc Question

Peking, Feb. 13.

There is much speculation as to the action which the Chinese Government will take in response to the Note from the Eight Powers on the subject of gold payment of the balance of the Boxer Indemnity. In certain quarters it is freely asserted that China will ask that the dispute be referred to an International Court of Arbitration, but inquiries addressed to official sources elicit the reply that such a statement is premature. A special meeting of the Cabinet had been scheduled for yesterday, but owing to the day being a public holiday the meeting did not take place. The Cabinet, however, will meet to-morrow, when, it is understood, consideration will be given to how best to have the matter discussed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 16.

A group of professors of the Government University have written to Dr. Wellington Koo and Dr. C. T. Wang expressing the opinion that the time has come for China to recognize the Soviet Government.

The Diplomats' reply to the Waichiaopu on the gold franc question was again discussed by the Cabinet at the regular meeting this morning. No decision was reached.

Mr. Wu Ching-lian's supporters are striving to oust the Administrative Committee of the House of Representatives, which is carrying on affairs connected with the Speakership, with a view to paving the way for the return of Mr. Wu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Feb. 18.

Dr. C. W. Wang who returned Peking on the 17th instant has told a Chinese journalist that he intends to open negotiations with Russia first and the question of the recognition will be considered later.—Eastern News Agency.

PARLIAMENT TO BE DISSOLVED.

Peking, Feb. 19.

The semi-official organ, the "Ching Pao," says that there is a probability of the Government taking measures to terminate the present session of Parliament, which the President is entitled to do under the Constitution as the business for which Parliament itself extended its term of office has now been completed. The paper goes on to say that the Government does not see any likelihood of presenting any bills which cannot await the inauguration of a new Parliament.

Commenting on the matter, the journal says that the present Parliament does not aid the Administration, but, rather, is hampering it by its undue severity towards official measures.

Feb. 19.

It is understood that Admiral Wu Yu-lin, the Minister of Communications, who left for Loyang and Nanking this morning, is charged with the mission of removing the friction between Gen. Wu Pei-fu and Gen. Chi Hsieh-yuan over the report that General Wu had offered Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang the Vice-Presidency, to which Gen. Chi aspires.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Some Official Appointments

Peking, Feb. 17.

Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan has recommended Mr. Wei Tsung-lien, Superintendent of Chinese Customs at Ichang, for appointment as Minister abroad. Mr. Wei was formerly in the Consular Service. Marshal Hsiao reports that he has appointed Mr. Chen Chieh, former Commissioner of Foreign Affairs at Wuchang, as his diplomatic adviser.

The Ministry of Commerce has granted the resignation of Mr Chin Juai-chieh, Chief of the Trade Marks Bureau, and has appointed in his stead Mr. Li Cheng. The appointment was gazetted to-day.

Admiral Wu Yu-lin will shortly go to Nanking. It is understood that he intends to consult Marshal Chi and Admiral Tu Hsi-kuai regarding the appointment of Admiral Yen Shu-teh, Commander of the Tsingtao Squadron, as Commissioner of Coast Defence at Pehhai (Chihli Gulf). It is expected that the appointment will be announced on Admiral Wu's return from Nanking.

It is reported to-day that General Li Chi-chen, Chief of Staff to Marshal Wu Pei-fu and Civil Governor of Honan, will succeed General Chang Fu-lai as Tuli of Honan, retaining concurrently the post of Civil Governor.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Gold Francs Issue: Delay in Reply to Diplomatic Body: Friction in the Navy

Peking, Feb. 18.

A group of Mr. Wu Ching-lien's supporters in the House of Representatives, headed by Mr. Lin Shou-hsien, have brought forward an interpellation to the Government asking when the Government intends to reply to the Eight Protocol Powers regarding the gold franc issue, pointing out that the Diplomats' Note was received eight days ago, and urging that the reply be sent within the next five days. The interpellation asks for a definite statement on the attitude of the Government.

It appears that friction has arisen between Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei and Admiral Wen Shu-teh, commander of the Tsingtao squadron, over the occupation of the naval office at Chefoo by marines belonging to the Tsingtao squadron. It is stated in naval circles that, when the squadron reached Chefoo, marines were landed and occupied the naval office, and complaint is made that this was done without notice being given of their intention to do so or receiving authority to occupy the premises. On learning what had been done, Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei became angry, and it is believed that the object of Admiral Wu Yu-lin's contemplated journey to Nanking is to mollify Admiral Tu. The date of Admiral Wu's departure has not yet been announced.

MILITARY COMMISSIONERSHIP.

Feb. 21.

The Cabinet this morning decided to abolish the post of High Military Commissioner for Amoy and Changchow, at present held by Gen. Tsang Chim-ping, creating instead a Military Commissionership of Amoy, to which Gen. Cheng Yi is appointed.

Chinese circles believe that a conference, which will open shortly at Loyang, will lead to important developments. The subjects for discussion at the conference will be mediation between the Naval Leaders, plans for the election of a Vice-President, co-operation in the forthcoming Parliamentary election and plans for the proposed expedition against Canton.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A CUSTOMS CONFERENCE

Peking, Feb. 12.

It is reported on good authority that the Government has decided to hold a conference to discuss the question of the International Conference regarding Chinese Customs dues. Premier Sun will preside and Dr. W.W. Yen, Dr. Koo, Mr. Kao Ling-wei, Mr. Wang Ko-ming and Admiral Tsai will be present. It is expected that a regular commission will be formed which will meet periodically.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Marshal Tuan Chi-jui will celebrate his 60th birthday next month. Both President Tsao Kun and Marshal Wu Pei-fu are planning to have some distinctive honour conferred on him.

Still more fighting 'planes have been added to Marshal Chang Tso-lin's Air Force. A score of aeroplanes of the latest French design have just arrived in Mukden from Tientsin, these having been ordered by the younger Gen. Chang (Chang Hsiao-ling), who is Director of the Mukden Aviation Bureau.

pose to be insular. Every nation is in varying degrees and in the case of America the immensity of the land, the exciting preoccupations of its development and its geographical remoteness from Europe, which only the past two decades have really lessened and only the war obliterated, must guide men's minds in channels wholly aloof from European affairs. And just as the British Government was always a stage behind public thought in the conduct of the war, so American officials would appear to be behind the best national opinion in breaking with the tradition of insularity. It would be useless to deny that there is a large section of Americans who believe that their country's duty is to follow her own destinies in "splendid isolation." But there is, if not a larger, certainly a more influential section which recognizes with growing conviction that the boundaries of country and language are largely artificial, that the world is but one family, in which no member can be satisfied "to allow his brother to go to the devil in his own way", and that the independence which Washington proclaimed, the freedom which he inspired and the strong moral sense which he bequeathed through the form of the Constitution were but the means of fitting the American people for the great part which they must sooner or later take in helping the spread of those same virtues and privileges throughout the globe. The average American is certainly anything but ungenerous as a thousand benefactions eloquently prove, but he hates to be "done" or as he himself would say to "have one put over on him"; and he is rather afraid that that is what Europe just now is trying to do. Let him once be reassured on that point, and as we said above millions of him need no reassurance, and his help will be as lavishly forthcoming as it was in the war.

Owing to failing health, Mr. Gilbert Lyall, has retired on the December 31 from the position of London manager of the Union Insurance Co. of Canton, after 42 years' service with the society, and its associated office, the North China Insurance Co. Mr. Lyall's passing from business life is a matter of extreme regret among colleagues in the underwriting rooms of the offices and at Lloyd's. He was active in the preparation of a number of important policy clauses, in which his wide knowledge of legal questions was found invaluable. Mr. Lyall is a brother of Mr. L. A. Lyall, Commissioner of Customs, Shanghai.

Lord Knutsford, who has just succeeded in raising £160,000 for the London Hospital within eight weeks, is a person of infinite resource, and it may be added, of infinite assiduity, in getting subscriptions for that institution. It is related that the late Mr. Kennedy Jones once put an advertisement in the "Times" asking someone to find a fortnight's employment for an honest, hard-working man badly in need of a job. The man was promptly engaged by Lord Knutsford, and given the job of calling every day on Mr. Kennedy Jones and asking him to subscribe to the London Hospital —which benefited accordingly. Still, even the "Prince of Beggars" occasionally comes a cropper. "Some people," writes Lord Knutsford, "are so circumstanced as to be impregnable to all attacks. To a lady whose subscription was considerably in arrear I wrote: 'I hope I am not to think of you as a lost sheep.' That letter came back endorsed: 'Please do not think the lady you wrote to has been dead some years.'"

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Case of Pirmasens

The wild climax of the German Separatist movement which has just been reached at Pirmasens in the Bavarian Palatinate is likely to appeal to people in very different ways according to how they judge the European situation. It was certainly a peculiar outburst. A Separatist movement was talked about in German Rhineland as long as four years ago, and the spread of its principles to the Pirmasens and setting on foot a Palatinate was as natural an event as could be conceived. A few months back the movement took tangible shape, but it excited apparently no more interest in the parts of the country affected than would a political controversy in England. The more curious it is, therefore, to find infuriated mobs suddenly turning upon the Separa- regular man-hunt. Those people who are invariably suspicious of everything that Germanv does will doubtless say that the outbreak of the populace was engineered from headquarters, and it is interesting to note a delicate innuendo in the French Wireless where it says that former German officers of the counter-espionage service had a hand in it. Should this prove to be the case, it may well be put down to a skilful and certainly successful scheme of the German authorities to bring to an end an inconvenient movement. On the other hand one able British investigator, Mr. R. H. Clive, has to all intents and purposes corroborated the view that the whole Separatist movement was artificial, and apparently he believed it to be fostered from the outside. This being so, the presence of the Separatist agitators would prove an irritation to the communities where they stationed themselves, and irritation would readily increase to anger if not worse when the people recognized the menace to their peace which they imported. And when a community is fully aroused, it is only one step to mob law.

Respect of Treaties

One does not altogether envy Herr Von Hoesch his task of opening up the German Embassy in Paris, and the awkwardness that he would naturally feel was probably in nowise diminished by the punctilious but terrible politeness with which the presentation of his credentials at the Elysée was surrounded. Nor did President Millerand fail to improve the shining hour. But apropos of respect for treaties, one point of view may be emphasized which is too commonly ignored by those who find them inconvenient. A treaty is none the less binding because it is as the catchphrase goes "extorted by force." Two nations go to war with one another, and at a certain point of the encounter, one says to the other, "If you have had enough, I am willing to leave off, if you in turn will promise to do certain things." Which the defeated nation accordingly promises or does not promise, according to whether it feels able to keep up the struggle. But having promised and having, in return, been permitted to get up again and metaphorically dust its clothes, it is morally bound to perform to the utmost of its ability. Whether the terms are harsh or not, whether the war was just or unjust, is beside the point. It is extremely regrettable that force counts for more in the world than moral suasion and everything that mankind can do to eliminate the rule of the one and instate the other should be done. War is a ghastly, hateful thing. But the fact that it has preceded a treaty does not make the promises given in that treaty by the defeated side any the less binding and the morality of the world is not improved by pretending otherwise.

Shanghai's Neutrality

Bellicose rumours are again in the air. War preparation are reported in North China and in our midst. Chang Tso-lin is to go inside the Great Wall and Chêkiang is to attack Nanking. Hangchow and Nanking are preparing for the fray. Plenty of money is to be wasted by bankrupt China; trade is to be stopped; all that a few Tuchuns may enjoy a little outdoor sport. In all these plots and preparations Shanghai has a very vital interest, knowing as she does how they will affect the well-being of the population here, both foreign and Chinese. The trade of the port has suffered severely because of wars remote from here, and in the same way the rumours which have been abroad for months now with scarce a cessation have badly undermined confidence in business circles. Needless to say the present state of affairs will very quickly put an end to the dreams of a prosperous new cycle, and if things come to their worst there will be disaster, especially if the environs of Shanghai are affected by warfare. It is a well-known fact that the Chinese merchants and public bodies of Shanghai are strongly opposed to becoming mixed up in any of the political squabbles of the country, and last year they greatly deplored the coming of a section of Peking's Parliament, some going so far as to protest and ask the M.P.'s to take themselves off. They will feel even more strongly should the armies of rival Tuchuns proceed to manœuvre in the near vicinity, and their views ought to be brought prominently before these leaders. They know that protests against distant wars are unavailing, but, as in the case of the Parliament, their demand that this district should be kept neutral ought to carry weight. If it does not, it may prove to be somebody else's business to secure that neutrality and it will probably be done.

The Stay-In Strike

A shipping man has shed some light upon the manner in which a "stay-in" strike such as London proposes will succeed in paralyzing shipping. The men at present receive a weekly wage for working a certain number of hours per day, but as anybody acquainted with great docks knows, they are constantly called upon to work overtime so that ships may sail according to their time-table. The "stay-in" strikers now propose to work only their regular hours and no overtime, and in the circumstances it will readily be seen that within a very few days harbours will become congested and all sailings will be late. Accordingly first of all the shipowners will begin to lose money, and then in cases where goods are waiting to be but have not been loaded on to railway wagons merchants will have to pay demurrage as well as warehouse costs, and so also lose money. The reply to such a strike should naturally be a lock-out, but in such a case the master stevedores or the dock owners (harbour trustees or whatever their name is) would render themselves liable to shipowners, merchants and everybody else for damages for delay. The strike clause would not operate in such a case. A very powerful weapon seems to have been forged in the "stay-in strike," and obviously the only shield against it is a combine of dock-owners, shippers and shipowners, perhaps even railway companies. Probably it would be welcome, for if people dislike a strike, they will dislike a canny strike a great deal more, and this is what the last case amounts to.

A Belgian Father's Death

On Christmas Day, in the Belgian Catholic Mission at Hokiao, near Suiyuan, Mongolia, the Rev. Father Achille Soenen was murdered, being shot in his own house. Through Chinese news agencies various accounts of the tragedy have been published, the most amazing being that the Rev. Father was shot because he had been engaged in trafficking in arms. While the sheer improbability of this version, even although it received some sort of Chinese official sanction, would suggest itself to all foreigners and most Chinese, the friends of the murdered priest are anxious that the matter should be cleared up once and for all, so that no hint of scandal may remain. Briefly put, the case was as follows. After supper on Christmas Day Father Soenen and his companion Father Leemans were sitting at home, when four unknown men entered the building and asked for medicine. Father Soenen went to his dispensary cupboard to get it, and not suspecting anything Father Leemans strolled out of doors. The latter suddenly heard gunshots, but being without arms realized the impossibility of doing anything to assist his colleague, and decided that the only course was concealment. When he was able to emerge Father Soenen was in the mission garden, dying, and all he was able to say was "Gloria Deo." Investigation set on foot proved that the murder was committed by disbanded soldiers who were on a looting expedition; they had come a distance of 90 li, and apparently were intent on securing some arms kept in the mission for its defence. The fact that there were these arms has been utilized by Chinese officials to produce the most defamatory statements, the principal being that Father Soenen was murdered by his own Christian followers because he was engaged in trafficking in arms. The case, of course, is that not only must these outlying missions arm themselves to ward off the attacks of bandits and soldiers, but in some cases fortifications have had to be constructed and the Christian Chinese used as sentries. Considering that missions have been sacked and missionaries carried off, the need for such measures is transparent, and so bad is the case that Msgr. van Dyck has called in the most exposed of the missionaries. All of which makes the recent libel more hideous.

Pro Patria

The suggestion made by Major C. M. Manners at the annual general meeting of the United Services Association, to the effect that the Association should take some steps to entertain British children on Empire Day, in order to bring home to them the reality of the British Empire and to instil in their minds further feelings of patriotism, an increased appreciation of what the Empire stands for, a realization of what it means to them, and a keener understanding of what the men of the Empire fought for and its women suffered for during the years 1914/1918, is one worthy of consideration; and it is sincerely to be hoped that the United Services Association will submit to the Empire Day Committee (on which the Association is not represented), recommendations and suggestions on the lines indicated by Major Manners. In this matter of a national day, when special efforts should be made to bring home to the minds of our children the might, the majesty and the ideals of the Empire, we Britons in China appear to have been, comparatively, somewhat lax, if not actually neglectful. It should be borne in mind that there is no single school in Shanghai at which the children are exclusively British, and in this matter at least the British children here appear to be at a disadvantage in comparison with those at Home and in the Colonies, where instruction and enlightenment on the Empire are made much of. Suitable arrangements in regard to Shanghai need be neither difficult nor elaborate and, as Major Manners so pertinently remarked, no day would be more suited to the purpose than Empire Day which, year after year, is attaining a deeper and a wider significance, both in Great Britain and in the Colonies. The subject will no doubt receive the careful consideration of the four British patriotic societies (St. Andrew's, St. George's, St. Patrick's and St. David's) which, we believe we are correct in stating, make themselves responsible for Empire Day celebrations in Shanghai.

The Pilferage of Cargo

In connexion with the British Chamber of Commerce discussions last week we published a leading article on the subject of the great evil of cargo pilferage within the Harbour, and in it mention was made of a case in which laodahs, brokers and loaders carried out a wholesale theft, disappearing with a consignment of cargo valued at over Tls. 6,000. The statement was made that neither boat nor cargo had been heard of since. A reader points out that this does not accord with the facts, and inquires we have made in consequence elicit an interesting story of successful work carried out by the River Police. It transpires that six days after the theft the River Police with the aid of the Woosung Constabulary arrested the laodah of the missing boat, four loafers and an ex-laodah. They also traced another boatman together with more than half the stolen goods to the village of Yangkoung, the man being arrested and this portion of the stolen goods recovered. Further stolen cargo was traced to the island of Tsungming and a receiver there was arrested, the property recovered being restored to the owner. Altogether the River Police arrested eight principals and two lesser ones connected with the robbery, and recovered approximately Tls. 5,000 worth of the stolen property as well as the cargo boat. Naturally we are anxious to give full credit to the River Police for this fine piece of work and to congratulate Superintendent Mellows and his staff. This, however, does not alter the principal aspect of the case with which we dealt. However hard the Police work they are not a sufficiently large body to deal adequately with the evil stalking abroad through the Harbour, and the fact that it is possible for a boat and Tls. 6,000 worth of cargo to disappear for a week must strengthen the case for better protection in the port.

Japan's Labour Party

The success of the Labour movement in Great Britain in placing Mr. Ramsay Macdonald in power, is apparently exercising a profound influence in Japan, and it is by no means unlikely that a similar influence may spread elsewhere. The newspaper "Yomiuri" indicates the change in sentiment which has come about thereby, and which can only be described as extremely interesting and important. During the years it has worked as a political entity, Labour in Japan has been in the position of seeing little immediate hope of success attending its aims, and urged on by international organizations has steadily been drifting to communism and even anarchism. In time to prevent such a disaster three events have taken place. First of all there is a general movement towards manhood suffrage in Japan itself, and the moment this comes about the aspirations of Labour will have a much greater chance of being fulfilled than ever before. In the next place it has been seen how the middle classes have co-operated with the working classes in the last British election in returning Labour candidates and how the Liberal Party is giving a large measure of support to Labour. The third point is that Labour is now in power in Britain. Here is a very important success in Great Britain attained by purely constitutional means, and it has had the effect of diverting the attention of the Japanese Labour Party from Communism and worse and to raise the hope in their breasts that they also may finally achieve a similar success by similar means. If this fresh outlook on affairs can be continued and extended the advent of a Labour Cabinet in Britain will have proved an important element in the peaceful progress of the world.

Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan and Mr. Han Kuo-chun (Military and Civil Governors of Kiangsu) gave a dinner on Saturday evening in honour of the foreign members of the Nanking community, the occasion being the Spring Festival day. Governor-General Chi acted as toastmaster and in a few words expressed his friendship for the foreigners and his happy relations with them ever since he had entered into a political life. There were about 30 guests in all. All regretted the absence of Mr. J. T. Pratt, C.M.G., H.M. Consul-General who went to Shanghai on very important business and to attend the opening of the Building of the "Tzelinpao."

although it undoubtedly does very useful work in this respect. Realizing this position, as motor-car owners should do, the suggestion has been put before us that a combination of the insurance companies and an institution such as the Automobile Association might come to an arrangement to employ watchmen under police supervision to guard the places where cars are usually parked, and this is an idea which might prove fruitful. It is stated that in view of the very great number of motor thefts in the United States, insurance companies there are now only insuring against third-party risks, leaving out the other accident and theft clauses, and as this so greatly emphasizes the accessibility of the car to the purposes of the thief, owners here may take a hint from it. As yet cars cannot be transported out of the Shanghai district to elsewhere—at least no case has been reported—but cars being shipped from here to Hankow and other ports by steamer have been stripped of everything movable, so that when one has to be thus carried it is found advisable to detach all movable parts and send them separately. In view of the state of affairs noted the opinion has been expressed in insurance circles that sooner rather than later rates must be increased in Shanghai, and it seems a fair thing to suggest that some system, such as that of watchmen, or a better one if it can be devised, should be inaugurated by those interested in an effort to deal with the evil. If these latest thefts mean that we are in for another bad spell of pilferage, now is certainly the time to take action.

THE COLLAPSE OF THE FRANC

Feb. 21.

There will be plenty of people to say, of the decline of the franc, "we told you so," and with the gathering momentum of a five-franc drop since yesterday, to prophesy still deeper abysses. For once a currency begins to crumble, as the world well knows, there is no telling what will become of it. The greatest anxiety will be felt as to whether the Government's financial reform—twenty per cent. increase of taxation, special machinery to prevent evasions and catch profiteers and the right to impose economies in expenditure by decree—will stop the rot. The difficulty in trying to form an opinion is the untrustworthy nature of news from France. The wireless service is, almost shamelessly, official propaganda. Agency telegrams, if not actually censored, strike one as being subject to very clearly understood limitations. On several occasions in the past twelve months M. Poincaré's policy in the Ruhr has been submitted to the Chamber's approval and always has emerged triumphantly. The last occasion was on January 18 when the vote of confidence in the Government was passed by 115 to 151. Yet only three weeks later an article by M. Sauerwein in the "Matin," believed to have been officially inspired, caused general sensation by advocating radical recasting of the Ruhr policy. The inspiration was denied next day. But there was enough in the opposition press on this subject and in the strenuous resistance to the Government's new financial measures to suggest that, whatever an obedient majority may vote in the Palais Bourbon, the country is very uneasy.

It is to this uneasiness and not to any of the normal causes seen in other countries that the franc's collapse appears attributable. Industrially France is reported to be most active, enviably so indeed from a British point of view; the occupation of the Ruhr has not brought in what was expected, but at least according to Government claims it has paid for itself and even netted a surplus of Frs. 506 millions; and the paper currency has not been notably increased. The explanation then of the fall of the franc must be looked for elsewhere. In the opinion of good judges it is due to the fact that the French people, particularly the peasant class, are losing confidence. Instead of hoarding francs as they have done from time immemorial, they are turning them into things more stable as quickly as they can, purchasing land, dollars and sterling. And meanwhile the bourgeoisie of the cities, the vast army of people on fixed incomes, must sell what they can to meet the increased cost of living. We are told that Government loans do not meet with success and even the advocate of a lottery loan, to take the place of increased taxation, when advancing his proposal in the Chamber felt bound to allow for the possibility of its not being filled. In such circumstances something decidedly more fundamental than fiscal changes and the closing of the Bourse de Commerce to prevent daily quotations from spreading a panic are needed.

There can be no understanding French politics and policy which does not recognize that the antagonism between French and Germans is as racial as that between cat and dog, as old as history and probably older. And the motive of all M. Poincaré's action is national self-preservation. While France still has the upper hand over Germany she endeavours to assure herself as far ahead as it is humanly possible to foresee against Germany's resurgence. She has bolstered up Poland with money and munitions and allied herself with Czecho-Slovakia; and thus although the proposed loan to Rumania is not to come off, she endeavours to make sure of the Little Entente—Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Poland. Northwards, through Belgium she reaches out for an understanding with Holland and Denmark and the new Baltic republics Latvia, Esthonia and Lithuania. It is a chain of alliances and ententes from North Sea to Black Sea to ring round Germany. Again, her answer to British complaints regarding war debts of which not even the interest has been paid would probably be something like this: "It is true that I am lending money to Poland and elsewhere instead of paying you. But I I have not the least intention of repudiating my debt. I will pay you when I can. But as you and America disappointed me of the guarantee against unprovoked assault by Germany that I was led to expect, I must first make myself secure by other means. It is obviously wiser for you to wait patiently. For if I go under, you will never get anything." The logic of this position from a French point of view is irresistible. But as suggesting any prospects of an outlet from the present intolerable deadlock in the Ruhr it is not promising. This is the problem, the basis of all differences between France and Britain, that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has set himself to solve and it is easier to find solutions in newspaper interviews than in fact.

BRITAIN'S AERIAL DEFENCE

Feb. 22.

The doctrine enunciated this week by the British Under-Secretary for Air cannot fail to create grave misgivings in the minds of a very large section of the populace. The weakness of our Air Force is made the subject of earnest representations to the Government, and apparently the Under-Secretary would dismiss the matter with nothing further than a reference to Labour's academic theory of peace and war. To the Under-Secretary's way of thinking the Great War knocked the bottom out of the time-honoured and tested maxim, Si vis pacem para bello, and because he quite rightly concludes that the nations which made the greatest preparation for war ultimately got most of it, he is not alarmed if our defences fall below the margin of safety which is called for by military experts. To replace this margin he offers a pious hope of aerial disarmament and something in the shape of a belief in the moral regeneration of nations. The doctrine scares us, for if Labour believes that the world is in a pacific frame of mind to-day the average man certainly does not, and has good grounds for his opinion. The practical position which Britain to-day has to consider is that France has a thousand first-line aeroplanes against a hundred possessed by Great Britain, and what we want to know is whether we are justified in allowing this disparity in strength to continue.

In a case like the present outside opinion is often extremely useful, and we have a very candid view of the situation presented by Italy which may show us how we stand in a way that a great many of us do not usually envisage. Italy may, of course, be altogether wrong, but as an outsider, though an interested one, she must be given credit for seeing more of the game than the participants. The Italian view is that Great Britain would long ago have taken up a very different attitude with regard to German reparations than her late mild and indecisive one, only that she was afraid of breaking with France because of the latter's predominance in the air. Italian observers seem to think that France could almost dictate to us, and that as matters stand we could only feebly protest and at the best pursue a policy leading to nowhere in particular. In the strictly military sense the Italians are probably right, but it is hardly the sort of view which would appeal to the British public. For four and a half years we became a military nation, but on the whole we seem to have employed the time since then in forgetting the principles we learned. While, therefore, the public would probably pooh-pooh the theory just mentioned, politicians of experience realize how it affects them and how it ties their hands, and hence the concern of the Conservative Party over the state of our Air Force. It is altogether repugnant to the average Briton to suggest a breach with France, but our politicians and military advisers have an altogether different outlook to take on the matter, and if they do not prepare for eventualities they will be criminally at fault. The moral regeneration of nations, thus ensuring universal peace, may come sooner than we generally anticipate, but as a factor in the defence of any country to-day it leaves much to be taken on trust. A little bit of Cromwell is not to be despised, and his "Trust in God and keep your powder dry" seems perfectly sound advice to-day.

When it comes to this question of aerial defence the Labour Government shows no more originality of thought than any of its predecessors. It is heading towards the same state of unpreparedness that has been characteristic of British Governments from time immemorial. Moreover, Mr. Leach, the Under-Secretary for Air, confuses two great military considerations, and this makes matters ever so much worse. He says that all the nations that prepared most for war got the most war, but he omits the corollary of this, that the nations who found themselves uninsured for peace were almost as badly off. It is one thing to prepare forces with the idea of an offensive war, and a very different one to regard them as an insurance policy, and make provision accordingly but not beyond. This is all that the Conservatives are asking to-day, and their demand is an absolutely proper one. Labour replies with talk of an aerial disarmament conference, but how would Britain with her hundred first-line machines be able to contend at the council table with a nation possessing a thousand? There could be little hope of any substantial agreement on a proportion likely to ensure world peace. Then from the Cabinet comes the argument that even if we increase our Air Force we shall not be able to stop raids on our territory. That is perfectly true, but given an adequate number of fighting machines we shall be ready to carry the greater part of the war into the enemy's territory and so employ him there that he will have less time for operations in ours. We ought to be in a position to do this, but apparently the Labour Cabinet prefers depending upon what are after all untried theories. We in China should note these debates and indications of policy with more than ordinary interest, for if one branch of the Services is being treated in this manner, the others, on which we reply much more out here, may find themselves following suit.

Despite his looks Lao Yan-jen who was recently executed appears to have dominated his bandit armies. Mrs. Kilen upon her release from captivity stated that she had seen him ride up and down the line many times urging his 20,000 followers on and keeping them on the alert against the troops.

We learn from the Chinese press that various labour organizations in Shanghai—among them the Spinners' and Weavers' Union, the Hunan Labour Bureau, the Hupeh Labour Society, the Printers' Guild, and the Beef and Mutton Dealers' Union—are arranging a reception in honour of M. Karakhan, the Soviet representative, shortly expected to arrive in Shanghai. The Beef and Mutton merchants should be able to contribute substantially towards international amenities.

THE BIRTHDAY AND AFTERWARD

Feb. 23.

The occasion of Washington's Birthday must certainly not pass without expression of those convey, on the British comhearty felicitations which it is our pleasant duty annually to munity's behalf, to our American fellow residents. The weather yesterday was almost as bleak as February knows how to be; but we do not think that this made any difference to the day's festivities; and at least as regards the ball, whatever argument there may have been over the choice of locality, there were no two opinions as to the evening's being a splendid success. It is natural that the Americans should exceed almost every other people in the enthusiasm with which they celebrate the national fête. When Washington is spoken of as "the Father of his country" the ancestry is near enough to make them feel a personal share both in his distinction and in all the national development that has followed since his declaration of independence. One of our correspondents to-day—may we without breach of confidence say that he is not British—recalls a certain episode from Washington's diary which appears slightly at variance with the cherry-tree story. But the incident related merely gives us a new appreciation of the humanity of Washington's character. There can assuredly be no reflexion on its essential integrity.

That characteristic, as reflected in the democracy of the state that he fathered, is finely illustrated to-day in the so-called oil lease scandal. To a superficial view that scandal does not present a very agreeable picture. We are not prejudging the case. But, at any rate, the charge is that a man in high position has been using his office to feather his nest, and everyday's telegrams serve to cast suspicion in some new direction. But the wide publicity given to the Teapot Dome story and the burning interest taken in it by the American people are the finest possible testimony to the national consciousness and the vigour of American democracy. In China there is also a democracy so-called. But it is unhappily notorious that officials look upon public property and national resources as their own perquisite, treating the masses of the people as their servants and enriching themselves with impunity: and there is no one with courage and determination enough to challenge their actions. Until the people of China take a greater interest in their own government and its activities and insist that the component members of that government shall remember that they exercise a national stewardship, there can be no democracy worthy of the name. In America, the mere suspicion that a public servant has betrayed his trust rouses every citizen, whose whole instinct is, with the French king, that l'état c'est moi, and he insists that there shall be the fullest possible sifting of the whole scandal, no matter what public washing of dirty linen it may involve—the more public indeed, the better—no matter whose head may fall.

Signs are not wanting that this keen sense of propriety in domestic affairs is beginning to extend also to international. It is not in the least surprising if the American people are dis

MR. BESSEL'S INJURY

Peking, Feb. 16.

The condition of Mr. Bessel, the traffic inspector of the Peking-Mukden line who was assaulted on February 1 at Fengtai station by a party of Chinese soldiers, is proving to be more serious than it was at first thought and it will probably be necessary to bring him to Peking for an operation shortly. There seems to be grave danger of a permanent injury.

The British Legation is pressing for the arrest of Colonel Chen, whose vicious kick inflicted the principal injury, but he seems to be protected by the militarists, over whom the Ministry of War's control is only nominal.

The Waichiaopu is doing all that is possible, but so far has met with no success.

Later.

It appears that Colonel Chen is the Hupeh likin collector and that the Government has instructed Gen. Hsiao Yao-nan to arrest him.

It is now officially stated that a soldier inflicted the kick and that he has already been arrested and is awaiting trial at Peking.

Feb. 17.

Three doctors examined Mr. Bessel to-day and decided that he should come to Peking for an operation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 19.

The British Legation is pressing hard for the arrest of Colonel Chen, in connexion with the assault on Mr. Bessel, the traffic inspector, at Fengtai station on February 1.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PRESBYTERIANS AND NANKING SEMINARY

From a Correspondent.

Missionary readers of the "North-China Daily News" will be interested in a recent meeting at Chinkiang of the North Kiangsu Mission, one of the two large missions of the American Southern Presbyterian church, the other being the Mid-China Mission. Your correspondent did not attend the sessions nor has he before him a written and exact copy of the actions taken, but has heard them at length from an intimate friend who was present in voting capacity.

The specific question before the N. K. Mission was its attitude toward Nanking Seminary, a Union institution which has for some years been a storm centre. This school of theology was founded about 20 years ago by the Northern and Southern Presbyterians, and enlarged eight or 10 years later, admitting to the board of control the Disciples and the Northern and Southern Methodists. Several of these denominations have more than one mission in this part of China, each of which has its representative on the Board of Managers, which at present consists of eight or more foreign members and about the same number from the various branches of the Chinese church.

MODERNIST v. CONSERVATIVE.

Your correspondent is not in possession of all the facts, but as far as he has been able to learn there is not now nor has there been any friction along denominational lines and beliefs as such. The conflict has come along the lines of Modernism versus Conservatism, a problem with which nearly every denomination the world over is more or less concerned to-day. While the institution was founded as out-and-out Conservative, Modernistic teaching began to creep in several years ago and towards its eradication this controversy has been aimed. And if I am correctly informed, the effort of the Presbyterians has been largely successful, the present teaching staff on the field being acceptable even to the Conservatives. What the present row is about is not easy to explain or understand without going deeper into the merits of the controversy than is permissible here but briefly may be stated as follows:

While the North Kiangsu Mission has investigated and "sustained" the examinations of all on the field they claim that nothing is really settled. That the objectionable men have not been removed by Board action but by the accident of sickness and furlough and acceptance of other work and no safeguards against their return or others of like faith can be secured from the present Board of Managers. Believing that the battle is certain to be opened again and the same long continued fight ensue, the North Kiangsu Mission by an overwhelming majority voted to withdraw from the institution.

But there are two sides to every question. Other denominations in the union declare their right to put into the institution men of their own choice. They point out that at present as from the start the school has been dominated by the Southern Presbyterians, the latter having now five men out of 11 on the faculty and it is nothing more than fair that the others should have freedom in selecting their men. They claim that they have conceded generously all that they could be expected to concede and naturally feel that the North Kiangsu action is precipitate and unfair.

A SHARP DISSENSION.

But there is another angle to this affair of even greater interest to those nearby. John Doe's neighbours are interested in knowing whether he is a Republican or Democrat, Unionist or Labourite, but they are infinitely more interested in the smashing of the crockery and the thud, of the rolling pin that proceed from the Doe docicile in the efforts of John and Mary Doe to prevail the one against the other in a family argument as to how to keep the home happy. And the present moment finds the two Southern Presbyterian Missions utterly unable to agree.

The Mid-China Mission at its meeting passed a resolution of confidence in the Seminary.

Mid-China asks North Kiangsu to have a joint meeting on the whole subject in order to present to the home courts a united report.

For many the centre of interest has shifted from the Seminary to the conflict between these sister missions. A decision on the case can only be reached by the General Assembly of their church which meets in May. One may not agree with North Kiangsu, but it must be admitted that she has furnished the "ingredients" for a perfectly lovely scrap and it would seem that somebody has either to win or lose in a clear cut manner.

JAPAN AND THE SOVIET

Tokio, Feb. 19.

Japan's policy vis-à-vis Russia remains unchanged. She is desirous of resuming full relations with Russia provided outstanding questions are settled, according to a statement by Baron Matsui, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in reply to an interview with M. Karakhan by Japanese correspondents in Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Moscow telegram of interest and importance, if authentic, was published in "New Shanghai Life" on Wednesday. The message stated that the Soviet authorities have presented a Note to the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok stating that in consequence of the rejection of Soviet proposals for the resumption of normal relations between the two countries, the Soviet Government sees no reason why Japanese officials should remain in territory of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics. Moreover, in view of their being opposed in principle to mutual agreement, and in the absence of judicial connexion, their presence in the Republic is unjustifiable.

THE Draft Restricting Channels on the Lower Yangtze, Woosung-Hankow, are reported to be in a very good condition, and with the present extraordinary rise of the river, a vessel of 18-feet draft can reach Hankow with safety, a somewhat unusual occurrence for this time of the year.

IMITATING FOREIGN GOODS

One Reason for Shansi's Sudden Prosperity? Customers Asked to Buy Alleged "Native" Wares

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiangchow, Sha., Feb. 6.

Everywhere there are new native manufacturies, but they are of the kind that seldom require new premises. Goods of various kinds are being produced for local use in out-of-the way corners. Many of these products are imitations of foreign goods, and "Support native industry" is the motto.

The improvement of a rough kind of delf ware is also becoming a big industry in the hills and goods are being manufactured on a scale which promises considerable development of the industries concerned. What a contrast to conditions a few years ago! This province is surely stumbling along the path of progress despite many mistakes and obstacles.

People say that the collection of small accounts this year was easier than it has been for many years. Ready money even if only the paper notes now gaining favour seemed available everywhere. Despite losses by old-fashioned firms on account largely of being out of touch with the export market conditions at the coast, there is an air of prosperity in all the cities.

ANTI-OPIUM MEASURES.

The Anti-Narcotic Society is much in evidence. There is no doubt that the promoters of this society are actuated by the best and purest of motives, yet it is difficult to find public-spirited people in each place who will carry out their high ideals. The society are, of course, chiefly handicapped by the fact that the chief users and dealers in narcotics are either the millionaires and their sattelites or officials. Each hsien has official orders to organize a branch of this society, with so many honorary officials, and paid agents for each.

The latter spend 20 days per month in visiting villages, in each of which they are supposed to check up the number of yen min (people addicated to smoking). These are all supposed to be gradually overcoming the habit and it is of course taken for granted that there are no fresh victims to the habit, and that officials and gentry are above suspicion.

We know of course that the Governor and his own immediate friends give no countenance to slipshod procedure. But even the most vigorous officials find it no easy task to grapple with the conditions in the villages.

MODERN UGLINESS.

The passion for glass shop fronts, and to disfigure the streets with ugly jerry-built erections with crude and weird embellishments is spreading throughout the province. Even this very conservative city is becoming a victim to the popular craze. The really artistic and the picturesque is fast disappearing. What is thought to be "Modern Universal Style" is taking its place. The prevailing features seem to be false facades, usually mis-shaped with dummy clocks, Republican flags and blue floral borderings in fresco on stucco—usually all of very inferior quality and execution. Thus the face of Shansi's cities is changing. Street paving is having some attention.

At present cattle disease is rampant. A fatal form of measles is also claiming many victims among the children. Possibly the mortality may be due to treatment more than to the disease.

NATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Last Day of Biennial Conference

The Fifth Biennial Conference of the Naitonal Medical Association at Southeastern University, Nanking, came to a successful termination on the 12th instant.

The 100 delegates who attended the conference were always prompt and regular in their attendance, displaying a marvellous spirit of unity and co-operation. Practically all of them,—a few were forced to leave owing to pressure of their own work—remained until the conference was brought to a successful conclusion. Some 40 interesting and valuable papers were read. An exhibition of medical books and medicines was this year a noteworthy feature of the conference.

Papers on the following topics were read at the closing session:—"Acute intestinal obstruction—a plea for early diagnosis and treatment" (Dr. S. F. Li); "Twilight sleep in China" (Dr. M. H. D. Ling); "Remarks on incidences of certain diseases among Europeans and Chinese" (Dr. W. H. Chun); "The use of colloidal gold and colloidal silver" (Dr. T. T. Chu); "Experimental studies of false anise" (Dr. P. C. Kiang); "Saline solution in the treatment of erysipelas" (Dr. C. C. Wong); "Study of 300 cases of leucorrhea" (Dr. Arthur Woo).

Dr. John Kirk, President of the China Medical Missionary Association, Dr. P. W. Kuo, President of Southeastern University, and Dr. David Yui, General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., were elected honorary members of the National Medical Association.

AMERICAN GUNBOATS ON THE YANGTZE

The Late Capt. Brandt's Death

Commenting recently in San Francisco on the murder of Captain J. F. Brandt, while on the run upriver, Comm. J. F. Nielsen, U.S.N. who formerly served on the Yangtze River, said:—

"The killing by Chinese bandits of Captain J. F. Brandt, master of the str. Tze Hsui, a Chinese-owned boat running between Ichang and Chungziang, on the Yangtze river, gives new proof of the need for stronger naval forces on the Yangtze.

Comm. Nielsen, it will be remembered, gave the readers of the "North-China Daily News" a short resumé of these conditions several months before the death of Captain Brandt.

Continuing he declared,

"American gunboats on the Yangtze are ready for the scrap heap." Their speed is about 11 knots, while the river at high water runs in some of the rapids as fast as 15 knots. This necessitates the employment of Chinese coolies to haul these ships over the swift parts of the river.

"The upper Yangtze is patrolled by ten foreign gunboats, four Japanese, two English and two American. The Japanese boats all have high power and are up to date. All the others are obsolete.

"The chaos in China demands a stronger naval force to protect the lives and commerce of Americans and other foreigners on the great Chinese waterway."

CHEKIANG'S NEW YEAR

Salvoes of Crackers: A Bank Failure: New Launches on the River

From Our Own Correspondent.

Shaohsing, Chê., Feb. 16.

This year's celebration has been a record breaker. The lid has been off so far as the use of fire-crackers is concerned. From the night of the 23rd of the 12th moon to the night of the 30th there was an almost incessant roar. After the past few years of martial law the come back this year was all that could be desired.

Recently a band of gendarmerie has been organized under the direction of our efficient police magistrate. These men are well equipped and active in their patrol of the city. During the holiday season excellent order has been maintained. The expenses of the company are met from the tax on theatricals.

Just at the close of the old year a well known bank failed. Knowing that failure was inevitable the manager is said to have tried to get what he could out of it for himself. The result was a heavy loss to the creditors and a serious blow to the prestige of Shaohsing bankers.

The latest improvement in transportation is a crude oil-burning motor on the Zao-ngo-Sihing run. A new line between sihing and Shaohsing is about to be opened. Already there are three launches west and two east each day.

Recently there has been a recrudescence of the lottery evil. After being closed down the business has reopened briskly. The stores on the great street are showing the tickets and pedlars go about the streets and no the launches. Winners are few and those who win in the end lose more than they win.

"AGAINST THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

Fukien Official's Protest to Superiors Against Poppy-Growing

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kienning, Fu., Feb.

Leaders of the gentry in this city have been greatly stirred over the attempt of the authorities to compel the people to sow poppy hereabouts. A strong branch of the Moral Welfare Society has been formed which now knows the power of legal combination. During a visit of the Foochow Moral Welfare Society's secretary, the Rev. I G. Hu, most enthusiastic meetings were held. After an abortive effort to enforce the order the hsien here has reported to his superiors that it is against the will of the people.

In the Sungkihsien the poppy has already been planted, and one fears it is too late for much to be done, though the local Moral Welfare Society has received a despatch from Gen. Chou, the second military official in the province, saying he has ordered the hsien to prohibit it.

The Society is determined to give as much prominence as it can to the names of all those enemies of their country who have any share in the revival of this curse.

The year end is proving a sad one for most people in this prefecture, owing to the presence and exactions of the large companies of soldiers.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE ADMINISTRATION OF TSINGTAO

Gen. Chen Kan's Grave Charges of Misappropriation of Territorial Funds

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 12.

Discussing the present situation in the former leased Territory, Lieut. Gen. Chen Kan at a press dinner on the 11th, said that the foreign residents had very good grounds for protesting against the callousness of the Administration in regard to matters of grave importance. Foreign representation in the management of municipal matters, although provided for in the Washington Treaty, was something which the administration declined to allow, whereas the clause providing for the ascertainment of foreign opinions was completely ignored. Gen. Chen had only one explanation to offer in regard to these two questions and that was that the Administration fully realized the fact that once the foreigners had any voice in the management of the city's affairs, all opportunities for "squeeze" would have to be done away with. He was not afraid to give this out as his own opinion. As a matter of fact, he wished it to be made known where his sentiments were.

Concerning the plan of Marshal Wu Pei fu to turn the former leased Territory into a special administrative area, General Chen said that it was the Marshal's conviction that, in order to be a successful proposition, the territory must be considered as being entirely independent of Shantung, and run by a qualified Director-General who need not take the instructions of the political crooks in Tsinan. It was not known who was the man the Marshal had particularly in mind for this post but the speaker thought that Mr. Kao En-hung was the only official capable of making the district a success both in the matter of revenues and the question of China's prestige. Up till now the Administration had made a mess of things.

The revenues of the territory exceeded $4 million dollars, and the retrocession was effected the expenditure was calculated not to exceed $2 millions at the most, and yet, at the present time, the Administration not only has no money with which to meet expenses but has huge sums owing to various parties. Graft was the order of the day, and as an example, Lieut.-General Chen cited the case of the Public Works Department which compiled a budget of $270,000 whereas its actual expenditure was $130,00. Where was the rest of the money? asked General Ch'en.

Tsingtao, Feb. 15.

The belief that Gen. Chen Kan in his statement last Tuesday to local newspapermen gave voice to some most significant utterances is fast gaining ground here. Gen. Chen, who is adviser from both the Central Government and Marshal Wu Pei-fu to the Kiaochao Territorial Government, called public officials here everything but downright crooks and predicted their forced removal inside a month. The news has spread like wildfire and native and foreign elements of this cosmopolitan city believe that Gen. Chen knew of what he spoke.

The gravity of the charges is evident when it is mentioned that Gen. Wu's right hand man here accused the Administration of appropriating territorial funds to the amount of more than $3,-000,000. This revelation has called for stinging criticism of the Administration, the real control of which is, of course, at Tsinan, the provincial capital, without whose sanction the former lease hold administrators cannot take a step. Gen. Chen practically laid the responsibility for the whole affair at the door of Governor Hsiung Ping-chi.

STAFF'S UNPAID SALARIES.

Gen. Chen declared that the total revenue for the first fiscal year under Chinese rule, following the retrocession on December 10, 1922, was well over $5,000,-000. The budget for departmental expenditure was approximately $2,000,000. "Still," he added, "even this amount was not available. You and I know that every single department has had to curtail operations and under-officials and employees have gone unpaid for weeks. Why? The answer is perfectly obvious.

"At the present time the departments, striking an average, are two months in arrears in salaries and wages. Many poor coolies, faithful and hard-working, performing their daily tasks in ignorance of the corruption going on, have been half-starved because of the failure of their department to discharge its salary obligations.

"I would not accuse every public official. Thank Heaven, there are a few who still have some sense of decency left. I can name one in particular who, unable to secure money from the Administration to pay off his personnel, drew on his personal bank account. The trouble is not so much with the department heads as with those higher up who control the finances."

PRO-JAPANESE FORCES?

Gen. Chen hinted at strong pro-Japanese forces at work here. He even went so far as to intimate that the Administration had secretly favoured Japanese interests to the exclusion of those of other nations. He accused the Japanese of desiring to bring discredit on the Kiaochao Administration for the purpose of arousing a popular demand for a change to international control, in which the Japanese would seek to gain the dominating power.

The Adviser was of the opinion that a separate province will be created from the Kiaochao Territory, including Tsingtao and the adjacent district. In this event it would be entirely separated from Shantung and the Tsinan group of politicians, whose influence, Gen. Chen believed, was an evil one.

"I believe that Kiaochao will be a separate administrative area, accountable to Peking direct," Gen. Chen predicted.

THE PROPOSED NEW HEAD.

Mr. Kao En-hung has been prominently mentioned as the new head of the territorial administration. He was formerly Minister of Communications in Peking and is reputed an able and honest executive. He is residing in Chefoo and has been living in retirement for some time. Whether he would consent to assume the responsibility is not yet known here. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

C. E. R. REVENUE

A Profit of over $6.000,000

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 10.

According to statistics from the Accountant's Department of the Chinese Eastern Railway the railway's gross receipts for 1923 amounted to 37 million dollars odd, whilst the expenses exceeded 26,000,000 whilst a further five million must be deducted for maintenance of the Railway Guards and other payment to Chinese Government institutions. The net profit for the year is thus over $6,000,000, which is greater than what was expected by the management owing to the non-collections of the Land Department on account of the dispute with the Chinese authorities last October.

CHINESE NEW YEAR IN CANTON

Canton, Feb. 8.

The Chinese New Year in Canton passed quietly without the trouble expected from the non-payment of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's mercenary Yunnan, Kuangsi, Hunan, Honan, Shansi and Shensi troops. The only contretemps during the past few days were the shooting down of three Cantonese by the mercenaries, one at 140 Ti-pei-man Street on February 4, another at Kwong Feart Hotel on February 6, and the third at the Kung Chong Shing Company, Yi Tak Maloo, on February 7. On the whole, the mercenaries behaved pretty well during the last three days: they only broke into one gaol, wounded only one guard, and rescued only one prisoner. They did not cause very much trouble. It is true that they raided No. 1 sub-station of the 10th police district on February 4 and gave the police lieutenant and the staff on duty a sound beating, but they did not kill anyone.

The main reason for the murder of a few Cantonese was the fact that the Canton charitable associations and Chamber of Commerce endorsed some $500,000 worth of unsecured military notes, issued by the General Headquarters, but failed to induce the merchants to negotiate them as cash. Probably Dr. Sun's warriors will cease shooting down the Cantonese for a while now, for the merchants have been ordered to aid the Government to redeem these unsecured notes in proportion to their business standing. For this purpose businesses will be divided into six classes: the first paying $500, the second $200, the third $50, the fourth $20, the fifth $10, and the sixth $5. It is expected that the Cantonese police and the Cantonese Volunteer Corps will complete the assessment of the firms before February 14 and allow the mercenaries to have the $500,000.

SOME NEW APPOINTMENTS.

The Cantonese are not only presenting the mercenaries with half a million dollars within a week, but they are also going to let them have the Governor's yamên. Dr. Sun has appointed Mr. Yang Shu-chau, a Szechuanese, as Civil Governor of the part of Kuangtung where his compatriots are collecting taxes, and protecting gambling and the opium traffic.

Mr. Cheng Hung-nien, Assistant Secretary of Finance, will replace Mr. Mei Kwang-pui as Kuangtung Commissioner of Finance. Mr. Mei has for nearly a year been Dr. Sun's chief agent for the sale of public lands.

DR. SUN'S NEW YEAR GREETING.

Dr. Sun has issued a New Year greeting card to the Cantonese, assuring them that he will stop further confiscation of their lands to swell his war treasury, but asking all to present their land deeds to the proper authorities for verification and to pay an examination fee of two per cent. of the value of their lands, when they are found not to be former public property. The emergency military notes, issued on last New Year's Eve, old calendar, will be legal tender for part payment of the deeds verification fees.

NEW TAXES ON FOREIGN IMPORTS.

Although Dr. Sun has not formally established another Customs House in Canton, as he declared he intended to do when he was trying to regain control of the Customs surplus, his mercenary troops are levying new taxes on certain foreign imports under the pretext of selling licences and Government monopoly. A tax will be collected on the sale of rubber soles and wood alcohol. Dr. Sun has finally cancelled the surtax on the sale of ammonia sulphate, which is imported from abroad and used by many Cantonese farmers as a fertilizer.

DEMANDS BY YUNNANESE.

The Bun Nam Tea House and the Sun Yuan Native Bank in Wing Hon Road were unable to have their usual New Year reception last Tuesday morning, for each had a dead Yunnanese in front of its shop. The two Yunnanese were killed the night before when they attempted to pass papers for silver. The comrades of the dead men are accusing the Cantonese volunteers of having shot them and are demanding compensation. As the shops do not want their frontage to be used as a mongue, it has been suggested that $1,500 should be paid to the relatives of the deceased to remove the bodies.

Up to the present the Yunnanese are still in control of the Canton-Samshui Railway. On New Year's day one of the trains on this line was attacked by bandits, who captured three passengers.

RAILWAY DIRECTOR DISMISSED.

Mr. Wen Teh-chang, the Managing-Director of the Canton-Kowloon Railway, has just been dismissed by Dr. Sun on a charge of having assisted the transport of the enemy forces under Gen. Chen Chiung-ming at Sumchun, near the British section of the railway. Mr. Wen is a Peking appointee and has been with the Railway Company for many years. He is at present in Hongkong, where he is prudently remaining, disregarding a summons from the Cantonese Chief of Police. Mr. Chan Hing-hon, Managing-Director of the Yueh-Han Railway, will temporarily also direct the Canton-Kowloon Railway. The Canton-Kowloon line is now facing bankruptcy on account of the failure in its revenue since it has been taken over by the military. The other lines running out of Canton, the Canton-Samshui and Yueh-Han, will operate under war rates for another three months. The war tariff is 56 to 69 per cent. higher than that of a year ago and is to no small extent responsible for the present high cost of living in Canton.

THE HIGH PRICE OF RICE.

The strike of rice-shop workers still continues and the lowest grade of rice is now selling at $8.60 a picul. To relieve the situation, the strikers have established depots for the sale of rice at cost price, plus expenses of transport. Mr. Yen Yu-sheng, the leader of the rice-shop workers and the Chairman of the Shuntak Kwomintang Party, was murdered a fortnight ago, presumably in connexion with the present deadlock between the proprietors and the workers. In spite of the offer of the Kuomintang leaders to arbitrate, there is not the slightest sign at present of an end to the strike.

Dr. Sun has ordered the reorganization of the Higher Normal School, the Canton Agricultural College, and the Canton Law School into a University under the name of the National University of Kuangtung. Mr. Chau Lu, former Salt Commissioner and the present Principal of the Higher Normal School, has been appointed Chairman of the Committee on Reorganization.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MISSIONARY MOBBED IN KASHGAR

Peking, Feb. 18.

A foreign telegram from Kashgar reports that the Rev. Mr. Nyrstrom, a Swedish missionary, and two converts were mobbed in the streets of Yarkand and beaten and dragged to the residence of a Mussulman judge. The Chinese local authorities acted firmly and imprisoned the ringleaders and are protecting the missions. The situation is normal. It appears that the outrage was the outcome of a fortnight's street preaching by a mullah of Turkish origin.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION IN NORTH CHINA

Peking, Feb. 20.

The Bureau of Economic Information learns from official sources that the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Communications have no knowledge of any agreement relative to construction of three railways in North China. No agreement of this nature has been submitted to any Ministry for consideration.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MARSHAL WU PEI-FU'S LATEST PROJECT

Move to Control Former Kiaochow Leased Territory?

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 9.

Marshal Wu Pei-fu's reported ambition to make the former Kiaochow Leased Territory entirely independent of Shantung Province, with himself at its head, is said to have resulted from a plan submitted to Loyang by Rear-Admiral Wen, when the latter called on the marshal with the view to obtaining funds for the upkeep of the squadron taken over from the South.

It is stated that he intimated that he could administrate Tsingtao quite efficiently, and to the satisfaction of all, with the present revenues of the port, and without availing himself of money from the Kiao-Tsi Railway. He has reckoned without the opposition of the Chinese business community however, for the merchants have expressed their determination vigorously to oppose the proposition to turn the former leased territory into a sphere of interest for Wu Pei-fu and the Port of Tsingtao into a Naval Base.

Rear-Admiral Wen's recent trip to the Peking which was hitherto believed to have been solely for the purpose of raising money for the payment of the wages due to the men of the squadron now turns out to have been an attempt to get the Central Government interested in the plan to make Kiaochow territory a special district, independent of Shantung.

Whether Marshal Wu Pei-fu's plan will eventually materialize is watched by the community with unabating interest inasmuch as it would be contrary to the terms of the Washington Treaty. The community at any rate thinks that should Tsingtao be turned into a Naval Base it would be a violation of the terms of the Treaty.

It is learnt that the squadron has already received through in direct means the sum of $200,000 from the Kiao-Tsi Railway. It is reported that the Japanese Legation has been instructed to lodge a protest against the use of the railway's funds for the assistance of the fleet on such a grand scale, although up to the time of writing your correspondent has been unable to secure confirmation of this.

The Administration may undergo great changes if Marshal Wu Pei-fu appoints Mr. Kao En-hung, the former Chief of the Communications Department, to the post of Director of the Administration, with Mr. Lao Tsi-chang as Co-Director. Possibly, the prospective Director, Mr. Kao, may also concurrently be the Managing Director of the Railway. Should Wu Pei-fu succeed in getting all positions filled by his own men, the problem of financing the Navy here would not worry the Marshal any longer.

POLITICAL CHANGES IN JAPAN

Tokio, Feb. 18.

The plan suggested by the Government some weeks ago of splitting the present Department of Agriculture and Commerce into its two component parts and creating each as a separate Department under its own Minister will, it is reported, be put into force next April.

The new Department will be entitled the Department of Agriculture, while the present bureau will be known as the Department of Commerce and Industry.

The name of Count Oki is most freely mentioned in connexion with the new ministerial portfolio—that of Agriculture.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE BUDDHIST CEREMONY OF ORDINATION

Strange Midnight Scene in Ancient Temple

From Our Wuchang Correspondent.

Wuchang, Feb. 11.

Every winter there takes place in one of the large Buddhist temples in this centre the remarkable ceremony of ordination, or initiation of Buddhist monks. This ceremony is known as "sheo kiai," or "taking the vows," and its chief feature is the burning of a number of spots upon the shaven head of the initiate. Usually nine spots, in three rows of three, forming a square, are burned, representing the nine vows which are taken by every Buddhist priest; and the cauterized marks are indelible and remain on the scalp for a life-time. This ceremony is not often witnessed by a foreigner, though it is performed annually at every big centre of Buddhism throughout the length and breadth of China, and the sight of the shaven crown and burned spots of the Buddhist priest are quite familiar to inland residents. Some account of the ceremony as seen by the writer may be of interest.

PERVADING PRECIOUSNESS.

Not far outside the East Gate of Wuchang is a small hill known as the Hung Shan; upon the hill is a pagoda; and beneath the pagoda is the "Pao Tung Shih," or "Monastery of Pervading Preciousness." The pagoda itself is of interest. It consists of seven stories, each having a stone gallery round it on the outside. The ascent is made inside by means of a spiral stone staircase rising from floor to floor. From each floor two straight staircases opposite each other lead out to one of the galleries; and these staircases are arranged alternately, so that from one story they lead out to north and south, and from the next to east and west. The pagoda must be several hundred years old, but it is still in a fairly good state of preservation, and it certainly shows remarkable ingenuity and skill on the part of these who planned and constructed it.

The monastery dates back to the beginning of the Tang Dynasty, and the story of its foundation is quite a romantic one. The original Hung Shan—much more worthy of the name of "Vast Mountain" is a high hill in the lonely region which lies in a big triangle formed by the three cities of Teian, Suichow and Anlu. Here is a group of high hills, with one peak in the centre higher than all the rest. It is a wild region, uninhabited except for scattered farmsteads. This desolate country is the home of legend and folk-lore. Dragons live in the dark recesses of caves deep under the roots of the hills. Fairies haunt the waters of the streams which issue forth from these mountains of low down to far away populous towns. On the summit of one of these peaks was formerly a tarn, filled with water; but a dragon rose from below, making a vast hole in the mountain, and the water flowed away leaving only a dry crater.

RAIN-MAKERS OF OLD.

At least 1,200 years ago, there was a Buddhist monastery on this Hung Shan, even as there is one still to-day. At that time, the monks of this monastery were famous for their power to bring down rain by their prayers. One of them, Tsi Ren by name, set forth with his begging-bowl and his rosary, and made a journey which brought him as far as the banks of the Yangtze. This was one of the duties of the monks. They used to set out with the simplest equipment, and go on long tours, preaching by the way, and receiving alms for their support. Whatever was put into his begging-bowl, the monk must eat, but he might not ask for what he desired. So Tsi Ren came to Kianghsia on the southern bank of the Yangtze. It must have been even then a large city; it has since become the military capital of China, with its name changed to Wuchang, meaning "Military Splendour." Here the people were suffering from drought. Tsi Ren sat on a hill and prayed for rain, and the rain came. A great official of the empire, happening to be in Wuchang at that time, reported this to the Emperor; and the Emperor, being pleased with the monk's piety, enabled him to found a monastery on the hill where he had sat and prayed for rain. The hill itself, though by no means a "vast mountain," was named "Hungshan" after the mountain on which Tsi Ren had first lived.

During the thousand years of its history, the Pao Tung Shih has been partially burned or destroyed several times, and restored again by the munificence of one or another official. It has no doubt been increased in size from time to time, and it now consists of four great courts with temples between, and it also contains accommodation for over a hundred monks. It is a wealthy institution, drawing rents from many lands in and around the city. Signs of prosperity are not wanting in these modern times; for within the last year or two some of its great images have been gaudily repainted, the roofs have been retiled, the pond in the first court has been reconstructed, and a new bridge of smooth white concrete has been made across the pond, in place of the old rude stone bridge overgrown with weeds.

THROUGH FROSTY NIGHT.

It was to this temple that we made our way, a little after dark, along the straight road that leads away from the city gate toward the east. In the frosty night the ice crunched under our feet, and the dim light of our lantern showed that all the doors were closed, not even a dog being abroad in the keen winter air. Reaching the great front entrance at the foot of the hill, we found to our relief that the big gates were unbarred. We climbed the steep slope of the first court, our feet slipping on the frozen stones, and so reached the second barrier. But alas! the second gate was closed. No lights or sounds within gave any hope of admittance. It seemed as if our journey was to be in vain.

Turning to the right, and passing over a low wall, we found ourselves in an experimental garden, outside the temple precincts. Up the hill once more, winding in and out between the trees, stumbling along a frozen ditch, we made our way. At last we found ourselves on known ground, standing outside a little wooden door at the extreme north-east of the temple boundary-wall. Voices and lights this time; but too far away to be attracted by our knocking, unless we chose to arouse the attention of the whole monastery by our banging and shouting. So, down the hill again, to a little side door which we know leads in through the woodhouse, kitchen and refectory to the very centre of the temple buildings.

WITHIN THE TEMPLE.

This time we were successful in making ourselves heard by one of the underlings, who opened the door and led us through to the guest-room on the further side of the principal court. There our difficulties were at an end, for we were received by several of the senior monks, with one of whom we had previously struck up an acquaintance, and they readily gave us permission to be present at the ceremony which was about to take place. Interchange of cards, drinking tea, and conversation filled up the couple of hours' wait which we found lay before us. The part of host was played by a monk of some standing, who revealed himself as the headmaster of a Buddhist school in Hankow, his present business being to take a part in the very initiation which we had come to see. Of middle age, with intelligent face and keen, earnest eyes, he showed himself well able to take a part in discussing with us topics of mutual interest. The relation of Buddhism to modern education, the problem of theism or atheism, the connexion between body and soul, the question of human destiny—on such questions it was interesting to compare the Christian and Buddhist standpoints. In spite of his evident enthusiasm, and his knowledge of the Buddhist point of view, our friend showed no great ability to grasp or meet any suggestions from the other side. To all our theistic arguments he replied with cut-and-dried formulae—as if they settled everything.

Meanwhile, from the temple close at hand there came the continual sound of gongs accompanied by chanting. A brief visit under the guidance of our friend enabled us to see what was going on there. It is a great dimly-lighted hall, one we know well by daylight, but looking unusually dim and mysterious in the feeble light of a few wax candles. Down each side are ranged nine gilded images, the 18 Lo Hans or earliest disciples of Buddha. In the centre is the great gilded image of the Buddha, sitting cross-legged facing the entrance. In front of this image was a table, with three cowled monks sitting on either side, and standing at the head was a young-looking monk with a scarlet tiara-shaped hat upon his head. Each of them had a book in front of him, and out of their books they were reading, sometimes by turns, sometimes in union, in a sing-song chant, every pause being filled in by the clashing of gongs and beating of wooden drums. In a dark corner was a wooden box, in which sat a solitary monk, cross-legged and silent, performing the duty of meditation.

THE ORDINATION BEGINS.

Next, we crossed the upper court to another temple building, where the candidates for ordination were awaiting their ordeal. There they sat, some 60 or 70 of them ranged round three sides of the hall, all in grey robes and with great round shaven polls looking like a row of death's heads in the semi-darkness. Some looked fairly old and some young; there were even a few women among them.

Back to the guest room for more desultory talk. The chanting and gong beating had been going on for more than two hours now; but at last there were signs of movement. We returned to the front temple, and found the scene quite changed. Instead of the little table in front of the great idol, we now found a long wooden counter with a row of straw kneeling-cushions in front of it. Behind this counter stood the officiating monks, chief of whom, in the middle, we recognized our late friend; and upon it were the instruments of torture. Little packets of incense wrapped in red paper a gummy substance in small saucers, cut-up chunks of raw turnips, and wax candles and tapers all alight. The solemn row of cowled and gowned figures might have been the executioners of the Spanish Inquisition awaiting their victims. And the victims soon appeared. The first batch of a dozen came in and kneeled on the straw cushions, their clean shaven heads looking for all the world like a row of great ostrich eggs gleaming white in the candle light. Behind each stood a monk, who laid one hand on each side of the initiate's head and held it with a firm grip. Upon the top of each bald pate were marked a number of small circles, painted exactly where the spots were to be burned. Some had three, some nine and some 12, in straight rows of three each. In the case of the women, a rectangular patch is cleared on the top of the head, instead of the poll being completely shaven.

NO SIGN OF EMOTION.

Now the officiating monks take the little sticks of incense, each about half an inch long, and by means of the gum they fix them upright upon the head, one on each of the little painted circles. The taper is used to light them at the tops, and in about two minutes the little lighthouses burn right down to the bare scalp. Pieces of turnip are placed between the burning patches to keep the surrounding skin cool. All the time, a monk in the background is beating a big wooden drum with a heavy mallet—possibly to drown any groans of pain which may escape from the sufferers. But if that is the object, it is apparently quite unnecessary. Not a lip quivers, and not the least contortion appears to disturb the line of heavy profiles seen under the flickering light.

All the time, the meditating ascetic was sitting cross-legged in his box in the corner, as if entirely unaware of what was going on close to him. As each stick of incense burns itself down, the ashes are pressed down on the head with the fingers, a cloth is thrown over the initiate's head by his friend behind, and he is led out with eyes tightly closed. There is no order. The remainder of the candidates are standing round the door, and as each place is vacated it is filled by another kneeling figure.

It is a strange ceremony—partly pathetic, partly grotesque. I once asked a monk if his ordination hurt him much. He replied, "If you believe the doctrine of Buddha, you don't feel the pain." Which proves that there is nothing very original in M. Coué's teaching after all.

EXPLORER'S TEA WITH LIVE GODDESS

Sir Charles Bell's Adventure: Priest Dices for Victory of Good Over Evil

The days of banqueting with the deities did not end with the explosion of old Roman theism as a myth, for Sir Charles Bell, who has just returned to London after a year's sojourn in Tibet, reports that while at Samding, one of the few important towns in that country, last year, he had tea with a goddess. She is not a common goddess either, but ranks as an incarnation of a Buddhist deity and as such is the highest lady in the land.

She rules over a monastery of 20 monks, whom she can convert into pigs whenever she likes. This at least is what her Tibetan subjects believe, and her vaunted power insures her not only high social position but an income as well. Sir Charles says he was the first white man to visit the "goddess," who, after a sprightly conversation, regaled him with an excellent meal.

The Tibetan explorer describes her as about 24 years old, with a pensive mien and an air of quiet dignity. In accordance with Tibetan custom the hostess and guest exchanged presents.

TEACHES HER TO TELL TIME.

Sir Charles gave her the first watch she had ever seen and taught her how to tell the time. Until then she, like all the natives, had lost track of the hours, knowing only that sunrise was nature's signal to arise and sunset indicated bedtime.

Sir Charles, in relating his experiences, described the great prayer service of the Lamas, at which 12,000 monks assisted. These officiates were divided into sections and placed wherever room could be found for them. At various places priests were stationed, armed with stout poles eight or nine feet long and some six inches in circumference. One of them belaboured a monk who was not taking a proper part in the service.

The Dalai Lama, said Sir Charles, is the chief Buddhist monk of Tibet and rules an area of some half a million square miles. There are no railways, no roads and no motor cars in his domain. It is a land of mountain, desert and unbridged rivers; a land of snow and ice and blizzards.

The last 10 days of the second Tibetan Month, corresponding with the early part of April, are taken up by a festival known as the Tsoncho or "The Offerings of the Assembly." One of the rites of this festival is a crapshooting contest between the Dalai Lama and the devil. If the devil wins, evil will triumph during the next year and the people of Tibet will suffer.

OSTRACIZING THE DEVIL.

Should the Dalai Lama load his dice, however, and win the match, the year will be one of bounty and happiness for his subjects. The devil's delegate in the match is the Serpent King, who wears a long coat of white goatskin and a long peaked hat and carries in his right hand the black tail of a yak. His face, white on one side and black on the other, shows that he is a doublefaced rogue full of deceit.

Whether he wins or loses, the Serpent King, after the dice throwing, which takes place at the entrance of the temple in Chanchupling 30 miles from Lhasa, the capital, becomes the scapegoat of the country. He is driven from the city and bears the evil with him. He also takes with it a good deal of money, for the Tibetan Government not only gives him presents, but many persons make him offerings on the understanding that he takes his or her troubles out of town.

SUNGARI CLOSED TO RUSSIAN SHIPS

No Real Hardship to Already Impoverished Shipowners: Harbin's Indignation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 5.

Another bombshell has been thrown by the Chinese authorities. Consternation reigns in Russian business circles at a proclamation issued by the Taoyin and Commissioner of Foreign Affairs forbidding the Sungari to Russian-owned vessels.

It is stated that the proclamation has been issued on instructions received from Marshal Chang Tso-lin notifying the local authorities that in the Sungari basin there are vessels flying the old tri-colour Russian flag. It is represented that the monarchy is defunct, the tri-colour flag signifies no nationality. As navigation of the Sungari and other inland waterways of China is prohibited to foreigners, therefore, says Marshal Chang, there is all the more reason why vessels flying the old tri-colour should be strictly prohibited.

IRONY OF RUSSIAN PRESS COMMENT.

The Russian press is full of fantastic comment on the matter, dwelling upon the losses that will be suffered and monopolies that the Chinese will obtain to the detriment of Russian traders. Included among the steamship owners are the vessels belonging to the Chinese Eastern Railway, according to these papers, which are holding forth that the railway is Russian.

As a matter of fact there is really nothing to object to in the proclamation, and of course the Chinese Eastern Railway fleet is not excluded, and though there are numerous Russian steamships in the Sungari, most of them have been sold by their owners. Indeed there are very few Russian-owned ships in the river nowadays and these are lying idle.

Able to give inclusive freights by water and rail, and owing to the advantages they enjoy on the Sungari, the C. E. R. vessels have prevented others belonging to individual or private companies from doing any profitable trade, save in the case of those vessels which navigate the Amur as well, making Habarovsk, Blagovestchensk and other Russian ports of call. Those vessels that still fly the tri-colour are liable to seizure, whereas under the agreement C. E. R. craft enjoy Chinese protection.

EXCLUSION OF SOVIET SHIPS.

Undoubtedly the presence of vessels flying the old Russian flag is preventing a mutual understanding with the Soviet authorities regarding reciprocal rights of Russian and Chinese-owned vessels to navigate freely both the Sungari and the Amur, as was the case before the Russian revolution. Russian vessels under Soviet control have been excluded, while those flying the old flag of Russia have been permitted to navigate the rivers.

It is the future that both countries must have in view. The Russians have already decided to make a modern port of Nikolaievsk, having in view the export possibilities of Eastern Siberia, as well as Manchurian produce. Though a few years may elapse before the work is complete, the Chinese authorities cannot ignore future possibilities, nor must they forget that the inhabitants of the Russian Far East will be good customers for Manchuria for many years to come.

THE TAX ON TOBACCO

Peking, Feb. 17.

According to Chinese reports, the Government has not yet obtained General Chi Hsieh-yuan's obedience regarding the cessation of illegal taxation on foreign tobacco. The British Legation has sent another Note urging immediate presure upon General Chi.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SZECHUAN

Chengtu and Luchow Captured by Northern Troops: Southern Forces in Retreat

Chêngtu, Jan. 26.

Gen. Yang Sen with a large army is now at Anyo. The advance guard of the Northern armies is heavily engaged by the Szechuan armies under Gen. Lai Hsin-huei at Chaokiatu, 100 li from Chêngtu.

Yesterday the city gates were closed for a time, and it was reported that this was the action of Gen. Liu Yui-chiu to refuse admission to Gen. Hsiung Ko-wu's representatives, who had appeared outside the North Gate to collect the house tax he recently instituted.

Peking, Feb. 12.

Foreign telegrams from Szechuan state that Chêngtu is not yet captured by the Northern troops, and it is not expected that they will occupy the capital of Szechuan much before another ten days.

The Northern armies are now at Chungkianghsien, Tungchuan, Tzeyenghsien and Tzechung, while General Hsin Ching-yang is at Neikianghsien and reinforcements are coming to his assistance from Chihsuhting, on the Kueichow border. The reiuforcements are under the command of Generals Tang Hsi-mou and Chou Hsi-cheng.

It is not expected that Generals Liu Cheng-hsun and Hsiung Keh-wu, who are working together in occupation of Chêngtu, will be able to make much resistance, but the gathering forces in the rear of the Northern troops may prove dangerous unless the capture of Chêngtu is effected before the Northerners can be attacked in the rear.

NORTHERN GENERAL'S CONFIDENT REPORT TO PEKING.

Peking, Feb. 13.

General Chow Yung-hua, special commissioner despatched by the President to report upon the condition of the Northern troops in Szechuan, has informed the Government that he has reached Chungking and will shortly proceed to Tungshan to inspect the troops in the neighbourhood of Chêngtu. General Chow Chun, the first commissioner to inspect the troops in Szechuan, is on his way back to Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Feb. 15.

A later foreign telegram from Chêngtu says that the battle near Tungchuan was fought fiercely, the Szechuanese leaving 1,000 dead on the field. The Northern forces captured large supplies of arms and ammunition.

The defeated First and Sixth Divisions have since reached Chêngtu, which the Northerners were approaching on February 4.

In support of an earlier statement that General Wu Pei-fu was endeavouring to avert hostilities in the south west, it is asserted to-day that he is sending General Shih Hsiao-chuan to interview General Lu Yung-hsiang and an agreement is [illegible] whereby danger of a conflict will be averted.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Loyang, Feb. 17.

Tuchun Liu Chun-hou reported on February 12 that Chêngtu fell on February 9. The enemy troops were hotly pursued in all directions.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHENGTU'S CAPTURE CONFIRMED.

Peking, Feb. 18.

Foreign official telegrams confirm the fall of Chêngtu and add that the Northern forces captured Luchow on or about February 13.

A delayed message from Chêngtu, dated February 6, stated that Gen. Yang Sen's and Gen. Teng Hsi-hou's forces were heavily bombarding Chengtu, while the Szechuan General, Liu Chunghsun, was making overtures to the attackers with a view to capitulation. Gen. Yang replied that the bombardment would cease if Gen. Hsiung Ko-wu and Gen. Tan Mou-hsin handed over and the defenders surrendered.

A Chinese official telegram says that Gen. Tang Shih-tsun's forces entered the northern gates of Chêngtu on February 8 and the whole city was occupied on February 9.

The Szechuanese troops from Chêngtu are retreating in three columns in the direction of Sintsinghsien, Kienchow and Jenchowhsien.

The fall of Luchow improves the position of the two captured Japanese officers of the Yiyang Maru, as the Northern forces are now on three sides of Lungchanghsien, from which they will probably march on the city, where the Szechuanese may attempt another stand.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SLEEPING SICKNESS IN HARBIN

One Fatal Case and Girl Who Slept for a Month: Doctors on the Alert

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 12.

The new sickness has made its appearance in Harbin and though it cannot yet be called an epidemic it is engaging the closest attention of the medical profession.

It is called "Enzenfalit" or more commonly sleeping sickness. The first case was that of a doctor of the Railway Hospital who slept off and on for seven weeks. The sleeping sickness has left him, but he is still in bed and very weak. A third case is that of a collector of the Municipality, who has now been sleeping for 17 days; a girl of 16 has been in the state of lethargy for over a month In both cases on being awakened and asked how they felt they have replied quite all right and are in no pain whatsoever, They take but little nourishment and soon fall off to sleep again. In one case it has been fatal, the victim being Mr. Kazlovsky, a popular lawyer and one of the best known public men in Harbin. In this case the patient first had an attack of fever and lethargy followed, death following within five days.

Several cases in the hospitals are being watched very closely. The latest victim is the popular artiste, Labounsky, who feeling very unwell after a performance went home to bed and has been there ever since. When aroused from her slumbers she says simply, "Let me sleep."

It appears that the microbe is but little known though Dr. Klein of Berlin states he has found a cure. It is called Beyer No 205. With this preparation he visited the interior of Central Africa and made numerous experiments with good results. It was announced in December last year that he had proceeded to London, to give practical demonstrations of his cure, It is said that the first record of an epidemic in Europe of sleeping sickness was in Germany in 1712 and that the next serious outbreak was in northern Switzerland, Dalmatia and South Hungary in 1890. According to past statistics one third of the cases proved fatal. In Africa, especially former German West Africa, among the natives the disease is common. The first symptoms of the Harbin cases have been headaches, pains in the head, dizziness and feeling of weakness, followed by the brain becoming slightly affected, the patient making rambling statements. Lethargy follows and the patient goes to sleep for a period from a week upwards and is aroused with difficulty.

PARTY POLITICS IN JAPAN

A National Demonstration

Tokio, Feb. 17.

More than 10,000 persons attended a mass meeting to-day which adopted a resolution demanding the immediate resignation of Viscount Kiyoura and his Ministry The crowd then paraded the streets and held a demonstration before the Peers' Club Police reserves were called out but the demonstrators behaved in an orderly manner.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

POPPY GROWING IN SZECHUAN

Farmers Smartly Dealt with by Junhsien Magistrate: Robbers Also Scarce

From Our Own Correspondent.

Junghsien, Sze., Jan. 28.

Thanks to the neutral or rather "independent" attitude of Gen. Cheng, of the 8th Division, with headquarters at Kiating, and under whose authority this county is at present, peace is maintained and there is very little molestation from soldiers.

General Cheng attends to his own little domain, avoids oppressive levies and taxes and is very jealous of any one else trespassing. While some counties in the province have already paid the land taxes for the 18th and 19th years, this county has not been called upon to pay the tax in advance.

Recently a local office hunter and a strong partisan of the Southern party tried to secure office from those in power. As a preliminary, he was sent back here to propose that Shih Chin-yang, one of Hsiung Keh-wu's lieutenants, should quarter his troops in this city and district. When he made this proposal the local gentry were very wrath and some were of a mind to remove his head, but they finally "passed the buck" by appointing him to carry the proposal on to Gen. Cheng. That seems to have disposed of the matter for the officer referred to promptly went into hiding and has not been seen since. The report on the street was that Gen. Cheng's men were under orders to fight if necessary, to maintain their hold on this section.

Our magistrate, Wang, for a man of his years is most energetic, spending much time touring his district. He has taken active steps to prevent the planting of opium, fining heavily some who were guilty of the offence and supervising the digging up of some which had already sprouted. Lists have been made of these farmers upon whose land the poppy has been found growing and these will be added to as evidence comes in. Those who have dug up the plant or whose poppies have been dug up by officers of the law have been noted and recently, the magistrate, in his tour of inspection of the local militia, told the local captains of his attitude and what he had done, and then placed the responsibility for digging up all that might appear in their locality upon them. There is no doubt that unless the magistrate is removed from office little opium will be grown in this county. It is reported that the magistrate's intention is that if any poppy comes to blossom he will confiscate as public land both the property upon which it grows and the property of the militia captain who should have uprooted it.

We have experienced a very dry winter, certainly the mildest winter I have known here in 20 years. It is is forcing up the price of rice, owing to the poor wheat, beans and rape crops.

Work on the proposed new government middle school seems to have ceased. It is said that funds have been exhausted. Three teachers in the present middle school are about to open a private middle school in the south suburb. There is no doubt but that they will get plenty of students, even though they ask a fair fee, for the number of those seeking education has overtaxed all local facilities.

Despite modern influences in education, a typical daughter of young China cut off a piece of skin and flesh, about two by three inches, from her arm and made soup with it with which she fed her parents, who were both ill. So far as one could see the only effect was to make the old father most attentive and solicitous about the daughter, so that she might have had anything in his power to give her. "Face" demands nothing less. Several native physicians and the foreign doctor in the city are called in every day.

It is almost a year since we heard of robbers in the county, but a couple of days ago a report was brought in of a gang having visited a town about 90 li away. They attacked one man's place, tied up the proprietor, secured a quantity of coppers and some silver, and killed one of his fat pigs which they took off with them. The magistrate is hot on their trail and we will expect to hear of their suffering soon for their boldness.

Small cash has almost disappeared. To meet the need for small change the local Chamber of Commerce have cut up some old, unused, local, thousand cash notes and on the back have stamped upon them the value of five cash. These have been eagerly received. They are guaranteed by the Chamber of Commerce in which, it is said, funds have been deposited for their redemption. Even ten cash coppers are scarce, the more abundant denomination being the 200 cash one, containing copper to the value of about 15 of the small cash. Three thousand one hundred and fifty cash are now being offered for the dollar. Small silver coins pass at par; i.e. five twenty-cent pieces for the dollar. Ten cent pieces are seldom seen.

We are now suffering from a 'slow mail' famine again. Letters reach up in good time but papers, magazines and parcels are resting somewhere, for the robbers dominate both the land and river routes between up and the outside world. A poor chance for any fleeing anywhere west of Chungking.

CHINESE LEARNING IN WUSIH

Popular Scheme of Education: Canal-widening to Check Floods: Builders Active

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Ku., Feb. 19.

An interesting development about to take place in Wusih is the establishment of 18 free schools in the city and its vicinity. These schools are for the purpose of giving an elementary education in Chinese characters to all who desire it, between the ages of 14 and 40. The length of each term is to be four months, at the end of which time the class is expected to have mastered 1000 characters, thus being enabled to read newspapers, shop signs, and so forth. The "graduating" class is not allowed to continue its studies, but must pass on to make room for a new class of beginners. These schools, which are being established by the Board of Education of the city are expected to begin functioning in the late spring.

A large and important high bridge outside of the West Gate has recently been declared to be responsible for the excessive flooding of about one fourth of the rice fields immediately northwest of the city. This is owing to the fact that this large bridge and its adjacent bunding crowds the water of the Grand Canal at that point into such a narrow channel that it overflows its banks during the rainy season and causes great destruction of crops. It is proposed to take down the bridge, widen the canal, and build a broad level bridge connecting the ricsha roads inside the city with those outside.

Wherever one turns new buildings meet the eye and this thronging city has never presented a busier appearance than now, as it returns to work after its annual Chinese New Year holiday.

NEW ATHLETIC CLUB FO R TOKIO

Tokio, Feb. 18.

The various clubs and associations that at present supervise and manage different forms of sport in this country are likely soon to be combined into one club, if the organization of the proposed Tokio Athletic Club is satisfactorily accomplished.

The purpose of such a club is ambitious, because it aims not only at the development of interest in sports at home, but at being acknowledged abroad as the representative of Japanese athletics in all international events.

The promoters of the new Club claim to have the backing of a number of football, baseball, rowing, and athletic associations, including the Japan Lawn Tennis Club, and the Japan Physical Training Association.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FIGHTING ON TIBETAN BORDER

Chinese Garrison Victorious Near Batang: Road to Yunnan Re-opened

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., Jan. 14.

The situation in the Tibetan Marshes has cleared up considerably during the past few weeks. What at one time seemed chaos and disorder is now slowly settling down; men and roads and business are making some progress in the right direction. Ninety young fresh bloods—Chinese soldiers—arrived in Batang about one month ago and with them they carried silver and rations for the somewhat depleted Chinese garrison. With the prospect of their coming or to show that their coming was an insignificant and unimportant affair, Gen. Wang, commanding the Chinese garrison made a very determined and successful attack on the Ra-na Lama, whose forces are devastating the country to the south of Batang.

Gen. Wang (a Hunanese officer) collected a number of the De-ho Tibetans. Some local Tibetans were also mustered and to these were added a few Chinese soldiers. This miscellany left Batang in the following order—the De-ho Tibetans, followed at some distance by the local Tibetans, and bringing up the rear were Gen. Wang and his few Chinese soldiers. In this order they marched forth to fight the Ra-na Lama and if possible open the road to Yunnan.

The De-ho vanguard soon encountered the Ra-na Lama's men and a fierce fight ensued. The Lama was evidently taken by surprise as the De-ho Tibetans had an easy victory and captured considerable loot.

Gen. Wang, the local Tibetans, and the Chinese soldiers are now maintaining that this loot ought to be equally, fairly, and honourably divided. The De-ho Tibetans apparently think differently and thereby hangs a tale. At present the biggest question on the Tibetan frontier is the simple division of some legitimate loot. When this is settled we once again resume the attitude of Micawber. The defeat of the Ra-na Lama and the scattering of his Tibetan forces has opened the main road south which was closed for six weeks. This defeat has also for the meantime greatly increased Chinese prestige, while the arrival of 90 soldiers has now increased the Chinese garrison in Batang to 600 men.

CATTE-RAISING IN HEILUNGKIANG

Important Statistics

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 10.

Some very interesting statistics are furnished by the Economical Department of the C.E.R. concerning cattle and live-stock breeding in Heilungkiang Province. The principal district is is on both slopes of the Hinghan Range, both of which have their own peculiarities. On the Western side is Barga, a part of Inner Mongolia, where the country is practically uncultivated and inhabited principally by Mongols leading a nomad life. On the eastern slopes it is the Chinese who are principally engaged in this industry and trade.

As the following table shows the Mongols on the western slopes breed horned cattle, horses, sheep and goats, and camels. On the eastern side one finds that more cattle and horses are raised than in the west, but no camels and far fewer sheep, whilst on the other hand pig raising is of the first importance.

TABLE IN 1,000's.

West of Hinghan	150.0	525.4	10	1,500	—
East of Hinghan	468.7	1,353.8	—	308.2	2,193

In addition, on the East slopes both mules and donkeys are bred by the Chinese, besides which land is under cultivation and a considerable amount of poultry including chickens, ducks and geese, are raised.

It is because the Mongol does not go in for cultivation that none of this smaller or domestic live-stock is raised, but as the Barga district becomes more and colonized by Chinese settlers undoubtedly in the future this state of affairs will change.

In 1921 the total trade in live stock from the Hinghan district is estimated at 35 million dollars and over one million pouds in weight were carried by the railway. In addition to this some 40,000 pouds of poultry and 1,332 pouds of eggs and egg-yolk were also carried by the railway from this point. Note—All C.E.R. calculations are in pouds.

It must be remarked that Mongolian cattle and livestock are both small in size and of an inferior breed though very hardy. Only the pigs are of Chinese origin, having been brought there by the Chinese settlers.

The Mongols hold important fairs every year at Barga and also at Hailar which are the two principal marts where sale of live-stock takes place and which attract a great number of people.

JAPANESE MILITARY MISSION ABROAD

Tokio, Feb. 18.

At the end of this month a military mission, consisting of five officers under the leadership of Lieut. Gen. Kameji Wada, Commandant of the Military Staff College, will leave on a six months' tour of inspection through Europe and America.

The purpose of the mission, says the spokesman of the party, is to study military progress since the close of the World War. A considerable time will, it is stated, be spent in France and America, where the officers expect to learn much of modern military tactics and of new methods and means of attack and defence.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

U. S. SECRETARYSHIP OF THE NAVY

Mr. Denby and Mr. Warren: Both Well Known in Far East and College Friends: An Odd Coincidence in the Appointment

The resignation of the American Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Edwin Denby, and the rumoured appointment of Mr. Charles Beecher Warren to the post is of much interest to the Americans of the Orient. Both men were formerly in the East, the latter as Ambassador to Japan and the former held a position in the Chinese Maritime Customs, while his father was at one time Minister to China and his brother, Charles Denby, American Consul-General (1907-09 in Shanghai), he himself leaving his post in China to return to America to complete his collegiate studies. Mr. Denby was in Shanghai 18 months ago. Few indeed will remember that he was the father of the Bill providing for the American Court for China and still less will recall that he said while here with reference to the U.S. Gaol, "That was a much better building 20 years ago."

It is related of him that in 1906, when his proposal was before the House, that he spent the better part of a week preparing a treatise which he was to deliver before that Body which would consume four hours to deliver. The matter had had some publicity however, and when the appointed time came for making the address, he rose but had been barely two minutes under way when one of the majority leaders (whips) came and sat in the seat next to him and said, sotto voce, "Is that a good measure?"

"A very good one," he replied in an undertone.

From another whip, two minutes later, "Are you sure that will prove a good proposition?"

Again the same answer.

"You are positive?" came from still another who had inserted himself into the convenient chair. Again the response of authority. "Well, sit down then, it will be passed," came the rejoinder. Mr. Denby sat down and the Bill was passed, authorizing the American Court for China, though he had been on the floor less than 10 minutes.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S CHOICE.

However, the irony of the present proffer of the post to Mr. Warren, connected with his former aspiration, is still more interesting.

Mr. Warren we are told, who is a member of the Newberry faction (his resignation from the Senate while under charges preferred by the opposition candidate, Mr. Henry Ford, is still vivid in the public mind) was at the time of the election of Mr. Harding to the Presidency an aspirant for a Cabinet portfolio, preferably that of the Secretary of the Treasury. The president to-be had, however, already chosen Mr. Mellon (who is sponsoring a cut in the surtaxes under the present income tax law), and the only position still unfilled was that of the Secretaryship of the Navy. Accordingly, the Michigan Republican State Organization sponsored the choice of Mr. Warren for the place and asked that Mr. Denby, then holding a minor office in the Detroit Municipal body, but at the same time a candidate for the nomination for the Governorship of the State of Michigan, should vouch for and support Mr. Warren.

"Heart and soul for Mr. Warren," said Mr. Denby. "Surely I will do all I can for him. Didn't we attend the same college at the same time and didn't we live in the same house afterwards? He is a good friend of mine," and despatched a telegram at once.

Mr. Harding was at that time spending the early winter months, prior to the inauguration on March 4 1921, at St. Augustine, Florida. Rumours in the southern press were consistent that Mr. Denby was himself to be the man for the Navy Office and sure enough, several days later, Mr. George Christian, private secretary to Mr. Harding, telephoned by long distance to Detroit and requested that Mr. Denby would come to Florida. He left immediately.

"You are the man, I want," Mr. Harding is reported to have said.

"I cannot fill the place, however," reiterated Mr. Denby, "for two reasons. I have stated in my campaign for the Michigan nomination that I favour the cancellation of the Allied Debts, secondly I am not a rich man, I have enough to send my children to school, and live comfortably with my wife, but cannot support the diplomatic whirl of Washington."

"This administration is not a social one; you will have no cause to worry on that score. You are the man I want." He called in the newspapermen and said, "Gentlemen, meet Mr. Denby, the Secretary of the Navy."

MR. WARREN AS AMBASSADOR.

It is then reported that Mr. Warren was requested to go to Tokio as Ambassador, but did not accept until after he had made a trip to Europe. After his resignation in Japan, Mr. Warren went to Mexico where he showed himself to be an able propagandist and diplomat, and brought about the Mexican (Obregon) ratification of the recognition treaty between the two American republics.

It is anticipated in inside circles that the actual appointment of Mr. Warren to the now vacant post of Secretary of the Navy will really take place in the next few days. Though it may be gratifying personally to him, it is urged that, should he now get the post, the State of Michigan will line up solid for President Coolidge in the Republican Convention in June. Such a political movement will in part circumvent the dismay now existing in Republican circles because of the disruptions between the standpatters and the radical elements of the Republican Party, on the one hand, caused by the oil scandal; and, on the other hand, will in part overcome any Democratic hopes of triumph in Michigan also resultant from the same disclosures.

SOOCHOW'S FIRST MISSIONARY

And Founder of Anti-Opium League: The Dr. Du Bose Memorial Church

From Our Own Correspondent.

Soochow, Feb. 13.

The laying of the corner stone of the Du Bose Memorial Church took place yesterday afternoon. The funds for this new church were raised partly in China but largely in America, in the South Carolina synod of the Presbyterian Church, as a memorial to the Rev. Hampden Coit Du Bose, D.D. and his wife, Mrs. Pauline McAlpine Du Bose, who were the first resident missionaries in Soochow, where they arrived in September, 1872. They remained here for the remainder of their lives, Dr. Du Bose dying in 1910, and Mrs. Du Bose in 1914.

At the ceremony addresses were given by Chinese pastors representing various churches here. Official representaties of the Taoyin, the Chamber of Commerce and other bodies also spoke. There were also present two lifelong friends of the deceased missionary.

Yesterday was the 10th anniversary of Mrs. Du Bose's death. It is hoped that the church will be dedicated on September 30, which will be the 79th anniversary of Dr. Du Bose's birth.

ANTI-OPIUM EDICT RECALLED.

Dr. Du Bose is perhaps best remembered in Soochow as the organizer and the leader of the Anti-Opium League. Through the courtesy of the late Viceroy Tuan Fang in Nanking, who had been one of Dr. Du Bose's warm friends while he was in Soochow, Dr. Du Bose was able to meet Yuan Shih-kai, then Premier, and also to visit many of the other viceroys. Through Tuan Fang and Yuan Shih-kai, the Doctor was able to send the Throne an anti-opium memorial signed by 1,333 British and American missionaries. On August 19 1906, Tuan Fang forwarded this memorial from Nanking to the Throne and on September 20, one month later, the famous anti-opium edict was issued.

It was almost a verbatim copy of the anti-opium memorial. One cannot help believing, from the splendid suppression of opium begun in 1906, that the curse would have been wiped out of China, had the Manchu rule continued a few more years.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE

Tokio, Feb. 5.

Japan's foreign trade during the month of January showed a total of Y.320,295,000. Of this amount imports amounted to Y.210,137,000, and exports to Y.110,158,000, the excess of the former being practically Y.100,000,000. The chief exports were:—

	Jan., 1924 Y.	Jan., 1923 Y.
Marine Products	1,520,000—	220,000
Refined Sugars	2,025,000+	1,225,000
Coal	1,608,000—	89,000
Raw Silk	45,444,000+	13,116,000
Cotton Yarn	4,390,000—	2,808,000
Cotton Cloths	20,133,000+	3,066,000
Hosiery	1,364,000—	336,000
Porcelain	1,546,000+	66,000

The outstanding imports were:

	Jan., 1924 Y.	Jan., 1923 Y.
Raw Cotton	46,311,000—	4,404,000
Steel	19,262,000+	12,112,000
Lumber	13,111,000+	8,382,000
Wool	9,980,000+	2,883,000
Oilcake	9,290,000+	1,854,000
Beans	7,408,000+	3,430,000
Wheat	6,826,000+	5,252,000
Sugar	5,297,000+	1,816,000

TRADE WITH CHINA.

Feb. 8.

The trade between Japan and China during January totalled Y.16,591,000 of exports and Y.21,427,000 imports, which maens an excess of imports to the amount of Y.4,836,000.

Compared with the corresponding period of the preceding year, an excess of exports, amounting to Y.4,551,000, has been converted into a deficit of an almost equivalent amount.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RISING IN ARMS AGAINST REDS

Half-hearted White Insurgents in the Amur: Harbin as a Holiday Centre

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 10.

In connexion with the recent reports of risings against the Reds in the Amur, official news is now to hand which states that in the middle of January Cossack settlers along the Zea River near Blagovestchensk joined certain former White officers and deserters from the Bolshevik forces. The sending of Red troops to the area quickly suppressed the movement. Many of the insurgents crossed over to the Chinese side of the Amur, where they were disarmed by Chinese troops.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Mr. Kermit Roosevelt and his wife, made a stay here two days prior to proceeding to Europe viâ Siberia. They were somewhat astonished at the size of the place and at the its numerous fine buildings. Mrs. Roosevelt, senior, was full of admiration for the C. E. R. railway coaches, saying they were better than those in America.

Upon their departure, Mr. Ostroumoff, General Manager of the Cer, presented Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt with an album of views taken along the railway.

Thanks to the energy and initiative of the general manager of the railway, numerous places along its route are becoming increasingly popular as summer resorts. At most of them there is bathing and other recreations, besides excellent scenery and a good climate. At all of them there is a Railway Club, where excellent entertainments are given, artists frequently being engaged in Harbin. And the cost of living here is far less than in Japan.

VETERAN MISSIONARY'S DEATH

The Late Mrs. J. W. Whitewright

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Feb. 17.

The community at Tsinanfu was deeply grieved upon learning the death of Mrs. J. W. Whitewright at Bristol while Home on furlough. News is just to hand that she passed away in a nursing home on January 11. The warmest sympathy is felt for Mr. Whitewright who is about to return to China to take up his work as Director of the Extension Department of the Shantung Christian University.

Mrs. Whitewright came to China in 1883, when she joined her husband at Tsingchowfu, Shantung. In 1904 they removed to Tsinanfu, where Mr. Whitewright founded and established the well-known institute, now incorporated with the University. Both through her help in the institute and through the gracious hospitality in the home, Mrs. Whitewright has done much for Chinese and foreigner alike. There are many foreigners in business and missionary life throughout China who very gratefully remember Mrs. Whitewright's generous friendship.

A Memorial Service was held in the South Suburb Church, Tsinan on the 13th when a large congregation gathered to mourn her loss.

CHANGES IN TSINANFU COMMUNITY.

The British-American Community of Tsinan is bidding farewell to Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Christian (B. A. T.), upon Mr. Christian's transfer to Tientsin. Their many friends wish them good luck and hope to see them again sometimes in Tsinanfu.

Mr. J. L. McCarron (late of B.-A. T., Tsinan) died suddenly of intestinal trouble at Linchingchow. Mr. McCarron left Tsinan for the north a few days ago in perfect health. The sad news has deeply shocked his friends.

We understand that a new steamship line is shortly to be established between Shanghai and Korea by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

JAPAN AND SINGAPORE BASE

Press Critics' Condemnation: Direct Challenge to Japan and World Peace

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Feb. 11.

The advent to power of a Labour Cabinet in Great Britain has brought to the fore once again the question of the establishment of a naval base by the island empire of the North Sea at Singapore, which it is declared refers keenly to the safety of Japan and which, if it provokes Japan to war with Great Britain, will also provoke a racial war. The comments, however, lack the ating and the bite that characterized the vigorous editorials that were written when the plan was first mooted, and generally take the form of "sweet reasonableness" that, when Great Britain has been shown the folly of her ways, the scheme will be abandoned.

The "Hochi," a big Japanese daily whose circulation is confidently reported to be over 1,000,000, in an editorial, appeals to the "common-sense of the British working man to prevail and to give a fillip to world peace by crushing the plan to turn Singapore into a vast modern fortress."

"The attitude of the British Labour party towards the Indian question and towards the Singapore naval base," it states, "are to us the most interesting of all the policies of the new British cabinet. The Singapore base question is the more important because it refers keenly to the safety of Japan. From the attitude hitherto adopted by the Labour party, it seems as though the scheme will be dropped. Mr. Hays, a Labour member, declared his opposition to the plan and warned the Government that in the event of an outbreak of war between Great British and Japan, other coloured men would support the Yellow nation. Labour members in the House of Commons also questioned Mr. Baldwin, when the Conservatives were in power, regarding the Singapore base and declared that they did not see any use for proceeding with the scheme.

"If the Singapore plan is cast overboard, a great impetus to world peace will be the result and this will be much appreciated by the Japanese people, not to mention the fact that the abandonment of the base will improve Japanese feeling towards Great Britain, If the Labour party wishes to further world peace and a harmonious understanding amongst the nations, then one essential is that the Singapore naval base should be abandoned.

JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE LOSSES.

Declarinng that the establishment of a vast naval base at Singapore will embroil Japan, China Great Britain and the United States sooner or later and that the earthquake of last September, with its calamitous fires, has considerably weakened Japan's defence establishments, the "Yomiuri Shimbun, also a Tokio daily with a large following and one that is generally inclined towards liberalism but sometimes wobbles into the quicksands of imperialism and then bangs the big drum with more impudence than dignity, pleads that the Singapore naval base scheme be rejected by the Labour Cabinet. Its reasons are many and varied and are interesting in that some of them have not been advanced before, although the papers have dealt with the subject of the proposed naval station almost voluminously.

"The question," says the "Yomiuri," of establishing a naval base at Singapore is a direct challenge to Japan. If war comes, the struggle will be between the yellow and the white races, and Japan will never attempt to strike the tinder that will cause such a conflagration. The heavy losses we sustained on account of the earthquake and the resultant fires, in respect of our national defence finance and economics are better known to American and British statesmen than to us journalists. British upholders may say that the object of the base is in order to be prepared for the defence of Australia and for retaining India. This plan, if carried out, may excite anger among the Indian masses to the detriment of the British authorities there. Even if Great British gains certain advantages in Australia she will lose much more in India, China and Japan.

"BRITAIN THREATENS WORLD."

That little stepping stones, like Malta, Aden, Ceylon, Singapore have been the means of making and consolidating the British Empire and have resulted in "British Imperialism which threatens the whole world" is the next argument the "Yomiuri" summons in its attack on the Singapore base scheme. "The Singapore plan calls for the extension of defensive systems and oil stations at Malta, Ceylon, Aden and other strategic points. This will be viewed with suspicion, not only by Japan, but also by European nations, like Holland and France. Holland is already experiencing financial difficulties on account of the additions she has made to her navy—as a result of the British plan to fortify Singapore—in order that she can defend the neutrality of her East Indian possessions against either one or other of the combatants. Japan in the ostensible enemy that the Singapore scheme is providing against, and this menace to us prevents the Japanese from effecting disarmament on a bigger scale and plays directly into the hands of our militarists and fire-eaters. Any menace to Japan will be resented by the Chinese too, for it will ultimately be a threat to our neighbour also."

PROVOKING AMERICA.

The Singapore naval base plan is also a provocation against the United States, according to a further contention of the "Yomiuri." "Who can say," it asks, "that Singapore may not be utilized as a base against the United States in the event of an Anglo-American war? America has the Philippines, Guam and Hawaii. Her trade relations with China are important. Thus if Great Britain fortifies Singapore, the United States will be justified in further strengthening Pearl Harbour and Cavite and in increasing the strength of her standing squadrons on the Asiatic station and the Pacific. International unrest will result and all hopes for a closer union between the English-speaking nations of the world will be lost.

"The apparent purpose of the plan is to defend Australia. The suspicion that Japan will attack Australia is due to Japanophobia. If there were no Japan in the Pacific Australia would be regarded as free from all apprehension and menace. As a matter of fact, one reason why Australia is in an everlasting nightmare of fear is her own selfishness. Japan is ready to take up the gauntlet if provoked. But she does not want to be the provoker or to be provoked. Suppose Japan had to go to war, it would be with the whole of the Buttish Empire. It will be really a declaration of war on all white peoples, which would be foolish. As there are no Japanese who would go to war with the United States on account of the California immigration restrictions, so there are no Japanese who would care to go to war with Great Britain because of Australia's White Policy ideas. Why then should the Singapore base be built?

"To be brief, the plan will ultimately hurt Great Britain more than anyone else. It will not only rouse the suspicions of the Eastern nations but will also excite the jealousy of various European Powers."

MISSIONARIES ATTACKED.

In the course of an essay, rather than an editorial, the Tokio "Nichi Nichi" (Tokyo Daily News), a paper with distinct Liberal leanings, asks to know whether a warless world is feasible. Replying to its own question that it is feasible, it says that such will be only if provocations for war are eliminated and suppressed as they arise. "The Singapore naval base is steering the world to war, to a worse war than the one that made a shambles of Europe. Missionaries argue sanctimoniously about how to prevent the next war, make pious generalizations that another war must not be and while the Singapore naval base, an incentive to struggle, stares them in the face make no attempt to use their influence to have an end made of it. And thus, by leaving what leads to war to remain, they want to end wars!"

RUSSIAN CONVICTS AMNESTIED

President Tsao's Clemency: Kroniloff's Death Sentence to Be Commuted

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 5.

The Harbin Supreme Court recently received from the Minister of Justice instructions to the effect that in commemoration of his election to the presidency, Tsao Kun has been pleased to grant an amnesty to Russians imprisoned in the Special Area gaols of the Three Eastern Provinces.

The chief reason for this amnesty, so reads the circular, is the peculiar political status of Russians living in the Special Area; many of whom having fled from Russia for political reasons, have become criminals rather starve. No exceptions are to be made except with persons that have less than a month more of their sentences to run. The number of Russians in Harbin gaol is 180.

Kroniloff is included in this number. His appeal case against the sentence of death passed by the Lower Court has still to be heard. If it is upheld, this criminal will not be executed by virtue of the amnesty; he will receive a life sentence. If reversed then the life sentence he had received previously will be most probably mitigated to one of 20 years' hard labour.

It is stated that Kroniloff when he heard of the President's act of grace immediately felt much relieved. The prisoner is chained both hands and shackled. He is only freed of the his fetters for half an hour daily, when he is closely guarded by four armed warders.

The Law Courts in the Special Area are quite independent from the Special Administrator of this District, taking orders only from Peking direct. Russians are very dissatisfied at decisions in civil cases in these Courts. Both local authorities and the public think some reforms are necessary. Harbin being such an international city, with so many foreigners other than Russians, who do not enjoy extraterritorality, the Mixed Court system of Shanghai no doubt would be welcomed.

C. E. RLY. LAND CASE SETTLED

Provisional Agreement: Only Official Text

The "Far Eastern Times" publishes the following official text of the decision reached by Mukden in regard to the C. E. Rly. lands dispute.

According to Article 6 of the renewed C. E. R. Agreement the privileges and rights as well as the functions of the railway company must be strictly confined to those of a purely commercial nature; the company is not allowed to take part in anything of a political nature, and the Chinese Government shall have the right to place restrictions on the actions of the company.

Now the said company have in violation of the Agreement issued land leases for the establishment of markets and streets, which is not only contrary to the regulations governing the purchase of land but also openly infringes China's administrative rights. Such a case of a commercial concern under Chinese rule in Chinese sovereign territory making administrative establishments is never found in any other country in the world. Thorough investigations have now revealed ample self evident proofs that the said company have gone far beyond their specified functions. The Commander-in-Chief of the Eastern Provinces deems it necessary to correct the actions hitherto taken by the said company in violation of the agreement concerning land purchase. But, with a view to the prevention of misunderstanding at present the Commander-in-Chief thinks it wise to reserve the question to be brought up at a more opportune moment in the future.

CHINA'S ADMINISTRATIVE RIGHTS.

As to matters relating to China's administrative rights, however, strict restrictions should at once be imposed on the said company in accordance with the Agreement, in order to preserve China's sovereign rights. For this purpose the following regulations are hereby drawn up for enforcement:

(1) The properties of the said company originally acquired shall be maintained.

(2) Except the lands directly required for use by the company and the buildings thereon, the drawing up of plans for the establishment of markets, ports, towns or villages and the construction work connected therewith as well as all other administrative affairs shall be undertaken by the Chinese authorities; the said company shall not be allowed at their own will to take up such matters.

(3) In case of letting land of the said company or transfer of other immovable properties or privileges the Chinese official departments concerned shall be petitioned for sanction and registration before they can be considered valid. Regarding the land leased or let in the past such applications for sanction and registration shall be made to complete the procedure now required.

(4) For the purpose of working for the prosperity and maintenance of the local market the property owners shall have the obligation to obey the orders or prohibitions concerning administrative establishments and to pay taxes imposed by the Chinese authorities in connexion therewith, or imposed for the purpose of promoting public welfare.

(5) All the above provisions concern purely China's administrative rights and should be carried out forthwith.

EARTHQUAKE CLAIMS IN JAPAN

Insurance Companes and Their Responsibility As To "Sympathy" Money

Tokio, Feb. 18.

The refusal of the majority party in the Diet last December to discuss the late Government's proposal to assist the fire insurance companies in their payment of "sympathy" money on the claims arising out of the great earthquake and fire, which refusal drove the responsible Minister, Baron Den, out of office, naturally led to the temporary shelving of the whole issue.

According to press reports, the claimants for insurance, whose patience is exhausted, are proposing to try and obtain redress through the courts.

The present Government, however, is credited with the idea of so far modifying its predecessors' scheme as to refuse any financial assistance to the companies themselvse, which would in that case be expected to pay the "sympathy" money out of their own funds, and to assist the claimants to rehabilitate themselves with loans at a low rate of interest.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Feb. 20.

Whereas the former Insurance proposals provided that the companies should pay 10 per cent. of the claims resulting from the earthquake of last September, receiving the equivalent in the form of a subsidy, it is at present understood that the Government are prepared to advance Y.180,000,000 to the companies in proportion to the percentage of claims each may arrange and is able to pay, whereby the weaker companies will be more greatly assisted.

It is proposed to classify those that insured so that the smaller claimants will receive the most benefit.

The loan will be repayable in 50 years, the interest running on a downward scale from 4½ per cent., according to the amount a company must pay out.

The insurance companies are holding a conference to decide on a possible basis of payments.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE JAPANESE LOAN

London, Feb. 18

Stock Exchange dealings in the new Japanese loan began at 1¼ per cent. premium. An Amsterdam despatch states that the Dutch portion of the loan has been considerably over-subscribed.

"The Times" states that, when the details are available, it will probably be found that the public response to the loan has been such as to make the issue rank as one of the greatest foreign loan successes in recent years.

Later.

It is stated that Stock Exchange applications for £1,000 and upwards of the Japanese loan will receive 10 per cent. and upwards. The loan is now at 1½ per cent. premium.

Later.

Subscriptions to the Japanese loan are about £43,000,000.—Reuter.

The Japanese loan has been over-subscribed by $100,000,000.—Reuter's American Service.

Finance Minister's Reply to Critics: Immediate Need of More Money

Tokio, Feb. 21.

Replying to critics of the recent loan transactions, the Finance Minister, Mr. Shoda, addressing the Bankers' Club, declared that Japan's application to the world's financial markets was necessitated by her immediate need for money for reconstruction purposes, which demanded the expenditure of Y.1,500,000,000 of which Y.1,400,000,000 must be raised by domestic and foreign loans, and Y.700,000,000 was required by the end of 1925.

The Minister drew attention to Japan's adverse balance of trade, which by March 31 was expected to total Y.400,000,000, and also to the high money rates now prevailing on the world's markets. He paid a tribute to the sympathy of the lending countries, which was an important asset in the success of the loan, instancing the assistance rendered by the American Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, the American Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, Judge Gary, the President of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. Montagu Norman, the Governor of the Bank of England, and New York and London banks.—Reuter.

THE CHARGES AGAINST CHANG CHING-YAO

Peking, Feb. 15.

Chang Ching-yao, the former tuchun of Hunan, has been much in the lime-light these days by reason of the fact that it was reported that he was to be the recipient of honours from the Government. It was also reported that he was proceeding to Loyang at the request of Marshal Wu Pei-fu.

The accuracy of the second report may be doubted, while the first is unfounded, as it is learned from a reliable source that the Government has no intention of conferring any appointment upon Gen. Chang.

It will be remembered that the chaban against him has been removed by a special pardon granted by the President, but the charge against him in respect of responsibility for the murder of the American missionary still stands, inasmuch as it has never been investigated owing to Chang Chin-yao having taken shelter in the foreign concession in Hankow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE WARSHIPS SCRAPPED

Tokio, Feb. 16.

The Navy Office announces that the first period of the work of scrapping 10 warships in accordance with the Washington Naval Treaty has been completed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHANGHAI NEWS

"N. C. DAILY NEWS" BUILDING OPENED BY SIR RONALD MACLEAY

Fine Weather and Crowds of Visitors: The Minister's Review of the Paper's History and the Part to Play in China

CONGRATULATIONS FROM PRESIDENT TSAO KUN

The "North-China Daily News" new building was opened Friday, February 15 by Sir Ronald Macleay, K.C.M.G., British Minister to Peking, who came specially from the capital at the invitation of the Directors of the Company for the ceremony. The weather could not have been more beautiful, and several hundreds of friends assembled in the large hall on the ground floor. At 11.45 punctually the Minister arrived from the British Consulate, accompanied by Rear-Admiral D. Murray Anderson, C.B., Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., H.M. Consul-General, and Mr. G. Vercker, First Secretary, preceded by mounted troopers. His Excellency was greeted on arrival by Mr. H. E. Morriss, Chairman of the Board of Directors, and Mr. Gordon Morriss, Director. The latter, representing the architects, handed to the Minister a gold key in a silver and ebony casket, with which key his Excellency opened the front door. He was followed into the hall by the undermentioned guests, who accompanied him to the platform: Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Murray Anderson. Mr. Sidney Barton, Sir Skinner and Lady Turner, M. Wilden, Consul-General for France, and Mme. Wilden, Mr. E. S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, and Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. Loomis, former U. S. Secretary of State, Mr. S. Yada, Consul-General for Japan, and Mrs. Yada, Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs (representing the Civil Governor of Kiangsu), Judge T. S. K. Loh (representing General Ho Feng-ling). Mr. H.P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate, and Mrs. Wilkinson, M. and Mme. V. Grosse, Captain G. Hopwood, Mr. G. Vereker, Mr. S. Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, Sir Edward and Lady Pearce, Mr. Wen Shih-tsen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Superintendent of Customs at Nanking (who attended as the representative of President Tsao Kun), Mr. H. E. Morriss, Mr. Gordon Morriss, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Green, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. R. Wood, and Mr. Kang Yu-wei.

The following Chinese officials and merchants were present or represented:—Marshals Wu Pei-fu, Chi Hsieh-yuan, Wang Cheng-ping, and Chang Tso-lin, Generals Lu Yung-hsiang, Ho Feng-ling, Chang Hsiao-liang, Wang Yung-kiang, and Liu Yu-ao, Admirals Tu Shieh-kuei, and Lin Kien-chang, Governor Han Kuo-chun, Commander Hanson Feng, Col. Lu Yung-chien, Messrs. S. K. Chen, N. T. Yang, Shen Pao-chang, Tang Shao-yi, Wen Tsung yao, Sun Hung-yi, M. Y. Chung, Che Hsien chen, T. K. Lowe, Fang Chu-pah, Chu Pao-san, N. Y. Chang, Pan Ching-poo, Chun Bing-him, Chen Shut-kai, Yang Moy-nam, Ma Feng-tsz, Francis Zia, K. S. Zee, K. C. Chang, P. K. Chu, Wang Yi-ting, Shen Lien-fong, J. P. Fu, Fu Siao-en, and K. C. Chen.

When all were assembled and the hall full, Mr. O. M. Green, Editor of the "North-China Daily News," rose and said:

THE EDITOR'S WELCOME.

Sir Ronald, Ladies and Gentlemen, The great honour has fallen to me of welcoming you here today. I will not dwell upon the deep appreciation we feel of his Excellency's kindness and of the great honour that he pays us, in coming all the way from Peking to open the "North-China Daily News" new building, because that part of the morning's proceedings is in better hands than mine. But I would say how glad we are to see so many friends assembled here to-day.

I feel that you are indeed friends for several good reasons. For example, it is the time-honoured privilege of a friend to be candid; and I cannot imagine that anyone could possibly be more candid than one of our readers when he finds something he does not like in the paper. Again, a true friend changes not and, equally, he seems to dislike change. During the nearly 17 years that I have been connected with the "North-China Daily News," I have assisted at many changes in its make-up and I cannot recall one which was not instantly greeted with a chorus of disapprobation.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would say that nothing is more keenly relished by my colleagues and myself than this close watchfulness on our readers' part. They make us feel that the paper really belongs to them, that it is their paper and that we must be particularly careful what we put into it. No journalist can have a greater stimulus, or be paid a finer compliment, than to be thus made to feel that what he puts into print really matters. And this clear intimation of Shanghai's peculiar proprietorship in the "North-China Daily News" has helped more than anything else to build up whatever success it has had.

Ladies and gentlemen, you and your ancestors have supported the "North-China Daily News" for nearly 60 years, the "North-China Herald" for nearly 74. I thank you and I hope you will continue to do so.

I will now ask Sir Ronald Macleay to declare the new building open.

THE MINISTER'S SPEECH.

Sir Ronald Macleay, who was greeted with applause, said: It is my great privilege to-day to offer my humble tribute of congratulation and admiration to the "North-China Daily News" on the attainment of nearly 74 years of public life and on the completion of its new home in which its plant and activities have recently been installed. I desire to include in these congratulations and in their expression of admiration the architects, Messrs. Lester, Johnson & Morriss, who by making the fullest and most skilful use of the narrow frontage at their disposal, have enriched The Bund with this admirable specimen of a modern business building—at the same time practical, massive and commodious.

I should like to begin, if I may, with a little history. Shanghai was opened to foreign commerce by the Treaty of Nanking on August 29, 1842; the Imperial Maritime Customs was installed here in 1852, and two years previously, to be precise August 3, 1850, the "North China Herald" was founded as a weekly paper. The need of a daily journal was soon felt, and the "North China Herald" some 14 years after its birth blossomed out into a daily edition to which the title was given "The North-China Daily News," the "Herald" continuing to appear every week. So you will see that the paper is an institution practically as old as the Port itself. The name, too, if you consider it, is an interesting indication of its ago. The "North China Daily News" or "Herald"! When you think of the geographical position of Shanghai, there does not appear to be much "north" about it; but we forget that at the time of the paper's birth in 1850 Peking was still a remote and mysterious capital in which the Powers had not yet succeeded in even establishing permanent Legations. Tientsin, as a great export market and place of residence for foreign merchants, was still a thing of the future, and in practice so far as the penetration of the Middle Kingdom by enterprising British pioneers was concerned, Shanghai could be truly regarded as the "furthest north." So the name of the "North-China Daily News," which the paper still proudly bears, though perhaps an anachronism now, was not strictly a misnomer then.

THE EDITORS.

The paper in the course of its existence has had 11 editors. I can only touch on a few of these, though all are worthy of mention. The fifth in order, Mr. R. S. Gundry, who presided over the destinies of the paper from 1866 until 1878, is still alive and has made his home in Wiltshire. This shows that in spite of what we have heard to the contrary, journalism must be a healthy occupation. In am sure that my friend Mr. Green must derive much satisfaction from this comforting example of editorial longevity. After him came amongst others Mr. Frederick Balfour, the notable Chinese scholar and translator; Mr. Maclellan, author of "The Story of Shanghai"; and perhaps best known of them all, Mr. "Bob" Little, athlete, oarsman, enthusiastic Volunteer and amateur actor, fluent writer and ready speaker, a man who the French would have described physically and metaphorically as tout rond —may we say, all round good nature and no angles?

THE PROPRIETORS.

I pass to the proprietors of the newspaper. Mr. Shearman, the original editor and proprietor, was followed in the second of these capacities by Mr. Edwin Pickwoad. On his death, the late Mr. Henry Morriss acquired a controlling interest which has remained ever since in his hands, and those of his family. To Mr. Morriss's fostering care and generosity, to his realization of the part which such a paper could and should play in the education and development of his beloved Shanghai, and to his unfaltering belief in its future, are due the present prosperity of the "North-China Daily News," and the land on which these splendid new premises have been erected. Mr. Morriss, as you all know, was a great rider and lover of horses, and it was doubtless his indulgence in that capital form of sport, the Paper Hunt, which led him to appreciate the real value and proper destination of a large-sized morning paper. As a serious newspaper proprietor, as well as a true sportsman, he preferred to guide his followers with well selected scraps of paper rather than with the scent of the elusive red herring.

It is a matter of satisfaction and congratulation that the control of the paper should have remained on his death in the family of whom Mr. Harry and Mr. Gordon Morriss, the present directors, like their father can be trusted to respect the paper's independence and to appreciate its value as the organ of an enlightened public opinion with no selfish objects in view and no individual axe to grind.

THE CONTRIBUTORS.

The paper has had the good fortune as well as the good sense to open its columns to several distinguished contributors among whom are men who are famous for their study and knowledge of things Chinese, and of the life and activities of the Chinese people. May I mention first Dr. Arthur Smith, whose delightful "Chinese Characteristics" has become a classic and will remain a joy to all new-comers anxious to obtain an insight into the lives, the qualities, the feelings and the idiosyncracies of the teeming millions of the Sons of Han, among whom choice or destiny has determined their future residence. Other vigorous and instructive writers on their respective subjects are Dr. Martin, a contributor for over 60 years, Archdeacon Moule, and the Rev. C. E. Darwent. I was also pleased to learn that a former British Consul-General and distinguished Sinologue, the late Sir Everard Fraser, was wont occasionally to escape the routine of office work and the tedium of despatch writing to contribute under a pseudonym some interesting reminiscences to the paper. That is an admirable example which should certainly be followed by his successor (laughter), and if you, Mr. Green; can prevail on Mr. Barton to take up Sir Everard's pen and become a contributor, be it of memoirs, poetry, sport, travel, fact or fiction, I can at least assure you that your editorial patience will not be strained by the illegibility of his copy—a defect from which I understand some of the distinguished contributors to the "North China" are not immune. Being by compulsion rather, I fear, than by inclination, a humble delver in the Legation archives, I can honestly say that Mr. Barton's beautiful handwriting is a joy and a relief to the weary seeker after official knowledge. I say it with all due jealousy, being a very indifferent penman myself.

CORRESPONDENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

The paper has also some remarkable Chinese contributors whose mastery over our language, fluency of expression and distinction of style, are at once our admiration and our despair. To mention but a few; first the late Mr. Spencer Laisun, a permanent member of the staff; then among the outside contributors Mr. V. K. Ting, the eminent authority on Chinese geology; Dr. Wang Chung-hui, the Jurist; Dr. Wu Lien-teh, the discoverer of the pneumonic plague bacillus in Manchuria, and last but not least, that old die hard conservative and polyglot controversialist, Mr. Ku Hung-ming.

A special feature of the "North China Daily News" is the army of correspondents in the interior composed of both sexes who contribute admirable letters from all parts of China describing the course of events and the trend of thought in their districts. These letters are of great assistance to the student of China's affairs, as they enable him to form a more or less comprehensive picture of the political situation in China. I sincerely hope that the paper will continue to encourage these local correspondents.

The subject matter, the style and the printing of the "North-China Daily News" are a sufficient tribute to the excellence of the staff, but the paper is nothing if not up-to-date, and it has recently secured the services of a talented Russian caricaturist, Mr. Sapajou, who must I think be the deity whom the poet Burns had in his mind when he said:

'O, wad some power the giftie gie us
To see airselves as ithers see us.'

I speak feelingly but with conviction as one of his victims. As for what I hope I may be allowed to call without disrespect the "side shows," I gather that the dramatic and musical critics are always prepared to break a friendly lance in the columns of the paper with those of their readers who venture to challenge the authority or accuracy of their judgments, and the paper is altogether so admirably equipped that even in the extremely improbable event of the failure of the editorial inspiration, or of Rodney Gilbert's imagination and of the flight of the other helpers, there is always, I understand, in reserve that versatile and omniscient polemist Mr. Gordius Nielsen, who can be relied upon to create a diversion (Laughter).

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

It is, however, not only the official and ceremonious inauguration of these spacious and imposing premises which makes this day a memorable one in the annals of the "North-China Daily News." The paper also proudly recalls the fact that this year is the 60th anniversary of its existence, and that we are invited to celebrate its Diamond Jubilee. There is something about the term "Diamond Jubilee" which appeals to our imagination and claims our sympathy. Perhaps it is because we associate the expression with those very elderly couples, dear old Darbies and Joans who marry young enough and live long enough to celebrate 60 years of connubial felicity and call it a Diamond Wedding. The analogy with a Diamond Jubilee is sufficient proof that to-day's celebration has such a venerable and highly respectable sanction as befits so respectable and venerable an institution as the "Old Lady of The Bund."

But the expression and the occasion recall to me another celebration which I was privileged to witness 27 years ago—the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria. The year 1897 marked the apogee of that great Sovereign's reign and the combination of the era which will for ever bear her name. In the eyes of her loyal subjects the Empire had never been so mighty or so secure. We were at peace with all the world. In Egypt we were preparing under the skilful and vigorous leadership of Lord Kitchener the expedition which was to free the Sudan from the fanatical rule of the Mahdi and avenge by the victories of Atbara and Omdurman the death of Gordon. Never had our prestige stood higher, never had the horizon appeared so free of cloud. But before the Great Queen passed away, a shadow was to fall across the closing days of her life. England was to find herself engaged in the South African War and to see her strength and resources sorely tried in the task of maintaining one of the outposts of her Empire against the resolute, brave and resourceful enemy. Queen Victoria lived long enough to receive from Lord Roberts the assurance of the ultimate victory of our arms, but she was not spared to witness and approve the final settlement which, by its statesmanlike moderation and political foresight ensured the creation of a United South Africa, and when in 1914 the great storm cloud of war burst upon the world, rallied to the side of Great Britain in support of the Empire and in defence of freedom the adversaries of only 14 years before.

TSZLING'S MANY MEMORIES.

Just as Queen Victoria through her long reign experienced the trials and anxieties which beset a great Empire in the making and lived to see it emerge triumphant and prosperous, so the "North-China Daily News" has in the course of its existence seen the state of China and the fortunes of British trade and prosperity of Shanghai, as is witnessed by the splendid buildings erected by British enterprise on The Bund of which this edifice is a notable example. Surveying things as a whole, the "North-China Daily News" has seen the old Manchu Dynasty after successfully overcoming a formidable and widespread rebellion, decay, weaken and finally collapse before the challenge of Western innovation and the influx of modern currents of thought.

It is particularly as a witness of and a commentator on these phases of China's political evolution that an English newspaper like the "North-China Daily News" should endeavour to fill the double rôle of a dispassionate historian and of a friendly critic. I fear that in recording and commenting on the present unrest, disunion and lack of stability in the country, we are I think, too prone to forget that we are ourselves in some measure responsible. It must be remembered that we foreigners originally forced the door of China's exclusiveness and, first by wringing from a reluctant Chinese government extraterritorial rights, special privileges and concessions, and then by opening up the country with railways and by steam navigation on the inland waters—as well as by the moral, religious and educational propaganda of our missionaries, we gradually introduced Western ideas and novel political theories. Subsequently by attracting young Chinese to study in America and Europe we inculcated in the younger generation the belief that our methods and ideals were superior to theirs, and in so doing we sowed the seeds of the 1911 Revolution.

China is now suffering from the after effects of that convulsion of her political and social system, and when one considers her history and the nature of her institutions and the character of her inhabitants, it is not surprising that the country should take some time to find its feet and to evolve order out of the confusion created by the collapse of a time-honoured and centralized form of government based on the rule of an autocratic, sacrosanct and inaccessible Emperor, and its replacement by the strange and complex machinery of a

JAPAN'S GRAND OLD MAN

Mitsuru Toyama, Samurai, Socialist and Great Gentleman: Most Commanding Figure in Modern Japan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Feb. 13.

A breaker of Cabinets, an enthusiastic supporter of a revolutionary cause, provided those involved had not contravened a criminal code, a champion of the weak and the poor, a man that the highest in the land fear,—such is a stoutly-built, grey-beard of Japan who has lived in two worlds, that of Feudal Japan before Commodore Perry knocked at the door, and of the present, now one of the Great Powers of the World.

Mitsuru Toyama, for such is his name, is revered and respected by friends and foes alike. What he has done, his escapades and his feats, would fill volumes. Over 70 years of age to-day, he still commands the perfect loyalty of several hundred persons who regard his word as law. Young men burn to join him, work for him, fight for him, do anything for him; but those who have managed to be accepted into what some regard as the charmed circle of Toyama's adherents are severely tested—tested for courage, kindness of heart, readiness to sacrifice everything in order to achieve an ideal.

Millionaires fear Toyama; the poor idolize him. The wronged have only to convince him that they have been shabbily dealt with and Toyama immediately moves heaven and earth to see that justice is done.

HELPED DR. SUN.

It is difficult to devise an Occidental figure that would apply to Toyama. One rather likes to liken him to the moving spirits of the French Foreign Legion in the 19th Century or to the leaders of the doughty White Company that Conan Doyle immortalized. Toyama never was an outlaw. He always held the person of the Emperor in the deepest respect and was ready to combat any cause that refused to accept this fundamental basic fact on which the whole social and political structure of the Japanese Empire is reared. Toyama never stooped to anything like banditry or robbery. He never countenanced any such thing among his followers who had implicitly to obey the Bushido code laid down in feudal days for the samurai (knights of Old Japan) though the code required that, to wash away a stain of dishonour, the culprit had to commit hara-kiri.

When the tide in China was turning against the Manchus Toyama was heart and soul in favour of the revolutionaries, against the wishes Japanese Government. His home has always been a refuge for political refugees and Dr. Sun Yat-sen was, just before the revolution in China a guest in the unpretentious home of Mr. Toyama, at Reinanzaka, Tokio.

THE KOMAGATA MARU AFFAIR.

Toyama has also had a share in the plottings and conspirings that were an indispensable part of the Great War. His championing of the cause of some Indian revolutionaries all but led to difficult diplomatic issues between the British Empire and that of the Rising Sun. People will faintly remember that a Japanese vessel of the name of Komagata Maru was the source of a great deal of trouble to the British, but few know the inside story of the affair. The Komagata Maru had trouble in Canada, was in fact a gun-runner for the Indian revolutionaries and was manned, so the story goes, by Indians and Japanese, both determined to aid the Indian revolutionaries even to the extent of having to fight a British vessel—a rather serious affair when one remembers that Japan was an ally of England. The ill-fated expedition failed, British Secret Service men having got wind of the plot and two of the leaders—Gupta and Thankur—managed to get to Japan from the United States. The British Embassy demanded their arrest. The Foreign Office issued orders to that effect and gave the men 24 hours to leave Japan. The only ships sailing within that period of time were going westwards and so nothing but arrest was in sight for the two revolutionaries as soon as any vessel they took touched port. Toyama heard of the matter and used all his influence and oratory with the police authorities to have the order of deportation extended for sufficient time when a ship would be sailing for the United States. The matter having now reached the dimensions of an international affair, the police rightly refused. Toyama managed to have the two men brought to his house and there asked them whether they were in any way allied with Germany. They stoutly denied this. "Then," said Toyama, "I will save you."

CHALLENGED PRINCE YAMAGATA.

Prince Yamagata, the "Bismarck of Japan" and the most powerful statesman that Japan has ever known, respected the wishes of only one person, Mitsuru Toyama. Prince Yamagata was the head of the Choshu clan, which controls the Army. Clan pride is still the governing factor in a great deal of Japan's domestic politics and when the Prince Regent (then the Crown Prince) grew to man's estate, Prince Yamagata devised the ambitious plan of having a Choshu princess one day Empress of the Japanese Empire. In the meantime, the Princess Nagako Kuni, grand-daughter of Prince Shimazu, leader of the Satsuma Clan, bitter rivals of the Choshus, had been informally selected to wed his Imperial Highness. Prince Yamagata determined to prevent the alliance which would give Satsuma a powerful lead over Choshu and moved heaven and earth to have the match annulled. Somehow or another the story got wind. Toyama called in person on Prince Yamagata and delivered an "ultimatum" to him. The grizzled warrior bowed before the absolute tornado of public censure that followed and retired from participation in active politics, domestic or otherwise. Misturu Toyama's adherents claim that it was his attitude that did the trick.

SOUTHERN PIRATES

Hongkong, Feb. 21.

Whilst the Chinese steamer On Lee, with over 200 passengers, was on her way from Hongkong to Kongmoon last night shots were suddenly fired by pirates on the main deck. The Chief Officer, Mr. T. Martin, immediately ordered the Indian guards to prepare to defend the bridge and all lights on board the vessel were put out. Mr. Martin then steered the ship to Hongkong.

Near Castle Peak rockets were fired from the ship, attracting a police launch, which escorted the On Lee into the harbour.

The ship was strongly guarded by the police and a large number of suspected persons were removed to the police station. It is believed that the pirates threw their arms overboard. There were no casualties.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HISTORIC EVENT IN HANGCHOW

Wondering Populace Sees First Aeroplane to Circle Over City

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Feb. 16.

The city remains quiet, and I think all fear of trouble from troops is gradually disappearing although the people to-day were a little scared when they saw the first aeroplane circle round the city.

The Civil Governor's father died on Wednesday at his home in Dzenyien, near Shaohsing. Immediately after the death he telegraphed to the Tuban, and according to Chinese custom, begged to go into retirement, and wished to be relieved of his official duties for the time being. The Tuban sent messages of condolence, but replied asking him kindly to continue in office because the present state of the country just now demanded it. Many have gone to his home to show their sympathy, and sorrow with him in his bereavement.

The New Year festivities are slowly coming to an end, and people are gradually returning to their work. The shops are opening up, and the clanging of cymbals ceases.

We hear that one Chinese insurance firm did so well last year that they are opening several branches throughout the province.

CHINESE DEMONSTRATION IN HARBIN

Harbin, Feb. 20.

A large crowd of Chinese marched through the streets today bearing banners reading. "Down with Ostroumov! Down with the Russians!" They finally surrounded the railway offices demanding an interview with M. Ostroumov, who is General Manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway here, with the intention of informing him that he must resign and quit China. The interview was refused and a noisy demonstration followed, but police finally dispersed the crowd.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

REVIVALIST MOVEMENT IN JAPAN

Tokio, Feb. 20.

To-day the Prime Minister and the Minister of Education opened a series of conferences with representative religious leaders aiming at the improvement of the national thought and the uplifting of the people's morale, which are declared seriously to have declined since the disaster last year.

The Premier in his address laid stress on the necessity for checking tendencies to mock at faith and to extreme radicalism, which he declared to be totally inconsistent with national ideals.

To-day's conferences were attended by Buddhist and Shinto leaders. Christian representatives of all denominations have been summoned to attend to-morrow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

IN TYRE

By Eva Spurway

In Tyre they ran, with naked feet,
To load the heavy trading ships,
And merchants screamed, with darkened lips,
Their orders through the noise and heat;
And there was toil, without surcease,
To catch the favoured wind for Greece.

For here a merchant's trading-mark
Was black and red on corded bales,
Where beggars wailed their woeful tales,
Along the burning quay, till dark,
And thanked God for a little shade,
Or cursed the myrmidons of trade.

The burdened slaves of ancient Tyre
Wore twisted cloth about their loins;
But Hebrews, paid with Hebrew coins,
They sped like blue and crimson fire,
And ear-rings wore of heavy gold,
And chanted songs none knew how old.

Tyre plies no more her Grecian trade
With cloth and scarlet, as of old,
Great merchants cord no crates of gold,
Nor things of ivory and jade—
And yet are not the richer we
Who have these for a memory?

SIR Havilland de Sausmarez, Bailiff of Guernsey, has issued a statement to the people of Guernsey urging them to relieve his Majesty's Government of so much of the cost as they can afford of the pensions of Guernseymen enlisted in Guernsey for the war and the dependants of those who fell. The Government asked for £275,000 a year, and a special States Committee recommends the payment of £25,000 a year for 15 years. This payment, Sir Havilland says, is a debt of honour, and he adds that if no reasonable response is made to the Government's request, it seems safe to say that Guernsey cannot look forward to sympathetic consideration of their difficulties at the Home Office or material help in dealing with them.

felt that such an occasion as the opening of the new building must not pass without some fitting celebration by the Chinese staff. During the past 17 years on the "North-China" he had invariably found that however much work had to be done, he always received smiling and ungrudging help from his Chinese fellow-workers. In this connexion he wished particularly to name Ah Kow, Che Nam and Fuh Shui. They and other members of the Chinese staff and himself had worked very closely together on the "North-China Daily News." He knew, too, that they felt as he did, that they were both working not only for themselves, but were trying to do what they could to help China—that great country in which foreigners found themselves so well received and treated with such friendliness. He thanked them in conclusion for the most loyal co-operation and the friendship they had displayed towards him throughout the 17 years he had been with among them.

Mr. W. H. Chen spoke briefly on behalf of the Chinese staff and thanked the Directors, Mr. Davis and Mr. Green for their kindness and friendship. He hoped there would be annual dinners of this kind so that the Chinese and foreign staff would come to know each other better.

Mr. Francis Zia, foreign secretary of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, on behalf of the invited guests, paid a warm tribute to the "North-China Daily News," as a newspaper which commented with fairness and the utmost impartiality upon Chinese problems and events, and was a sterling example of what could be achieved by friendly co-operation between foreigners and Chinese.

Mr. R. W. Davis said that the few words he had to say were solely to the Chinese staff. He was very glad to welcome them for two reasons, firstly because he had a number of very old friends on the Chinese staff, four of whom—Fuh Shui, Si Long, Kang Yung-kuei, the compradore, and Kang Sing,—he had known for 20 years. Secondly, he welcomed them because most of the Chinese staff of the "North-China Daily News" were printers and pressmen, "and I am printer and pressman myself," Mr. Davis went on. (Laughter). He felt he must also couple with his remarks Mr. Davy and Mr. Haslam. He hoped that he also would meet the staff again 20 years later and that before that time they would have many more dinners together. Proposing the health of their guests, he reminded them that two foreign guests, Mr. McIntosh and Mr. Douglass, were also printers and pressmen (renewed applause).

Mr. McIntosh responded in Chinese, after which Mr. Kang Sing, on behalf of the compradore, his father (who, said Mr. Kang, had been with the "North-China" for over 30 years) and Mr. Kang Fuh-shui, offered a welcome to the foreign guests and expressed the thanks of the Chinese staff for a most enjoyable evening.

A correspondent writes on the back of every envelope he posts locally the name of the street and district in which it is posted and the date and time. If this were done by others, no doubt, the postal authorities could be greatly assisted in finding out who is responsible for the present delays. Just now few things can be indicated with less precision than when our correspondents will receive our letters.

Mr. C. F. Lawson, of the Phoenix Assurance Co., left Shanghai on Tuesday by the str. Mooltan, and is proceeding to South Africa. His departure is greatly regretted, as he has taken a prominent part in the life of the community during the three years he has been here. After serving throughout the war he was appointed to the Shanghai office of his company, and shortly after his arrival joined the Shanghai Scottish S.V.C., in which he became a very popular and valuable member. He represented the company at Rugby football and in S.V.C. competitions, especially in Lewis Gun work, while in other directions he was equally well known.

POSTAL DEVELOPMENT IN SHANGHAI

When the present post office was built in 1906 and leased for a period of 20 years it was considered that it would be ample for the whole period of the lease. By some it was considered a wastefully large structure, an unwieldy white elephant. The extraordinary growth of postal business and the taking over, earlier than anticipated, of the foreign postal agencies, before all the necessary arrangements had been possible, had the effect of making existing office accommodation entirely and hopelessly inadequate. Much inconvenience has in consequence been felt by the public, many annoyances have resulted, and many inevitable delays have been caused owing to the cramped space and the swarming crowds pressing at its counters.

While all these hindrances will fall away when the post office moves into its new building, the postal authorities realize that one central office for the whole of Shanghai, however large this office may be, can no longer meet the needs of this constantly growing city with its continually lengthening distances. It is therefore the intention gradually to establish a number of fully equipped and fully functioning post offices at suitable points in various parts of Shanghai, to divide the Shanghai postal area into sharply defined postal sections with an office for each section.

EACH SECTION ITS OWN NAME.

Each section will have its distinctive postal appellation such as "Central Section," "Western Section," "Northern Section," etc. Altogether it will probably be found necessary and convenient to form at least eight such sections. By eventually having one's mail matter addressed, as is done in large cities abroad, to the postal section in which one lives, "Shanghai C," "Shanghai W," "Shanghai N," etc., sorting at the Central Office will be made easy and a much speedier delivery should result, while mistakes and misdeliveries will be brought down to their irreducible minimum. Shanghai is growing too large for one central sorting staff to be able to acquire and retain that intimate knowledge of the whole postal area with all its streets and lanes which is required for efficient and rapid sorting of the large quantities of mail matter passing through their hands.

Sectional offices will be adequately staffed and equipped to allow all manner of postal transactions to be effected. Parcels have to undergo formalities due to Customs requirements, but it is hoped that it will be possible, at least to some extent, to accept and deliver parcels at sectional offices.

All these offices will be connected with the Central Office by a service of regular and rapid motor vans so that mail matter will suffer no delays but be delivered or despatched as soon as if it had been posted at the Central Office itself.

REDIRECTED LETTERS.

From a purely postal point of view the establishing of sectional offices will be the means of overcoming many of the existing difficulties which lead to almost inevitable mistakes and irregularities. When for instance a member of the public asks that his mail matter shall be redirected from his former to his new address, it might seem a simple matter to effect such redirection. But if it is known that there are on an average no less than 2,000 such requests on file at any one time it may be understood how almost impossible it is for a special sorting staff in one central office to bear in mind all these various requests at the time all the mail matter for Shanghai passes through their hands. Written records are of no avail as there is no time to consult records when the mails have to be rapidly sorted.

This is only one of the many difficulties experienced under the present centralized working system, difficulties which will not be solved by mere additional working space but only by an organized decentralization of all postal work, by a postal division of Shanghai into distinct sections.

CHINA SOCIETY OF SCIENCE & ARTS

New Medico-Biological Section: An Art Exhibition Planned: All-Round Interests and Pursuits

The formation on Monday last of a Medico-Biological Section of "The China Society of Science and Arts" marks the latest development in the wave of intellectual interests that is sweeping Shanghai and China generally.

In a recent issue of "Nature," one of the leading British scientific papers, the well known American geologist, Professor J. W. Gregory, F.R.S., who recently carried out an expedition into West China to investigate geological problems in connexion with the highlands of Yunnan, published a highly interesting and instructive article entitled "The Scientific Renaissance in China." Amongst other phases of this subject he mentions the activities of "The China Society of Science and Arts," and "The Shanghai Chemical Society," both of which have for their official organ, "The China Journal of Science and Arts," and both of which have been started recently in Shanghai.

The China Society of Science and Arts is the outcome of a movement set on foot by Mr. A. de C. Sowerby, primarily to have a Biological Society in China, with a journal of its own. It was found, however, that there were not enough biologists in China to undertake such an organization successfully and so it was decided, after consultation with Dr. J. C. Ferguson, the well known sinologue, and other prominent scientists in China, to form a society with a sufficiently wide scope to embrace all branches of human knowledge in relation to China.

THE SECTIONS.

In order that individual sciences and arts should be given due prominence, it was decided to have "Sections" for these within the larger organization.

The Society has now been formed, and the officers for the present year elected. Several "Sections" have been formed, and the society now stands as follows:—

General Society.

Vice presidents: John C. Ferguson, PH.D. (Arts). Herbert Chatley, D.SC. (Science).

Hon. Sec.: Verne Dyson, B.A.

Hon. Treas.: Clarice S. Moise, B.A.

Committee: Miss Mary A. Mullikin, Miss J. G. Anderson, PH.D., Wu Lien teh, M.D., Prof. C. R. Kellogg, Rev. George D. Wilder.

Mr. George Sokolsky, of No. 10 Route de Grouchy, Shanghai, is organizing a Political and Social Science section.

There is provision in the Constitution of the Society for Patrons: that is to say, any one who denotes a sum of $100 or upward to the funds of the Society becomes a patron. Mr. E. Luty is the first patron of the Society.

The objects of the society embodied in Clause I of the Constitution are as follows:—

The Society shall be called "The China Society of Science and Arts," and shall have for its aims the advancement of scientific research in China and the promotion of interest in Chinese Arts, Literature, Philosophy and kindred subjects. Its activities shall take the form of encouraging the establishment of local museums, research stations, field clubs, art galleries, technical exhibitions and reference libraries, etc.; to co-operate with all public establishments such as biological and pathological laboratories, fisheries boards, meteorological, astronomical and seismological observatories; to assist as far as possible the work of individual qualified investigators; and generally to advance human knowledge.

The activities of the Society have already begun to be felt.

SOME ATTRACTIVE MEETINGS.

Owing to the interest and generosity of Messrs. Arthur and Theodore Sopher, who have kindly placed the beautiful concert hall in their residence at 445 Avenue Joffre at the disposal of the Society, the latter are now able to hold monthly meetings, at which matters of intellectual interest, especially in regard to China, are discussed by competent lecturers. Meetings are held there on the last Saturday of each month, at 5 p.m., the hosts very kindly providing refreshments, and at which all interested in the progress of science, art, literature and kindred subjects in China are welcome.

At the first meeting, held on January 26, Mr. A. de C. Sowerby gave his presidential address, taking as his subject "The Progress of Science in China." Dr. F. Oppenheim gave a most interesting lecture on "Birth Ratios in China," and Mr. G. Sokolsky a lecture on "Secret Societies in China."

The next meeting is on February 23 at 5 p.m., when Dr. Chatley will speak on "The Mystery of Cohesion" and Mr. Jabin Hsu give a lecture entitled "Gems of Chinese Literature."

1. To carry out medical and biological research work in China.
2. To establish, if possible a laboratory for such work in Shanghai for members of the Section.
3. To appoint specialists in various medical subjects to prepare brief extracts of various articles appearing throughout the world in their own special lines, which extracts will help medical men engaged in other lines to keep au courant with medical progress in the world.
4. To have lectures delivered in various languages, especially English, French and German, as there are many medical men in Shanghai who are familiar with but one of these languages.

Under the auspices of the Art Section it is proposed to organize an Art Exhibition in Shanghai this spring, and later in Tientsin and Peking, at which both European and Chinese artists may exhibit their work. Announcements regarding these exhibitions will be made later.

MUSEUM AND ART GALLERY.

One of the main objects of the Society will be the establishment of a Natural History Museum, Art Gallery and Reference Library, and the activities of the Shanghai members will be directed to that end. It is hoped that similar undertakings will be attempted in other important centres in China.

The only qualification necessary for membership to the Society is an interest in its aims. The annual subscription is $10 (Shanghai currency) and this entitles the member to the privileges of the Society and to receive the "China Journal of Science and Arts," its official organ. Members may belong to any or all of the Sections, provided they conform to such regulations any section may decide upon.

Applications for membership should be sent direct to the manager of the "China Journal of Science and Arts," at the office of the latter, 102 The Ben Building, Shanghai, which is also the headquarters of the Society for the present.

A Chinese detective was shot at near 615 Avenue Edward VII just after midnight on Monday night, while in charge of a search party. On being approached by the officers a man named Chang Yoong-zen drew a pistol and fired a bullet which passed through both cheeks of the detective. On being arrested the Chinese gave information which led to the arrest by the British Police of a man stated to be the ring-leader of a dangerous gang.

THE NEW U. S. COURT JUDGE

Announcement from Department of State

Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, has received from the Department of state the following telegram regarding the appointment of Judge Milton Dwight Purdy to be Judge of the U. S. Court for China. It is assumed that in definitely announcing the appointment the State Department intends to imply confirmation by the Senate. The telegram was sent from Washington on February 20 and states:—

"Milton Dwight Purdy has been appointed as Judge of the Court for China. Judge Purdy was born in Mogadore, Ohio, in 1865. He graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1891 and was admitted to the Bar in 1892. From 1893 to 1902 he was successively Assistant City Attorney of Hennepin County in Minnesota, Assistant U. S. Attorney and U. S. Attorney. He served as Assistant Attorney General of the U. S. from 1903 to 1905, and as Assistant to the Attorney-General of the U. S. from 1905 to 1908. He was appointed U. S Judge of the District of Minnesota, and served from 1908 to May 1909 when he resigned He has been in the Philippines during the past year on a special mission, relating to alien property. On his return last February he was put in charge of the alien property section of the Department of Justice. A short time ago he was requested by the of the Aircraft Division in the War Trade Section."

SHIPBUILDING COSTS IN SHANGHAI

Much has been written lately about the cheap cost of labour on the Continent in comparison with Great Britain and the consequent loss of work to the homeland, especially in large competitive repair jobs, but the following incident showing the alacrity and cheapness with which such work can be executed in Shanghai in comparison with other ports in the Orient is, we think, worthy of record. The str. Gleniffer, after having been on fire during her last voyage home, arrived back in Shanghai during the middle of January, part of the fire damage repairs having been executed in Antwerp, and it was the intention of the owners to have the completion of the repairs carried out either in Shanghai or Japan.

Estimates for the work were submitted here amounting to £2,700 and the vessel then proceeded to her final port of discharge in Japan where competitive tenders, the lowest of which amounted to £10,000, were also received. The difference was so enormous that the owners immediately ordered the vessel back to Shanghai where the work was entrusted to the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., Ld.

The repairs were carried out with all speed, work proceeding night and day, and the vessel left on Wednesday morning immediately after completion for the Pacific Coast to load for home.

Mr. M. J. Divecha, the well-known Parsee cricketer, unfortunately has met with a serious accident. About 9.15 a.m. on the 15th instant he was riding on his motor cycle along North Szechuen Road and near Boone Road was compelled to halt owing to a traffic signal, there being then, first a motor-car, and then a tramcar in front of him. When the line of traffic was released, the tramcar moved on, but the Chinese chauceur of the motor-car for some reason backed his car, which ran into Mr. Divecha's machine, damaging the motor cycle very badly and also injuring Mr. Divecha's left foot. He was taken to the General Hospital, where an X-ray examination showed that the bones were broken, but the foot is very badly bruised and cut.

THE DUTY OF A NEWSPAPER.

It therefore seems to me all the more essential that the "North-China Daily News," representing as it does the weighty opinions of the important and influential British community in Shanghai, opinions which have their repercussion not only in China but at home in England, should continue as it has done in the past to approach China's problems in a friendly and sympathetic spirit. It is essential that it should remember that we are after all guests here in China who are under obligation to our host. It is therefore necessary to maintain a nice sense of proportion, to avoid over-statement and exaggeration, to admit the right of Chinese thinkers to opinions which we do not necessarily share, and to give the recognized Central Government of China, which is in friendly relations with H. M. Government and which I fully believe is sincerely anxious to maintain those relations, the credit for its good intentions.

Such an attitude is not incompatible with a sturdy defence of British interests in China or Shanghai, should these appear to be in any way endangered; nor does it preclude the friendly and candid criticism of events and policies in China, or even the stern reproval of abuses such as opium and brigandage. Conducted on such lines, the "North-China Daily News" will not only be a great asset for British prestige and British interest in China, but a real factor for good and an abiding influence.

HOPES FOR THE FUTURE.

The life of a newspaper is fortunately not subject to the laws of nature, and therefore we have every reason to hope that this Jubilee is only the first of many such anniversaries. The existence and fortunes of the "North-China Daily News" are bound up with the life and prosperity of the British community in Shanghai, and I cannot conceive—provided the paper continues to be produced under such able management, edited with such skill and directed to such unselfish objects as it is at present—why it should not become an evergreen and flourish indefinitely, or at least until the printer, his ink, his "devil" and all his works, shall have disappeared into the limbo of forgotten things—a contingency which is not likely to occur in my life time or in yours.

It is in the belief that the "North-China Daily News" has a great mission to perform, and in the confidence that it possesses the strength, the means and the ability to fulfil it, that I once more offer to the directors, the proprietors, the editor and the staff, as well as to all its subscribers and readers my heartiest congratulations on this auspicious occasion and my fervent good wishes that the leading and oldest English newspaper in China, now that it has been transplanted to this new and palatial building, will continue to develop its activities and to reap the rewards of its public service in the form of an ever-increasing circle of English and Chinese readers and of an ever widening influence. (Applause).

MR. H. E. MORRISS'S COMPLIMENTS

Mr. H. E. Morriss said:—Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen, It is my pleasant duty as representative of the family who are the proprietors of the "North-China Daily News," to thank His Excellency the Minister for the trouble he has taken in coming down here, and for the very kind words he has spoken. I am sure that those whom I represent will be highly gratified on reading what the Minister has said, for his words cannot fail to touch a chord that is still closely tied to this spot, and to this office.

I am myself ignorant as to the exact date when the affectionate term "The Old Grandmother" was first bestowed on the "North-China Daily News," but researches into ancient history have revealed the fact that when the "North-China Herald" was born on Saturday, August 31, 1850, there were only 157 grown men in Shanghai, of whom only 31 were married. Presumably they had children, and it must have been some of these who in later life found the term appropriate, for nearly everybody else had disappeared. But the "Herald" and the "Daily News" remained. What, therefore, would be more natural, than naming what to them represented hoary age with such a kind appellation!

But while this conjecture may not be in strict conformity with the real facts, it is nevertheless true that the "North-China Daily News" has had the good fortune to be regarded with much sympathy by its readers, and for this we have every reason to be grateful. Three-quarters of a century have nearly passed since this old lady saw the light of day, but her vigour could not have been maintained if she had not had a succession of capable guardians to look after her health. It must be remembered that few papers in the world occupy such a unique position as does the "North-China Daily News." Although the paper is a British journal which has ever striven to uphold the best traditions of British journalism, and has devoted itself to supporting every legitimate British interest, it must not be forgotten that Shanghai is a cosmopolitan community, among the members of which the "North-China Daily News" has many readers who have a right to expect that a journal of this standing shall treat their interests with impartiality. Our motto "Impartial Not Neutral" has therefore a special significance, and it is the difficult task of the editor to see that the spirit of impartiality be not infringed.

May I be permitted to say a few words of personal regard for the editor, Mr. O. M. Green? He has succeeded a line of editors of which any paper may feel proud. For 13 years Mr. Green has conducted this paper with painstaking care, and it has grown under his hand, ably and loyally assisted by our Managing Director, Mr. R. W. Davis, and the staff, to a size and circulation that is most gratifying to its proprietors. It is owing to Mr. Green's ability and energy that our late quarters became too small for our requirements and that we are here assembled to-day for the purpose of inaugurating our new premises.

Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen, with your permission I shall send home to my family a report which will speak of the honour you have done them by being present at this ceremony. I shall mention that his Excellency the Minister has come all the way from Peking, in order to perform the formal opening of our new offices, and that you have been kind enough to come in large numbers to assist, and to see the place from which it is hoped that the "North-China Daily News" will be edited, printed and published, when our great-grandchildren are all old men and women (applause).

PRESIDENT TSAO KUN'S MESSAGE

Upon learning that the formal opening ceremony of the "North-China Daily News" new building was to take place last Friday, Field-Marshal Tsao Kun, President of the Chinese Republic, sent the following telegram:—

"O. M. Green, Esq. Editor, "North-China Daily News," Shanghai.—I am directed by his Excellency the President of China to send you the following message:—'On the occasion of the formal opening of your splendid new premises, I wish to tender my sincere congratulations to you and your staff. Since my earliest recollections I have known of and been familiar with your admirable publication, which is and always has been typical of sound British commercial principles and enterprise. I have watched with keen interest and the utmost pleasure the progress of your honourable journal, the daily as well as the weekly, from the days when Shanghai itself was but an insignificant place and when your paper occupied a comparatively small place in the realm of commerce and journalism. In the development of Shanghai into one of the world's greatest commercial centres your paper has, indeed, taken a most prominent part. This progress has been mutual, and I trust and feel confident that the sterling qualities which have won you such remarkable success in the past will continue to bring their just reward in the future.'—Wang Yu-chih, chief secretary to the President."

THE FOREIGN MINISTER'S COMPLIMENTS.

Dr. Wellington Koo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, sends us the following:—

"It is with much pleasure that I extend to you and through you to the publishers and staff of the "North-China Daily News" my hearty congratulations on the occasion of the opening of your new building. The "North-China Daily News," through the commanding position it has won for itself in the journalistic world, exercises a remarkable influence in the moulding of pubic opinion in China and the Chinese public always looks upon its views with high esteem even though it may at times differ from them. The development of democracy depends upon the dissemination of accurate news and the formation of sound public opinion. I therefore wish long life to the "North-China Daily News" and hope that it will exert an increasing force in China in the creation of sound public opinion.—V. K. Wellington Koo."

THE GOVERNOR OF KIANGSU.

Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner for Foreign Affairs here, who represented also the Civil Governor of Kiangsu, Mr. Han Kuo-chun, in a congratulatory message said:—

"On the occasion of the formal opening ceremony of the new offices of the "North-China Daily News" I have great honour in representing Mr. Han Kuo-chun, the Civil Governor, and to express his heartiest congratulations, and also personally wishing the "Tsziingpao" the utmost success which it deserves for years to come. The "North-China" has for more than 70 years been the bulwark of fairplay and justice. China has for many years found in the "North-China Daily News" a great friend who has been willing to help her, to sorrow with her in her troubles and to rejoice with her in her joys. I trust the "North-China Daily News" will always maintain such great friendship and close relations with China, and I am sure that what is done for China will be greatly appreciated."

Mr. Wen Shih-tsen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs at Nanking, who came to Shanghai especially for the occasion, represented the President, Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan and the Nanking officials, and in a congratulatory message, says:—

"On behalf of the President, Marshal Chi, as well as myself and other Nanking officials, permit me to congratulate you on your wonderful success and your very fine building which is being opened to-day. "The North China Daily News" is the oldest foreign newspaper in Shanghai, first appearing under that name in 1864, but as a weekly paper it appeared even earlier, in 1850. With us Chinese, old age means much and we pay respect to an organization which has been able to survive so many difficulties for so long a period. But old age alone does not explain the great esteem in which we hold the "North-China Daily News." Much more important are the ethical standards, the sense of right and fairness, the unwillingness to become the servant of any special and selfish interest. These qualities of justice and decency have given the "North-China Daily News" a national prestige. Within recent years you have opened your columns to Chinese affairs and you have published extensively all sides of all questions. This has given to the foreign friends of China an opportunity to understand that we are not as bad as some would make us out to be and that in reality we are striving to reconstruct our country, although we are not certain what to do. In giving such information to foreigners you are doing a great service to China and you may be sure that the Chinese people appreciate it."

From Field Marshal Wu Pei-fu, Governor-General of Chihli, Shantung and Honan, Loyang.—It has been my pleasure to know of your paper for many years. I am told you have been steadily working and growing in our humble country for several tens of years. Your advocacy is of the best, the most peaceful and the most truthful. Now your honourable building is being formally opened. I trust that your business will continue to grow daily and I trust that your teachings will be better as each day goes on.—Wu Pei-fu.

From Admiral Tu Shieh-kuei, Commander-in-Chief of the Chinese Navy, Nanking.—Your excellent writings, teachings and advocacy have gained full leadership among the literature of the Far East and is a model example for other papers throughout the globe to follow. Allow me heartily to congratulate you upon the formal opening of your new building. Apart from ordering one of my staff officers to proceed to Shanghai to attend the official ceremonies I hasten to send you this telegram to greet and congratulate you. I wish you long life for ever and prosperity. — Tu Shieh-kuei, Commander-in-Chief of the Navy.

From His Excellency Han Kuo-chun, Civil Governor of Kiangsu.— Your paper is an example which throws out its light like the sun. It is full of glory and is like a wheel which continually revolves, but gives new things every day. I wish you every luck and blessing. Han Kuo-chun respectfully offers his bow.

From Gen. Liu Yu-ao, Chief of Staff to the Military Governor of Kiangsu and the Governor-General of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui.—Offer my sincerest and heartiest congratulations. Please convey to staff and directors. Sorry I cannot be at your opening but I have asked Mr. Wen Shih-tse to represent me.—Liu Yu-ao.

From Hon. Tu Tzun, Salt Commissioner for Chekiang.—Upon the formal opening of your new building, of which I have seen many beautiful pictures, allow me to offer you my humble congratulations. Your building is evidently a fine and up-to-date one but I hope that within few years to see you accommodated in even a larger and more spacious one. With you every success and a continuance of your high journalistic efficiency.—Tu Tzun.

SOUVENIRS AND GOOD WISHES

Framed souvenirs, with congratulatory messages, were received from Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Gen. Ho Feng-ling, Mr. Wen Shih-tsen, Mr. Hsu Yuan, and from Messrs. Pan Ching-poo, N. Y. Chang, Chen Shut-kai, Yuan Teng-shin, Chun Bing-him, and Mow Chin-tai.

Other congratulatory messages were received from Governor Han Kuo-chun, Mr. Tang Shao-yi, Mr. Kang Yu-wei, Gen. Liu Yu-ao, Gen. Lu Yung-chien, and Mr Chang Yi-ao.

Mr. Tu Tzun, Salt Commissioner for Chêkiang, sent in a beautiful silver shield.

Scrolls were sent in by Messrs Wen Tsung-yao, Sun Hung-yi, and Yen Chia-chih.

The following telegrams were yesterday received:—

"Offer heartiest congratulations opening new building. Sorry cannot be present in person, but with you in spirit. Drink to your success.—Chi Shieh-yuan."

"Continue your excellent services.—Tuan Chi-jui."

"On occasion opening of your new building I have pleasure in wishing you every success and prosperity. Your success is like the continued turning of a wheel I cannot be present with you personally, but I would like to race on my horse to greet you and congratulate you.—Lu Yung hsiang."

"Everybody knows of your goodness, which brings you success. May this continue from generation to generation.—Chang Tso-lin."

"You have come from afar to help China. Please continue to do so. Wish you continued success and hope you enter another new building larger than the present one soon."—Chang Hsiao-liang."

"You have built your foundation. Continue on your fight for righteousness.—Wang Yung kwang."

"Your advocacy is excellent and cannot be surpassed. It has reformed society. Congratulate you upon the completion of your new building. It is a matter which deserves the highest congratulation and gratitude.—Wang Cheng ping."

"You have worked hard to attain your present success. You have been faithful for fairplay and justice. Please continue Heartiest congratulations.—Feng Yu-hsiang."

Dinner to Chinese Staff

The Great Eastern Hotel on Saturday night was the scene of an enthusiastic gathering of all connected with a big daily newspaper, the occasion being a dinner given by the "North-China Daily News" to its Chinese staff in celebration of the opening of the new building. Over 300 Chinese compositors, machine-minders, pressmen, fitters, warehousemen, messengers, book-binders and clerks sat down to dinner, together with the foreign members of the staff. In addition to the Chinese guests, Mr. G. E. Sokolsky, Mr. G. McIntosh, and Mr. C. W. Douglass of the Presbyterian Mission Press and Miss C. England were invited. Mr. O. M. Green, editor of the "North-China Daily News," and Mr. R. W. Davis, managing director, were the joint chairmen.

Among those present were Mr Y. H. Chang, representing Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Governor-General of Kiangsi, Kiangsu and Anhui; Mr. S. W. Tong, representing Gen. Chang Hsiao-liang, son of and Chief Staff to the Governor-General of the Three Eastern Provinces; Judge T. S. K. Loh, representing Gen. Ho Heng-lin, Military Governor of Shanghai and Sungkiang; Col. G. S. Chang, representing Gen Lu Yung-chien, acting Director of Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary; and Mr. Chen Shen-chow, representing the Civil Governor of Kiangsu, Mr. Han Kuo-chun, and Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs. A dozen Chinese and several Japanese journalists were also present.

Mr. O. M. Green said the Directors, Mr. Davis, and he had the memorial closed a memorable and impressive ceremony.

THE WREATHS.

The wreaths laid on the memorial by civil and military representatives were very numerous and beautiful, and ranged from many of elaborate design to the simple wreath of laurel, H. M. Navy's tribute, and one posey of violets without a name, the whole making a massive floral group completely concealing the base of the monument. The offerings were representative of the whole community, private and public, and the following is a list of the principal contributors:—

BRITISH CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

The Tientsin Cotton Crisis: Customs Surtax: Broken Treaties: Trade Marks

The following resolution was passed on Thursday of last week at the Conference of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce in China and Hongkong:—

TIENTSIN COTTON CRISIS.—"That this Conference views with grave apprehension the decline of Chinese commercial morality as evidenced by the recurring instances in which many Chinese merchants have of late years disregarded their contractual obligations and more especially as demonstrated by the wholesale repudiation of forward contracts by the Chinese cotton dealers in Tientsin during the past three months. That this Conference is convinced that unless the validity of forward contracts be upheld, the very basis of China's international commerce throughout the Treaty Ports will be irretrivably undermined and trusts that, in view of the Chinese Government's aspirations as expressed at the Washington Conference, H. M. Minister will urge them to realize the gravity of the situation thus created and to ensure that speedy trial and execution of judgments be given in the Chinese Courts in cases against defaulting dealers."

1.—THE 2½ PER CENT. CUSTOMS SURTAX.—"That in view of the disregard of treaties and the many outrages which have occurred during the past year, this Conference desires to restate its position regarding the proposed 2½ per cent. Customs surtax. It reaffirms the view expressed last year that the effective control of the Provinces by the Government is an essential preliminary to all reforms, whether administrative or fiscal, and urges H. M. Minister to transmit to H. M. Government an expression of the earnest hope of this Association that the granting of the 2½ per cent. Customs surtax be made conditional on such reforms as will, in addition to preparing for the eventual abolition of likin, insure adequate protection to foreign life, property and treaty rights.

"This Association further hopes that pending ratification of the Nine Powers' Customs Treaty by all the Powers concerned, the Surtax Conference will be preceded at an early date by joint consideration and decision by the Powers of their policy towards China."

2.—BREACHES OF THE TREATIES.—"That the commercial treaties concluded between Great Britain and China were necessitated by interferences with the persons and cargoes of British firms, which for many years formed an insuperable barrier to trade; that security and expansion of trade, with the prosperity ensuing to Chinese and British alike resulted from the honourable fulfilment of treaty obligations by both parties; that the Chinese Government guaranteed freedom from all taxation in Treaty Ports, a regular rate of taxation for goods transported to the interior and immunity from interference for British subjects, their goods and property; that evidence is before this Conference of recent disregard of the treaties under all the above heads and that the Conference desires to invite the attention of His Majesty's Minister and of His Majesty's Government to the importance of securing reaffirmation and maintenance of old established treaty rights and usages for the security of trade."

3.—TRADE MARKS.—"That this Conference earnestly requests His Majesty's Minister to use every possible endeavour to ensure that the rights and property of British subjects are not jeopardized by the recognition or acceptance of the New Trade Mark Law by His Majesty's Government, without such modifications as will provide for adequate foreign representation in the Trade Marks Bureau, and on every Tribunal which may be called upon to give any decision affecting foreign interests in connexion with Trade Marks."

4.—JUNK-BORNE CARGO IN KUANGTUNG.—"That China be called upon to put into immediate effect Article 3 of the Commercial Treaty of 1902 whereby the duties and likin combined levied on junkborne cargo between Hongkong and Treaty Ports in Kuangtung shall not be less than the duties levied by the Maritime Customs on similar goods carried by steamer. That, failing compliance with this request, the duties levied by the Maritime Customs be reduced to the level of those levied on junk-borne cargo."

5.—THE UPPER YANGTZE.—"That this Conference whilst deploring the continued prevalence of disorder and brigandage on the Siang and Upper Yangtze Rivers necessitating the maintenance of a strong Naval Flotilla welcomes the more active policy recently inaugurated and desires to record its appreciation of the good work done by H. M. Navy in these waters."

Closing Session and Banquet: Appeal for Naval Club at Chungking

The fifth annual conference of the Associated Chambers terminated on Saturday morning with a review of the proceedings by the Chairman of the Conference in Committee, Mr. F. R. Scott. H. M. Minister made an exceedingly interesting speech in which he dealt with the present situation in China and with various aspects of the Associated Chambers' work. The proceedings terminated after Mr. C. G. Humphrys had thanked H. M. Minister for his attendance, and for the light that he had thrown on various difficult situations.

The annual conference dinner was held at the Shanghai Club on Saturday night, about 100 guests being in attendance. Mr. C. G. Humphrys, presiding, proposed the toast of H. M. Minister, Sir Ronald Macleay, K.C.M.G., in a witty and eulogistic speech, and Sir Ronald replied at some length.

The toast of H. M. Navy was proposed by Mr. E. F. Mackay, who dilated on the cheery spirit which always characterized our defenders on the sea, and paid high tribute to their work on the Yangtze and on the China coast.

Admiral Anderson replied in a manner that bore ample testimony to the truth of the former speaker's tribute to the Navy's cheerfulness, and at the same time put in an appeal on behalf of our sailors stationed at Chungking. He pointed out that a Union Jack Club was badly needed for that outport, as the present structure was wholly inadequate. The authorities at Home were prepared to put up the sum of Tls. 8,000 if the rest, about Tls. 11,000, could be obtained in Shanghai. He left it to them.

Before the next speaker arose the Chambers had pledged themselves to subscribe the amount asked.

Mr. A. W. Burkill gave the toast "Delegates and Visitors" and Mr. E. C. Peters of Tientsin replied.

ARMED ROBBER OUTRAGE

Miscreants Who Rob the Poor

The unscrupulous hand of the armed robber fell heavily upon a group of Chinese living in extreme poverty on waste land off Connaught Road on Tuesday night. Half a dozen men armed with revolvers, choppers and iron instruments attempted to break into one of the huts, occupied by a ricsha coolie and his family, by breaking down the bamboo-mud door. Failing in this, they demanded entrance, and the frightened coolie opened the door. The hut was at once ransacked of its poor possessions, and a shot was fired at an old woman who attempted to save the cover of the bed upon which she was lying, the shot inflicting serious injury. Five houses were visited in this way, and the robbers decamped across country with "booty" in cash and clothing worth about $100. The Jessfield police visited the scene, but made no attempt to assist the injured woman, whereupon the ricsha coolie reported the matter at Connaught Road Police Station, when the police ambulance was sent to convey her to Shantung Road Hospital.

"DEAR BRUTUS"

Amateur Dramatic Club's Production of Sir J. M. Barrie's Masterpiece

A comedy in three Acts by Sir J. M. Barrie.

Mrs. Coade	Mrs. Wayte Wood.
Alice Dearth	Mrs. Chris Wingrove.
Mabel Purdie	Mrs. A. J. Stewart.
Lady Caroline Laney	Miss I. Hones.
Joanna Trout	Mrs. Frank Barry.
Matey (Butler to Lob)	Mr. Leigh Turner.
Lob	Mr. C. E. Whitamore.
Mr. Coade	Mr. A. B. Puddicombe.
Jack Purdie	Mr. R. H. Burns.
Mr. Dearth	Mr. H. E. Muriel.
Margaret	Mrs. A. Welch.

Producer: Mr. P. Le Bris.

Not even in Shakespeare have the A. D. C. attempted anything more ambitious than "Dear Brutus." It is at once in the nature of a morality play and modern comedy; it contains nothing melodramatic or declamatory; its climaxes and its moments of appeal are touched in with the utmost delicacy; and it deals with none but the most ordinary people, excepting the mysterious Lob, whose functions, had Barrie wished, might almost have been managed in a prologue. Even in reading the play, one has to go over it more than once for proper understanding; even thus we hardly realize the purport of the first act till after the second; and in the book things can be explained (like Coade's putting a footstool under his wife's foot, and the tap of the imaginary hammer on everyone's head as they go into the wood) which are hardly explicable on the stage. It is, therefore, certainly no discompliment to the A. D. C. to say that in some respects they failed; the best company of practised professionals with every device for "getting over" might fail in making the first act intelligible to one who knows nothing about the play. On the other hand, the production showed the greatest care in rehearsal and in the study of all parts. Many of the scenes were admirable. The whole production was enjoyable. If it cannot be said that the A. D. C. altogether succeeded, they are to be complimented on a very fine effort in an infinitely worthy undertaking.

The first act, which is also the hardest, was the least meritorious. Without any danger of overacting it might have been played more emphatically. A longer pause with the theatre in darkness before the curtain goes up would have focussed the attention of the house and made the ladies' entry more impressive. That entry is very important. They are already rather in a state of "nerves" over the mysteriousness of their host and this helps to show that they are really much more set on forcing an explanation from Matey than on getting back their rings. The scene also with the butler might have been taken more quickly to indicate the questioners' excitement. Again, the scene in which Lob gets under the table might have been worked up more distinctly. One did not appreciate as one should the sudden change from his pretended endeavour to keep the party at home to the petulant outburst of his real purpose. However, Mr. Whitamore generally played Lob very well, a mystery, yet not too much of the fairy world to be believable as a whimsical old country gentleman.

The second act was delightful, beautiful staged and well acted. One might take the opportunity here of giving special praise to the acting of Mr. Leigh Turner as Matey, Mr. Burns as Purdie and Miss Iris Hones as Lady Caroline. The latter part is a peculiarly thankless one and Miss Hones played it in both its aspects very well. Mr. Burns too was excellent; a philanderer is none the less an object for sympathy because philandering is objectionable and Mr. Burns cleverly retained his audience's sympathy, even while losing nothing of Purdie's nature. As for Mr. Leigh Turner, his butler-cum-rogue-financier was really a perfect study and his reawakening in the third act, where all were good, was a little masterpiece. It was in this third act that Mrs. Barry came out excellently; her joy on finding that she is not Purdie's wife was deliciously done. Mrs. Stewart's acting is always a pleasure to watch. If Mrs. Purdie in the play is as clever as her impersonator, she ought to keep her husband alive to the repentant mood of his self-discovery. Mr. Puddicombe was excellently cast as Coade; to dance about with a flute is no easy task as he did it. And Mrs. Wayte-Wood was soft and sympathetic as Mrs. Coadie. As Mrs. Dearth, Mrs. Chris Wingrove has one of the three greatest parts in the play. Like practically everyone else she was so careful not to overact in the first act, that she played the part almost too quietly. In the second and third she was very fine, and Mrs. Wingrove's Alice Dearth remains one of the best things she has done. Mrs. Welch as Margaret was not, perhaps, always quite hoydenish enough; sometimes a little too grown up; nevertheless in all it was a charming study and her last despairing cries for her daddy were heart-rending. For Mr. Muriel's Dearth there can be nothing but praise; his admirable semi-intoxication in the first act; renascence in the second; the tragedy of the third, all these were most feelingly and beautifully played. He has never done anything to approach it.

The third act was all good. The various reawakenings were exceedingly well pourtrayed and the interplay of the characters good. The whole act was woven together into a fitting sense of climax, in a play which apparently presents no climax at all.

WEDDINGS

Allan—Harvey

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at Holy Trinity Cathedral on Saturday, when Miss Elsie Mitchell Harvey, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Gourlay Harvey of Rockfort, Helensburgh, became the bride of Mr. J. R. Angus Allan of Shanghai. The Cathedral was artistically decorated with spring blossom and lilies. The Very Rev. Dean Symons officiated and Mr. R. J. Young presided at the organ.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. P. C. Rielley, looked charming in a gown of brocaded charmeuse gracefully draped and arranged with side panel which formed a train. She wore an embroidered veil held in place with a coronet of orange blossom and carried a shower bouquet of white carnations and fern. The little Misses Edna and Dorothy Wheen, who attended as flower-girls, wore dainty frocks of apricot coloured taffeta and wreaths of forget-me-nots on their hair. They carried tiny flower baskets of sweet peas. Mrs. R. A. Allan, mother of the bridegroom, was gowned in grey marocain with hat to match. Mrs. P. C. Rielley, who acted as matron-of-honour, wore a dress of old gold marocain.

Mr. T. R. Macdonald accompanied the groom as best man and Messrs. R. H. Wallace and H. J. Stevenson were ushers. A reception was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Rielley where many friends attended to offer their felicitations. The bride's going-away dress was of petunia and saxe-blue georgette, and a black picture hat trimmed with ospreys. The honeymoon will be spent in Hangchow.

Kahler—Henry

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Holy Trinity Cathedral on Wednesday when Miss Thyra Joyce Kahler, daughter of the late Mr. W. F. Kahler, of the Imperial Maritime Customs, and Mrs. Kahler, was married to Mr. Francis Henry, son of Mr. Malcolm Henry. The Very Rev. C. J. F. Symons officiated.

The bride, who was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. R. Rhyss-Jones, wore fawn and crêpe-satin with cape effect lined with shell-pink satin, and a gold-laced picture hat to match. Miss Edith Henry, sister of the bridegroom, acted as bridesmaid. She was in nigger brown cloth with old gold satin trimmings, with a hat of deep salmon pink. Mrs. Kahler wore grey cloth trimmed with velvet.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at 448A Avenue Joffre, at which Mr. H. E. Middleton, who had officiated as best man, toasted the newly-married couple, the bridegroom responding.

UNVEILING SHANGHAI'S WAR MEMORIAL

Impressive Ceremony Witnessed by a Great Throng in the Presence of Chief Representatives of all the Allies: Tribute to Memory of the Glorious Dead

It may seem that Shanghai, in comparison with other great cities, has been somewhat tardy in paying the common tribute of a memorial to those who gave their lives in the great war. But there were many unavoidable delays, and the memorial loses nothing in character as a fine emblem of gratitude and remembrance because of its late completion. The Allied Committee has well discharged the duty allotted to it by the community, and our thanks are due to all of them, and particularly to Sir Edward Pearce, who has been chairman of the committee since its formation. The memorial is a beautiful piece of work, simple in conception and striking in its general effect, and much credit is due to Messrs. Stewardson & Spence, the designers and architects, for the admirable way in which the work has been done.

The unveiling ceremony on Saturday morning, favoured with beautiful weather, was witnessed by a great throng. Every point of vantage in the vicinity of the memorial was taken up, hundreds of people witnessing the event from the windows of adjacent buildings, while The Bund itself was packed with a crowd extending from Avenue Edward VII to beyond Canton Road. The great majority of the people [illegible] of the actual ceremony, but remained throughout the proceedings to pay tribute by their presence to the men in whose honour the memorial was unveiled. Those officialy taking part were drawn from every section of the Settlement's many-sided life and seldom has a more representative assembly been seen, the group in the great square fronting the memorial being composed of the Allies' chief representatives in religious, civic, diplomatic, and naval and military life. As a public demonstration, the scene was unique in its completeness, and appealed to the eye by reason of its colour and features of striking interest.

THE CROWDS ASSEMBLE.

From 11 o'clock onwards the public began to assemble and by a few minutes to 12 the spacious square fronting the memorial was the centre of a great concourse. In the centre of the square, drawn up in line facing the monument, were the official representatives of the Allied Forces, viz., a detachment of the Chinese National Army, Annamite Police, Sikh Police, Officers of the French Volunteer Corps, and officers of the S. V. C., all of them men who had fought in the war and most of them wearing decorations, and on their right were representatives of the Allied Navies. To the right and left at the foot of the memorial, relatives of those commemorated, representatives of the Mercantile Marine, of the United Services Association, Siccawei Fathers who served in the war, members of the French and International Municipal Council, the War Memorial Committee, and others closely interested in the proceedings took up positions in the places reserved for them. One was pleased to note that the school children were favoured with a prominent position, for theirs is the great tradition which the memorial symbolizes. The many companies of Shanghai Scouts were represented in force, as were also the Girl Guides, while the Police of both Concessions, and the Fire Brigades had very smart detachments on parade, the firemen with their beautifully turned out machines making a brave show. The line on the extreme limits of the square was held by the French Volunteers and the S. V. C. All were formed up by noon, and at this hour the Army party, composed of representatives from each company of the S. V. C. and in the command of C. S. M. Leighton, marched into the square in short time and with arms reversed, ascending the steps of the memorial and filing round its base, to remain with bowed heads and resting on their arms during the ceremony. They were followed into the square by members of the Consular Body and principal naval and military officers, and the Roman Catholic and Protestant clergy, taking up their position immediately in front of the various groups.

SIR EDWARD PEARCE'S ADDRESS.

Friends and Fellow Citizens:—On behalf of the Shanghai War Memorial Committee, I have the honour to present to you this Memorial to our glorious dead, erected by the Allies in the Great War on the soil of China, set apart for the residence of citizens of other nations. We have to thank the architects, Messrs. Stewardson & Spence, for the design and execution of all the necessary work, Mr. Harpur, of the Public Works Department, for the foundations, and to congratulate the sculptor, Mr. Henry C. Fehr, for the exquisite bronze statue which crowns the Memorial. The casting of this group was executed by Messrs Singer & Co., of Frome. The flanking symbolical trophies and the Roll of Honour were designed and cast locally by Arts & Crafts, Ld.

This monument will stand for ever as a world's unparalleled but silent emblem to the glory of those many Allied nations who fought side by side with such indomitable valour in the struggle that Justice might live.

We are here to-day to pay homage to those gallant men of ours who went forth from Shanghai and gave up their lives in singleness of heart for all that we hold sacred. They will rise again; nay, they are here to-day, those great peace makers of ours, ready again to defend Right against Wrong.

We remember and must charge our children to remember that as our dead heroes were equal in sacrifice so are they equal in honour, for the greatest and least of them have proved that sacrifice and honour are no vain things but truths by which the world lives. I fervently pray that both as residents in this great city of ours and as individuals we may so order our lives after the ideals for which our fellow citizens died that unashamed we may be able to meet their gallant souls in the great hereafter.

Commander de' Rossi, I will take it as a great honour if you will unveil this Shanghai Memorial to our illustrious dead.

Commander G. de' Rossi—who, as Senior Allied Consul, performed the unveiling—next spoke, saying:

Your Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen: The erection of this War Memorial, dedicated to the everlasting memory of those who fell on the field of honour, has been for the past few years the most cherished wish of the Allied Communities in Shanghai; and I think it is my pleasant duty to express our thanks to the Chairman and Members of the Allied Committee for having been able, through strenuous efforts, to put this wish into realization. Erected on Chinese soil across the limit of the International and French Concessions this Monument can be considered as a symbolical emblem of the unbreakable bond which has united the Allied Nations in the Great War.

Although dedicated to the imperishable memory of our glorious dead, it is intended also to stand there as a memento for ever of the loyalty and gallantry of all our men who left these shores to "do their bit." Put no monument of stone or bronze would be enough to exalt the memory of such men: something more than this we must do.

It must be henceforth our sacred duty to bring our children, as in a pilgrimage, in front of this memorial and to impress upon them, and through them impress on future generations, the feeling of the strongest, the highest thankfulness and admiration for all those men, dead and alive, who so bravely, so gallantly have put forth such a splendid example of self-sacrifice, for the love of their country, and also for the love of these two greatest principles, without which the life of nations should not be possible: the principles of Righteousness and Justice.

To those men, whose names live for ever, I unveil this memorial.

I have now the honour to hand it over for preservation to both the Municipal Councils of the International Settlement and the French Concession.

Commander de' Rossi then drew the cord releasing the black pall covering the front of the monument, revealing the simple laurel wreath in bronze and the names of the dead.

There followed a few appropriate words from the Chairmen of the French and International Councils.

Mr. S. Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, said:

Ladies and Gentlemen:—As the representative of the people of the International Settlement and in conjunction with Monsieur Le Bris, representing the French Concession, I accept with profound appreciation this sacred trust which to-day has been placed in our keeping.

I am deeply moved by the references which have been made by Sir Edward Pearce and Commander de' Rossi to the splendid endeavours of the residents of Shanghai, in co-operation with their brethren in their respective homelands, to do their part in the Great War.

It is most fitting and seemly that you should to-day accept with deep reverence this beautiful memorial of the supreme sacrifice made by those members of our community who went forth from the peace and safety of Shanghai to lose their lives in the service of their respective countries.

It is to them, and to those of our respective nationals who have gone before us, that we owe this great and flourishing city which it is our endeavour to-day to develop into a still greater city which shall be representative of the best ideals of those nations from which we have sprung.

This site, upon which we stand to-day, has been chosen as being on the boundary line between the International Settlement and our good friend and neighbour, the French Concession. Each has donated a moiety of this site. Thus the Memorial stands as an additional connecting link between the two Settlements, and an imperishable record of those of our respective nations who fought and fell side by side in the Great War.

It remains, ladies and gentlemen, only to thank you for your presence here to-day to do honour to those of our glorious dead who are here commemorated, and to express the hope that we may worthily uphold their traditions.

FRENCH COUNCIL'S CHAIRMAN.

M. Le Bris, Chairman of the French Council, speaking in French, said: Ladies and gentlemen: The words which have just been spoken by my distinguished colleague of the Municipal Council describe, as completely as possible in their brevity, the sentiments of both of us on receiving, in the name of the residents of our community, the monument dedicated to the glorious dead in the Great War.

In its simplicity, this monument is a symbol of the solidarity which the Allied Nations proved during the tragic years between 1914 and 1918. This solidarity we must maintain so that we can pay the debt that we contracted on behalf of those who sacrificed their lives to enable us to live in peace.

We cannot, without very great emotion, peruse the list—a list too long, alas of our friends who we shall never see again. In tendering to the families who are represented here our expression of sympathy, our gratitude goes to the highest and the humblest. While this monument will tell future generations that from this distant corner of the world legions left to do their duty to their country, their splendid example of denial and sacrifice will be a lesson which will assist in perpetuating the principles of honour and justice in our own countries.

In conclusion, in the name of the French Concession which I have the honour to represent, with all my heart I associate myself with what Mr. Fessenden has said to all those who have come to honour the memory of our glorious dead. And like him, I swear that by our acts we will show ourselves worthy of the traditions which those glorious dead have left to us.

THE CEREMONY OF DEDICATION.

Then followed the ceremony of dedication. Mgr. P. Paris, S.J., the Roman Catholic Bishop, with attendant priests and acolytes, ascended the steps and performed the Roman Catholic rite of dedication, and the same was done in the name of the Protestant faith.

The Rev. A. N. Rowland, Pastor of Union Church, in clear and ringing voice, read this beautiful passage of Scripture:

"Our glory is slain upon our high places: How are the mighty fallen, and perished the weapons of war. But the souls of the righteous are in the hands of God, and there shall no evil touch them; Their reward is with the Almighty and the care of them with the Most High. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead; For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Prayers were then said by the Very Rev. Dean C. J. F. Symons, and Bishop Graves pronounced the Blessing.

Four buglers of the S.V.C. sounded the "Last Post," a solemn and impressive call which no soldier can hear without a thrill, and the minute gun was then fired from H.M.S. Diomede, a minute's absolute stillness being broken by the firing of a second gun. Trumpeters of the French Corps sounded the Reveille, and the laying of wreaths at the foot of

London ready silver is ⅝d. and forward 11/16d. lower than a week ago, the price on Thursday being 33⅛d. spot and 33¼d. forward, as against 34 1/16d. ready and 33 15/16d. forward last Friday. India has been both a buyer and a seller, China has been a seller to a small extent. Stocks of sycee in Shanghai have improved Tls. 11 lakhs and stocks of dollars $23 lakhs on the week. The price of dollars keeps low, 71,5875, and it is very unlikely that the Mints will start working before the end of next month: this, combined with lack of exports, tends towards a weak market, in as much as it does not look at present as if China will need so very much more silver in the near future. The New York price of silver in America on Thursday was 64⅛ delivery San Francisco, small business done, sellers holding back for higher prices. The New York/London cross rate is 431⅞.

EXCHANGE.

The market was steady at last week's closing quotation, ⅛d., till Tuesday, when the speculators, whose position then was reported to be about square, turned buyers; there was also a fair merchants' demand and no cover, so rates dropped shortly after opening to 3/3⅛d. and the market closed easy. Rates opened on Wednesday at T.T. selling 3/3⅛d., at which it remained till Thursday forenoon, when there was a drop to T.T. 3/3⅛d., in the afternoon a further decline of ⅛d. to T.T. selling 3/3d. the present level. At the moment, however, there are sellers at T.T. 3/3⅛d. for the balance of the month, 3/3⅛d. March and ⅛d. down per month after: Gold $ T.T. 70⅜ February, 70½ March, 70⅜ April.

LONDON BULLION

Mocatta & Goldsmid's Report

Writing on the London bullion market on January 10 Messrs. Mocatta & Goldsmid state:—

During the remainder of last week, the market kept steady in the neighbourhood of 34d, owing to a little bear covering both from India and China.

On January 7, however, large selling orders came in from China and in two days, the price reacted from 34 1/16d. to 33 7/16d. without much business passing, as a good many of the selling orders were limited in price. Yesterday, there was a reaction of ⅛d., but with a little more scattered selling to-day and the market devoid of buyers the price has relapsed to 33⅛d.

Neither India nor China seem very disposed to buy at the current level and we not see the prospect of much improvement at present, although if Indian exchange should show a steadier tendency, there might be a little buying for that quarter.

Gold.—The arrivals from South Africa this week were small, and owing to the weakness of the rupee mentioned above, India was not a very keen buyer. There have, however, been some Continental inquiries, so that only about half of the arrival is left for New York. The price has varied between 95/10d. per ounce fine and 96/5d.

HONGKONG & SHANGHAI BANK

Annual Report: Proposed Final Dividend £3 and Bonus £2

The following report by the Director of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, for the year ending December 31, 1923, is to be submitted at the annual general meeting of shareholders to be held in the City Hall, Hongkong, next Saturday, February 23.

The net profits for the year, including $3,350,212.49, balance brought forward from last account, after paying all charges, deducting interest paid and due, and making provision for bad and doubtful accounts and contingencies, amount to $16,583,873.49.

The Directors recommend the transfer of $1,000,000 from the Profit and Loss Account to credit of the Silver Reserve, which will then stand at $25,500,000.

They also recommend writing off Bank Premises Account the sum of $1,000,000.

After making these transfers, deducting the interim dividend of £3 per share, paid on August 7 last viz.:—£480,000 @ 2/3= $4,266,666.67, and remuneration to Directors, there remains for appropriation $10,267,206.82, out of which the Directors recommend the payment of a final dividend of three pounds sterling per share, viz., £480,000, and a bonus of two pounds sterling per share, viz., £320,000, amounting in all to £800,000 which, at 2/3⅞, the rate of the day, will absorb $6,887,892.37.

The balance of $3,379,314.45 to be carried to New Profit and Loss Account.

Mr. D. G. M. Bernard has been elected Chairman for the year 1924, and Mr. W. L. Pattenden Deputy Chairman.

Mr. E. V. D. Parr, Mr. G. M. Dodwell and Mr. A. M. Bowes-Smith resigned their seats on leaving the Colony and Mr. N. L. Watson, Mr. A. H. Compton and Mr. J. P. Warren were invited to join the Board.

These appointments require confirmation at this meeting.

Mr. G. T. M. Edkins, Hon. Mr. A. O. Lang, and Mr. H. P. White retire in rotation, but being eligible for re-election, offer themselves accordingly.

The accounts have been audited by Hon. Mr. A. R. Lowe and Mr. C. Bernard Brown, who offer themselves for re-election.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Opening of the Markets after China New Year: Inquiry for Piece Goods but Small Business

Feb. 23.

Following upon the China New Year holidays the markets did not open properly until this week, and they are not yet in anything like full swing.

In piece goods the tone is steady, and owing to the lower price of American cotton there has been inquiry for bookings with Manchester. Business has been small on the whole.

Exchange has adversely affected the export market, and nothing of interest has transpired there.

In local yarn purchasers are apparently holding off in the hope of more favourable quotations.

PIECE GOODS.

The first piece goods auctions since the holidays were held this week, and dealers showed a fair amount of activity. Generally speaking, the market has opened firm, and hardly possessing the same buoyancy as has been a feature of the opening in other years. The drop in American cotton has brought out a considerable amount of inquiry to Manchester, but it is believed that notwithstanding cheaper cotton and the position of exchange, actual business has been limited in quantity. Whites and a few Greys as well as a small quantity of Fancies have been ordered, but the activity of the early part of the week has in the last day or two been less pronounced. Clearances of goods bought prior to the New Year have been brisk on the whole.

As far as the auctions are concerned the market reopened very much on the same levels as it had closed prior to the New Year. A considerable number of dealers are still away, and speculators are largely manipulating prices to enable them to clear off previous purchases. Venetians were sluggish, but there was a pronounced demand for Italians, and some of the high and medium quality chops registered an advance of anything up to 7 mace. To some extent this rise is of a speculative character, but the statistical position of Italians is so strong that a good proportion of it may prove to have been justified. Greys were inclined to be slack in many cases, but White Shirtings were steady to firm, Changsha, Hankow and Tientsin being interested. It will be interesting to see how the market for White Shirtings fares during the Spring, following reported private purchases this week.

Woollens are moving well, clearances of cargo bought prior to China New Year being very satisfactory. Local sales during the past few days have been quite good, but business with Home is out of the question, as prices there are now very high, and there is consequently no demand from here.

COTTON AND YARN.

Chinese Cotton—While there has been a drop in the price of American cotton, Chinese spot prices have not shown any proportionate reduction. Indian varieties are now more on a parity with Chinese, and if their prices continue to decline somewhat more it will enable local mills to buy considerable quantities of the Indian staple in preference to the native. Chinese spot prices are as follows:—Tungchow Tls. 47; Shanghai Tls. 44; Shensi Tls. 45; Hankow Tls. 43. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange prices have declined by about Tls. 2, rates quoted there being as follows:—

February 44.85; March 44.50; April 44; May. 43.70; June 43.60; July 43.20.

Local Yarn—No fresh business with local mills has been reported since last week. The drop in the price of American cotton has resulted in the Szechuan merchants, who were prospective buyers, holding off in the hope of obtaining more favourable prices, but meantime the mills are showing no inclination to reduce their rates. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange a reduction of from Tls. 4 to Tls. 5 has been registered, Thursday afternoon's closing figures being:—February 175.30; March 174.60; April 173.40; May 172.50; June 171.60; July 171.10. The price of local cloth is down by about one mace since the opening of the market following China New Year, and very little demand has been in evidence.

PRODUCE.

High exchange has operated against any export business this week, but it is hoped that the easier tendency in evidence at the moment will continue and bring C.I.F. values more into line with the ideas of Home buyers.

Sesamum Seed—There has been no change in the situation at Home, and no business is reported.

Groundnuts—Home buyers are holding off and the market is dull. The Tsingtao market is easier and stocks are said to be accumulating.

Reduction of Price in Insulin

OBITUARY

Det.-Sub-Inspector Ross

It is with very much regret that we announce the death, which took place at the General Hospital at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, of Detective-Sub-Inspector John Ross, one of the youngest and most promising members of the Shanghai Municipal Police detective force, after an illness of about a week's duration.

A native of Ayrshire, Scotland, deceased was 37 or 38 years of age, and came to Shanghai 13 years ago. He was one of the first of the Police to volunteer for service in the Great War. From Louza Station, where he resided and to which he was attached, he went as a members of the first Shanghai contingent which left by the Suwa Maru in October, 1914. At Home he joined the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. He afterwards joined the Cycle Brigade in France, winning his commission and serving with great destinction. From France he went to the Gold Coast as an officer.

Before coming back to Shanghai he was married, and he leaves widow and two children.

Coming back, he was attached to the detective staff and was placed on duty in the North Szechuen Road, and later Stanza, Stations.

The funeral took place on Monday, the service in the Bubbling Well Cemetery Chapel being conducted to the Rev. A. N. Rowland, in the presence of a large number of friends and members of all branches of the Municipal Police. The pall-bearers were:—Det.-Insp. Kay, Asst. Gaoler McKenzie, Insp. Sinclair, Sub-Insp. Robertson, Sub-Insp. Mackintosh, Sgt. McGillivray, P. C. Mackie and Sub-Insp. Adams.

A very large number of beautiful wreaths was sent from confrères in the police Force, Associations with which the deceased had been connected and many sympathizing friends.

Before the Mixed Court sat Monday morning, Mr. A. J. Martin (British Assessor), with the concurrence of the senior Chinese Magistrate, Mr. Kuan Chun, made sympathetic comment on the death of Det.-Sub.-Insp. John Ross.

Mr. A. Bersouza

The death is announced of Mr. A. Bersouza, who for ten years has been plant foreman of the Shanghai Mercantile Printing Co., Ld., and who prior to his service in Shanghai was connected with the "Peking and Tientsin Times." Mr. Bersouza, who had just passed his 46th birthday was taken ill a few days before the China New Year.

Mr. N. H. Langley-Smith

It is with feelings of very deep regret that we have to record the death of Mr. Nelson Humphries Langley-Smith, which occurred at the Victoria Nursing Home early on Tuesday morning.

The late Mr. Langley-Smith, who was only in his 32nd year, was a son of Mr. W. Langley-Smith, of Wotton Hill House, Gloucester, England. He was called to the Bar in 1918, a member of Gray's Inn. and a graduate from Queen's College, Cambridge.

After some experience in practice at Home, he came out to Shanghai early in 1920 to join the firm of Messrs. Hanson's, and was admitted to practice at the Bar of H. M. Supreme Court for China on April 15 of that year.

Mr. Langley-Smith had served with the British Army during the War from 1914 until the Armistice and it was on account of this service that his call to the Bar was delayed.

During the few years that he has been in Shanghai, Mr. Langley-Smith has endeared himself to a large number of friends. He proved himself a hard and conscientious worker and a capable and painstaking advocate.

Mr. Langley-Smith's activities were not confined to his profession for he was rendered valuable service to the Shanghai branch of the China Association, of which he had been Secretary for more than three years. He was a member of the Shanghai branch of the China Association, of which he had been Secretary for more than three years. He was a member of the Shanghai Club, Country Club, and Shanghai Golf Club.

He will be greatly missed by his many friends and the deepest sympathy is extended to his bereaved relatives in England.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral of the late Mr. N. H. Langley Smith took place at the Bubbling Well Cemetery on Wednesday afternoon, the service being attended by the Judges of H.M. Supreme Court, the Magistrate and the Court staff, the majority of the members of the British Bar, the Committee of the China Association (of which Mr. Langley-Smith was the Secretary) and a large number of personal friends, there being every evidence of his general popularity besides appreciation of the work which he so willingly performed outside his profession. The service was conducted in the cemetery chapel by the Very Rev. Dean C. J. F. Symons and the pall-bearers were:—Sir Edward Pearce, Dr. R. E. Cameron, Messrs. G. H. Wright, A. C. Holborow, M. B. Browne and A. E. Fenton. Dr. H. R. Friedlander was the chief mourner and amongst the many others present were noticed:—Sir Skinner Turner, Mr. Peter Grain, Mr. G. W. King, Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Major K. M. Bourne, Messrs. E. M. Gull, R. C. Faithfull, F. W. Potter, M. Reader Harris, P. W. Massey, C. J. Scott, A. G. Mossop, R. F. Le Mesurier, A. M. Cannan, J. H. Teesdale, A. L. Dickson, R. N. Macleod, V. D. K. Craddock, A. C. Clear, A. Sims, E. M. Ross, E. F. Mackay, Tycho Wing, L. G. Cubitt, H. Martin Little, H. Lipson Ward, A. S. Campbell, G. M. Billings, Ranald G. McDonald, A. McLure, R. F. C. Master, A. E. Seddon, H. Browett, A. M. Preston, C. G. Humphrys and many others.

Floral tributes were sent by a very great number of sympathizing friends.

Mr W. G. Worcester

We much regret to announce the death of another of Shanghai's most popular residents—Mr William George Worcester. Indeed, it is scarcely correct to claim him for Shanghai alone, for he was one of the best known and liked men in Hongkong and in every port along the coast, whilst there is evidence that he was as much thought of in Singapore and in the Mediterranean. Mr. Worcester, who was about 48 years of age, was born in Malta, and was the son of a distinguished Captain in H. M. Navy, who subsequently became head of the P. & O. in Malta and held that position for many years, doing such good work that he received a decoration from the hands of the late King Edward. The son evidently inherited the characteristics of the father, for friends of the latter speak of him in the same affectionate terms which the modern residents of Shanghai applied to his son.

Mr. Worcester followed in his father's footsteps, for he also joined the P. & O. and was successively stationed at Aden, Singapore, Shanghai and Hongkong. Some years ago he left the shipping firm and joined Messrs. Moxon & Taylor, share and general brokers, Hongkong. He left them to open his own business as Worcester & Co. at Hongkong, and about 1915 he came to Shanghai, established a branch here and made it his head office. For years Mr. Worcester was a sufferer from sprue, which continually recurred despite periodical indications that he was recovering. About three years ago he decided to go Home for treatment and after travelling for a while in America, where he was attended by specialists, he went to England for further attention, but a message was received on Thursday of his death at Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. Worcester was one of the best of sportsmen, a keen golfer and paper-hunter and a clever lawn tennis player. He won several lawn tennis championships, principally in Hongkong. Like Mrs. Worcester, who is a sister of Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, he also was a clever amateur stage artist and he was one of the best known members of the Hongkong A.D.C., though he did not do so much in this line in Shanghai. He was a member of many local social and sporting clubs and was a Mason of long standing. He was known to all as a man of a most genial and likeable disposition and will be sadly missed by very many friends.

About 14 years ago Mr. Worcester married Miss Elena Rowe, the daughter of Mr. S. Bryant Rowe, Commissioner of Land and Surveys for Western Victoria, and he is survived by Mrs. Worcester and two children, for whom the greatest sympathy will be felt.

On the very day of pious sacrifice to the God of Wealth, a shopkeeper in Chaotfoong Road was visited by profane men and robbed of $700. To make matters worse, he has now received a threatening letter demanding $3,000. The victim is asking special assistance of the Street Unions and the Municipal Police.

WHAT IS A BROKER'S PONY?

To maintain the purity of the China pony and the best sport in racing, measurement of brokers' ponies appears indispensable.

FRENCH TRAFFIC REGULATIONS

The By-Law Altered

Following upon a Police Court prosecution for obstructing traffic in the French Concession and thereafter a case of deliberate obstruction of traffic in the International Settlement, the French Municipal Council has altered the wording of its by-law which created all the trouble.

The situation arose out of a ruling by H. M. Magistrate in the first half of January, that because a man had deliberately obstructed traffic in the French Concession he could not be convicted under a by-law which brought the offence into the category of "negligence." Following upon this ruling, Dr. Tartois, who is a member of the French Council, proceeded to hold up traffic for a few minutes at the corner of the Bund and Nanking Road, and then fined himself $100 which he handed to the Muncipal Council.

So far as the French Concession is concerned the position has now been amended by the insertion of a phrase which will bring within the by-law all who voluntarily or by negligence obstruct traffic, the last paragraph of Article 4 of the Traffic Regulations being made to read as follows:—

"Les conducteurs de véhicules doivent éviter de provoquer soit volontairement ou par leur négligence, toute interruption ou obstruction du trafic."

SHANGHAI SCOUTERS

Preliminary Training During Chinese New Year

The first course of the Shanghai Scouters' Training Camp, which is recognized by the Boy Scouts Association, London, was held during the Chinese New Year holidays at 120 Route Ghisi, by kind permission of Mr. Eric Moller.

Mr. S. Hore, who has been associated with Scouting in Shanghai since its very early days, when recently at Home, took the opportunity to go through a course at the Scouters' Training Centre, Gillwell Park, Chingford, Essex, England, as a result of which he was appointed Deputy Camp Chief, with power to run recognized camps on similar lines in China.

The object of the course is to train Scout officers in the principles, aims and methods of the movement, in accordance with the ideas of its founder, Sir Robert Baden Powell, ; especially as regards the practical application of the training outlined in the handbook "Scouting for Boys."

Eight Scouters, representative of the various Troops, attended this course, in spite of the unfavourable weather conditions. That it has proved a success is evident from the enthusiastic appreciation expressed by those who went through it. Mr. Hore handled the course in a masterly manner, and the various Scoutmasters will turn to their Troops with a new keenness.

At the conclusion of the camp, Mr. Hore presented a gold swastika, the Scouts' badge of thanks, to Mrs. Moller for her assistance and advice in the catering.

Scoutmaster Vanderburgh expressed the appreciation of the campers for the work done by Mr. Hore.

THE BOK PEACE PRIZE: A PRO POSED REFEREN. DUM AMONG AMERICANS IN CHINA

Mr. Harry Kingman, of the Young Men's Christian Association, 120 Szechuen Road, is endeavouring to hold a referendum in connexion with the American Peace Award among Americans in China. The award arose out of a prize offered by Mr. Edward Bok, the plan in brief being as follows:—

I. That the United States shall immediately enter the Permanent Court of International Justice, under the conditions stated by Secretary Hughes and President Harding in February, 1923.

II. That without becoming a member of the League of Nations as at present constituted, the United States shall offer to extend its present co-operation with the League and participate in the work of the League as a body of mutual counsel under conditions which

1. Substitute moral force and public opinion for the military and economic force originally implied in Articles X and XVI.
2. Safeguard the Monroe Doctrine.
3. Accept the fact that the United States will assume no obligations under the Treaty of Versailles except by Act of Congress.
4. Propose that membership in the League should be opened to all nations.
5. Provide for the continuing development of international law.

In bringing the referendum to the notice of Americans in China Mr. Kingman says:—"The most urgent problem confronting the world to-day is that of discovering the road to peace. War and humanity cannot much longer exist in the same world. There may be no one plan which will succeed in establishing a workable basis of co-operation among the nations of the earth, but the best must be immediately chosen and put into progress. Whether or not the winning plan of the American Peace Award is the best plan is now being decided through a referendum conducted among American citizens the world over. Cast your vote promptly and mail it in order that the results may be rapidly forwarded to Mr. Bok's committee in New York."

American readers are asked to fill in the subjoined form, sending it to Mr. Kingman:

Do you approve the plan in substance? Yes
Cross out either "Yes" or "No" No

CORRESPONDENCE

THE SHANGHAI MINT.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR, The "Sin wan pao" published a letter on the Shanghai Mint from Mr. L. T. this morning calling attention to the fact that the Mint is not yet open and that my extravagance and carelessness is responsible for it. That the public may be enlightened as to the true facts of the situation, will you kindly permit me to give them through your columns the following information:

I was appointed Director of the Mint during the summer of 1921 (10th year of the Republic). Previous to my appointment a loan had been concluded for $2,500,000, but when interest and discount has been deducted the Mint was credited with $1,955,750. On September 9 of that year I submitted a budget to the Ministry of Finance, the Bureau of Currency and the Chinese Banking Group in which attention was called to the fact that the above amount would be inadequate for the purposes of the Mint. My conclusions were reached on the following figures:

Land for Mint	$307,593.14
Machinery	2,040,704.00
Building	625,000.00
Lighting, gas, piping, heating	250,000.00
Vaults	80,000.00
Excavation work	50,000.00
Bunding of creek	80,000.00
Enclosure and roads	70,000.00
Furniture for shops and offices	150,000.00
Transporting and installing machinery	100,000.00
Bridge across Soochow Creek	150,000.00
Sundries and contingencies	50,000.00
Director's office and staff for 20 months	80,000.00

It must be noted that the various estimates for land, buildings, machinery, fittings, etc., had to be approved by the Bureau of Currency and the Chinese Banking Group.

I therefore proposed that the loan be increased to an effective $4,000,000 so that the Mint could be operated without impediments or difficulties. While I was in charge of the Mint the political situation in Peking was such that Ministers and Directors General of the Currency Bureau were constantly changing and nothing could be done. Six weeks before I was dismissed all the machinery arrived and one week after my dismissal the buildings were completed. The Chinese Banking Group had the power to supervise disbursements under the original loan and the appointment of an auditor to the Mint, who during my tenure countersigned cheques.

From the above it will be seen that during my tenure in this office, everything was done to facilitate the opening of the Mint. It is not my fault that the cost of construction and machinery was under-estimated, and that my efforts to place the finances of this project on a sound basis were unavailing.

Thanking you for your courtesy,

I am, etc.,
SAH FU-MOW.

THE MASSACRE OF KOREANS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The Japanese government has officially, and the Japanese people have publicly, "confessed and acknowledged" their wrong in the Korean massacre during the Tokio disaster, as manifested, for example, in "an open letter to my Korean friends" written by an S. Sheba, published in the "Japan Advertiser" and also in the "Honolulu Star-Bulletin" recently. However, we, the outraged people, cannot be satisfied with a mere "confession." The barbaric and wanton slaughter of more than 4,000 innocent and unarmed people of our race seems to us a matter which cannot be dismissed with a word of regret, however sincere the regret may be.

Therefore, let it be resolved at the Delegate Assembly of the Korean National Association held this day, January 14, 1924, at the City of Honolulu, that the President of the Association representing 5,000 Koreans residing in this Territory of Hawaii, be authorized to send to the Japanese government, and to Japanese and Chinese newspapers for publication, a statement embodying the followed principles which we consider just and fair conditions upon which the "apology" will be known to have been sincere.

1. A thorough investigation should be started at once by a joint Committee composed of Korean, Japanese and American committeemen, named by both countries. (Our information gives the number of the victims far above 4,000 while the Japanese reports vary between 500 and 700. Japan owes it to herself, to Korea and to the world at large to ascertain the exact number and make it public. When our people at home organized an investigation party, Japanese police ordered them to dissolve it. Our people are entitled to find out for themselves how many of their countrymen were killed.

2. All the Koreans who are still imprisoned without a just cause should be released at once and all due reparations be made for the damage sustained through imprisonment.

3. All the perpetrators of the crime, including the government officials who gave out the order that the Koreans in Japan be killed at sight, should be tried and punished according to the law. This must be done without delay in order to satisfy the demands of justice and to guarantee the safety of the Korean residents in Japan.

4. An indemnity should be made to the families and dependents of those killed.

5. An official statement should be published by the Japanese Government retracting all the groundless charges perniciously incriminating the innocent people that were barbarously slaughtered.

6. To the end that justice may be complete, Korea should be immediately restored to its owners, the Koreans, and all the Japanese military and civil forces that are now in occupation of the peninsula promptly withdrawn.

If Japan really desires to "bury the past" as expressed in the letter above referred to, let her make amends by ascertaining by frank, open investigation the extent of the wrong, by indemnifying those whose sufferings have resulted from wanton slaughter and unjustified imprisonment, by punishing the offenders and finally by the great atonement,—once more re-establishing Korea in the family of free nations.

By direction of the Korean National Association of Hawaii.

I am, etc.,
Y. K. KIM,
PRESIDENT.

DYSENTERY IN DOGS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Can any of your readers suggest a cure for blood dysentery in sporting dogs? This illness appears to be very prevalent amongst our canine friends in Shanghai, and any suggestions regarding proper food and medicine will be very greatly appreciated.

Thanking you for your valuable assistance and enclosing my card.

I am, etc.,
PAT.

Shanghai, Feb.13, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Under the above heading Pat asks for a cure for dysentery, I would advise Pat to take his dog to a veterinary surgeon to try and find the cause of dysentery or bleeding as the case may be. If he is not in a position to see a vet., the following may help him to a correct diagnosis of the disease. Very frequent stools, with great straining, the stools are liquid with mucus and blood. Frequent passing of urine in small quantities and highly coloured, the dog is usually dull, restless, thirsty and has more or less fever. The anus is generally red, sore and puffy. If the above answers to Pat's dog's symptoms, I would advise giving him half an ounce of castor oil with 30 drops of laudanum on an empty stomach; follow this by an enema of gruel or cold starch. Suppositories made of opium, Hamamelin and lead, of each one grain, one suppository night and morning. Great care must be taken in the feeding of the dog; use only foods which can be taken in small quantities but are rich in nutriment such as Bovril, Virol, Brand's Essence, bread and milk, eggs, patent barley, and a little brandy if necessary. See that its drinking water is kept fresh, and it may have barley water to drink if it will drink it; but some dogs do not care for the latter. I have frequently used the above treatment for dogs with success, but of course without seeing the dog you cannot prescribe with any great success. The above will be without doubt, beneficial where there is great bleeding, even if the disease is not pronounced as dysentery. If the above does not help Pat, he can get in touch with me, through your usual courtesy and I will give him further advice if possible (no charge).

Your correspondence column has opened to the doggy subjects at last, and I would like to see more subjects discussed about our canine friends and so arouse more interest in them. I believe the energetic secretary who worked so hard for our last dog's show is again on the war path; if so we will soon be hearing of another show in the near future. There are in Shanghai to-day more breeds of dogs than there were last year; one of these is a lovely pair of Samoyedes. These pretty white dogs are a great favourite among fanciers at home. Our Alsatians are numerous and will be in good evidence at the show. I would like to mention whilst on the subject a thing I read in one of our English dog's books. "The chow dogs here are probably better than those in China to-day." Our chow fanciers here will not hesitate to dispute this statement I guess. Dog fanciers one and all, start getting your dogs in condition for the bench.

Apologizing for taking up so much of your space, but hoping others will come forward and take up more with more interesting news.

Enclosing my card,
I am, etc.,

A NEW SORT OF MUNITIONS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—A local firm has recently imported a quantity of gunmetal steam valves, and the Customs authorities have refused permission to the firm to take delivery of these valves. Now, a steam valve is an essential element of the steam installation of a mill or factory, and these valves have been imported into China, without let or hindrance, ever since industrial establishments began to be erected in this country.

These valves are made of different metals, including non-ferrous metal alloys. In past generations, before steel became properly known, ordnance was made of non-ferrous metal alloys, different countries employing different mixtures, and these alloys came to be known as "gunmetal." Research work and experience showed that these alloys were much more suitable for certain industrial purposes than ordinary brass or copper, particularly where correction had to be contended with, and where greater strength was required. The result is that the higher qualities of steam and other valves are now made of gunmetal, and this alloy is in use all over the world, and it never occurs to the ordinary engineer or metallurgist to associate the term "gunmetal" with munitions of war.

I understand that the Customs authorities object to the valves being described as made of gunmetal, and contend that they come under the category of munitions of war. To anybody with the slightest technical knowledge such a description seems to be the height of absurdity. The Customs authorities might just as well object to the importance of certain shipbuilding materials because they are made of naval brass or naval bronze. To carry such absurdities to their logical conclusion one might imagine a sensitive Customs official objecting to the importation of yellow metal. Another might consider that gunny bags had something to do with guns, and class them as munitions of war.

I am, etc.,
FERRO.

BREEZY NINGPO—OR TYPHOONY?

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I cannot adequately express my surprise that you should have seen fit to publish the article on "Breezy Ningpo" in your issue of the 15th instant. I trust that I may claim to be as broad-minded as most men, and I do not think that I can be accused with justice of a total lack of sense of humour, but I fail to see how anyone can find anything the least funny in this article and am amazed that those who bear any love for Ningpo can tolerate such deliberate and malicious balderdash. One was prepared to take the short correspondence that was published on this subject last October, as an ill-timed but harmless joke; an article in the same strain, under the caption of "Social Activities in Ningpo," appeared in January and I was unfortunately suffering from too poor health at the time to be able to take up my pen in reply; but this final piece of rubbish must not be allowed to pass without receiving the scourging it deserves. Nobody, I suppose, will take exception to a fool, for the simple reason that he is a fool, provided that his folly is not aggressive, but what excuse can be advanced for the man who brazenly brandishes his lack of wit by perpetrating villainous drivel, and, in addition, is of such meagre intelligence as to be unable to realize where mere fun stops and poor taste begins? Should anyone be under the impression that that article (which is so evidently devoid of humour) was written in all good faith, I may say at once that the parish-church at Ningpo is named St. Simon & St. Jude's and not St. Luke's and one is left to assume that the eulogy of Mr. Squeers (whom I strongly suspect to be fictitious) is mere senseless twaddle.

The harm worked by such correspondence is twofold: in the first place, it gives a false impression to strangers who quite wrongly imagine that Ningpo is without interest or attraction! and in the second, no-one who has ever lived there—no matter for how short a time—can fail to keep a tender spot in his heart for it, and naturally objects to the scene of so many fond memories being made a subject for ridicule.

UPPER YANGTZE OUTRAGES.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—For all I know to the contrary, Mr. Gordius Nielsen may be an authority on International Law, and so I should like some further information from him.

Mr. Nielsen was mistaken in assuming that the Kingwo was fired upon when passing "between the lines." The whole of the river between Chungking and what he sought to inspire and Ichang was at that time under the control of the northern forces, and they deliberately fired on the Kingwo. What difference would this make to Mr. Nielsen's pronouncement?

Was it in accordance with International Law that the indemnity was negotiated in Chungking and not in Peking?

What does International Law say about the murder of Captain Brandt?—a British citizen on a Chinese steamer.

The British Chamber of Commerce Conference has asked for more gunboats: presumably these will escort British steamers. If these gunboats return fire from the bank, will they be liable to detention at Chungking until an indemnity is paid?

The gunboats return fire with shells, and these are liable to kill women and children. Does International Law sanction this?

My object in asking these questions is not that nothing should be done. Far from it. For British steamers to be constantly receiving fire from the bank and to have no alternative policy but "grin and bear it," is unreasonable.

Neither are my questions in any way anti-Chinese, for the risk to Chinese lives is much greater. The foreigners form only a small proportion of the humanity on board, and they are on the bridge protected by armour-plate.

I am, etc.,
S.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES AND THE LEAGUE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The late Lord Morley used frequently to ask "What is the direction of the policy just enunciated?" That great statesman looked closely at tendencies.

In dealing with the Russian refugee problem I am constantly being brought up sharp by sensing a direction in a proposal which is contrary to the spirit of the League of Nations for which I am acting.

Similarly, I am all the time finding criticisms of my plans of repatriation and emigration which show that there is mistrust of the direction of the policy. This, I ought to say, is most frequently among the Russian refugees themselves.

It is certainly natural that the refugees should scrutinize more closely than others any plans which concern themselves so intimately. It is right that they should do so. It is also not surprising that those who have lived all their lives under the autocratic form of Government of the late Tsarist régime should suspect the League of Nations of wishing to lay down the law to them in an arbitrary manner. That, I am certain, will in time be shown to be a misconception.

What I wish, if possible, to make as clear as words can make it is this: The League of Nations stands for the relief of the oppressed, the righting of wrongs, the brotherhood of man, and the comity of nations. It's powers are of necessity limited by the conflicting political and commercial interests of the states composing it, but, of one thing we can be absolutely certain, and it is this: the direction discernible in all its activities is towards a juster social order and a higher standard of health and happiness.

To those, therefore, who may have misgivings about either of the remedies which I am recommending for the present distress, let me say, that the League is concerned, first, and chiefly, with the refugees themselves and their welfare; and only, secondarily, with relieving China and the foreign communities from the burden of their support.

If my recommendations are adopted by the League, it will do what is possible to restore to their homes and families those who themselves consider the conditions favourable for them to return. It will probably find a place to found new homes in other lands for those who cannot return to Russia, if they are considered to be suitable immigrants.

In no case will the League compel or induce anyone. It will only offer its help. It lies with each one to decide for himself what he will do. The direction will be shown. The choice must be his own. If he has political or personal reasons for declining the offer which the League will make the responsibility is his own.

To many these statements may appear unnecessary. My experience proves that these statements need to be made. May I particularly request the Russian newspapers in Shanghai and Harbin to give these facts full publicity.

I am, etc.,
JAMES A GREIG.

Kirin Manchuria, Feb. 15, 1924.

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES

THE RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION

Meeting on the Question of Dissolution: Membership Campaign Launched

The question of whether they should continue or not as a public body was the vital matter considered by the Shanghai Ratepayers' Association at their annual meeting last Friday evening. Eventually it was decided to make a big effort to obtain further members before deciding on dissolution and the meeting was adjourned for a month.

Reviewing the activities of the Association, Mr. Hughes said that such a body was not only essential but almost inevitable in a city where revenue was raised by taxation. In Shanghai it was especially necessary inasmuch as they were labouring under obsolete Land Regulations and had no real elections as in other places where the people had a chance by such means to make their power felt. The only real publicity respecting municipal affairs was that given by such a body as theirs and there was no really effective criticism possible. At one time the "Municipal Gazette" had promised great things, but this had degenerated and was now merely a dry record of proceedings.

Nothing is ever known but what is creditable to the Administration could be said of their relations with the public. As members of the Ratepayers' Association they stood for the right of knowing what was being done. They desired friendly co-operation, but this was not extended to them by the authorities. This was largely due to the ratepayers themselves who should join up in order to make the Ratepayers' Association a really representative body.

Referring to the necessity for more provision for motor traffic, Mr. Hughes said that a main thoroughfare was needed suitable for motor traffic entering at, leaving the Settlement and pointed out that no such thoroughfare existed.

How was it, asked Mr. Hughes, that the Ratepayers' Association could scarcely exist in Shanghai while in other places similar institutions were well supported. This was a most important question. Every community got the administration it deserved and the bad conditions in Shanghai were due to the ratepayers themselves.

Finally, as the matter for discussion by the meeting he put to them the following questions: Does the Ratepayers' Association "fill the bill"? If so, can it be maintained as a really representative body?

LUCK OF A NAME.

Mr. Cecil Holliday said that he was inclined to attribute the ineffectiveness of the Association to the fact that they had changed their name from the Civic League to the Ratepayers' Association. As the Civic League their activities were not circumscribed by the question of boundaries and there was hardly a question they could not deal with. As the Ratepayers' Association, for instance, such questions as the Russian problem, Child Labour, and the dredging of the Soochow Creek hardly came within their scope. Moreover, by changing the name they naturally became regarded as in opposition to the Council and the average man looked upon them simply as those who scoffed and did little more, and so he would not join. He also thought that the subscription of $5 was too much. Finally, he recommended reverting to the original title, aims and objects.

Mr. Hughes said that in his opinion the scope of the Civic League was too wide. As for the subscription the Committee had practically decided to revert to the original subscription of $2.

The Rev. W. Robbins urged that so far they had been unable to raise any enthusiasm or cut any ice. Not until they had decided whether they were really a representative body could they decide on a change of name and he thought they should gracefully expire.

Mr. V. J. S. Rance pleaded for another effort to induce people to join.

Mr. Hughes suggested that the meeting be adjourned for another month during which period they could see what response there was to an appeal for new members and what support the newspapers would give them. He also suggested that the subscription be reduced from $5 to $2 from the beginning of the current year.

The meeting was adjourned until Friday, March 14.

UNITED SERVICES' ASSOCIATION

Satisfactory Financial Position More Members Wanted: The Annual Meeting

There was a fairly good attendance at the annual general meeting of the United Services' Association, held on Tuesday evening in the Masonic Hall Major A. Hilton Johnson presided, and was supported by Major M. Reader Harris, M.C., Lieut. T. Addis Martin, Lieut. E. H. McMichael, Major O. S. Benbowe Rowe, M.C., Lieut. J. T. Turner, Major F. R. Barry and Lieut. H. J. West, R.N.R.

In reviewing the activities of the year, Major Hilton Johnson said: Ladies and Gentlemen, The year 1923 has been a normal one for the Association. Nothing of any special note has occurred. Colonel Gauntlett, the Chairman of your Committee, resigned on leaving for Home in June and I was co-opted to serve in his place. Mr. Houghton, an old Committee member, also resigned on his retirement from China in July and the vacancy has been filled by Mr. Tom Martin. Mr. Catley joined us as Secretary in April in place of Mr. Bliss who went Home, and I will ask you to confirm his appointment at this meeting.

MEN OUT OF EMPLOY.

During the year, your Committee met 15 times, and as usual a good deal of work has been done by individual members outside of Committee meetings. As you know, one of the principal things the Committee has to do is to find work for ex-service men out of employment. A good many have been found jobs in the past year, but as time goes on work is getting harder and harder to obtain and your Committee would much appreciate all the assistance members can give in this matter. Very often there must be small jobs of one kind or another going which are known to some of the members of this Association. If they would be so good as to notify the Secretary in such cases without delay, I think we might be able to take advantage of many opportunities which I feel sure we now miss for lack of information.

OBITUARY.

We have to record with regret the deaths of five of our members during the year, and of Mr. N. H. Langley-Smith, who passed away at the Victoria Nursing Home this morning. At the end of the year we had 416 annual and 354 life members, a total membership of 770. The net increase during 1923 was only 17, this low figure being due to the fact that a number of names were dropped from the roll of persons whose identity and whereabouts were unknown. If members would notify any change of address, it would facilitate matters considerably from your Committee's point of view. Another thing we should like to see is a large increase in the life membership of the Association. The more life members we have, the more solid our organization and the better our financial position. There must still be quite a number of ex-service men and women in Shanghai who do not belong to the Association, and we would ask members to assist by endeavouring to persuade them to join. The subscription is only $1 a year, and for $10 any one eligible can become a life member, which relieves him of further payments for all time.

Unfortunately, there are no rules of the Association available for distribution at the moment, as the constitution is undergoing a much needed revision. We had hoped to bring up the amended draft for your approval and confirmation at this meeting; but that was impossible and an extraordinary general meeting will have to be called later on to pass it. When that has been done, copies of the new constitution will be sent to all members.

HOW FUNDS ARE ADMINISTERED.

Coming now to the question of accounts, you will see that from the purely financial standpoint, the Association is in a very sound position. The chief points to note, I think, are that we have cash and invested assets amounting to $45,117.81; and that including $7,226.54 advanced to members during the year, we have a total of $10,342.85 on loan which we expect to recover.

In regard to this item, the difference between the figures for this and the preceding year is explained by the writing down of bad and doubtful debts. Before making up the accounts each one of the large number of debts outstanding in the shape of loans to members was reviewed in detail by your Committee and only those amounts of which there was considered to be a reasonable chance of repayment were kept on the credit side of the balance sheet.

In presenting a balance sheet of this kind, one anticipates the criticism that not enough money is spent on relief. Having so much, it may be asked, why not spend more? Why hoard it? What use is it going to be in the bank? and so on. Well, ladies and gentlemen, as there is clearly more than one point of view in this matter, it may be as well to mention the principles on which your Committee have administered the funds at their disposal. In the first place, we have never considered that the fact of having the money available is of itself any reason to spend it. And in the second place we make sure that every case for relief that comes before us is carefully gone into, firstly by the Secretary or the Hon. Secretary, or both, and then (as a rule) by the whole committee either in meeting or by circular. All such cases receive careful consideration and each is dealt with strictly on its own merits. Naturally, some of the people assisted do not get all they think they ought to have; but then, after all, who does?

A BUSINESSLIKE POLICY.

Some of you no doubt will remember a letter signed by a "Disgusted Member" which appeared in the "North-China Daily News" of June 11 last. This gentleman said he thought that the Association was becoming nothing more or less than a sort of fifthrate Home for the Assistance of Disreputables; that it was about time the present Committee were put out of office and room made for a broader minded set of men and women. . . . who were in a position to take a more lenient view of life. He added that his letter was intended simply to draw attention to the miserable pettifogging indulged in by the Committee at the expense of members in unfortunate positions.

Now, I don't know whether the writer of that latter has come forward for election as a Committeeman for the ensuing year: but I think, judging from the names of those that have, that you must expect the incoming Committee to continue to regard themselves as trustees of the Association's funds and to pursue a strictly businesslike policy in regard to their disbursement.

In this connexion, I may state that last April the then Secretary and Honorary Secretary of your Committee attended a meeting called by the Charity Organization Society, whereat certain arrangements were made to further co-operation in relief work in Shanghai and to prevent the overlapping that had been inevitable up to that time.

CELEBRATION OF ARMISTICE DAY.

In regard to the celebration on Armistice Day, several of our members showed their dissatisfaction with the arrangements made by your Committee by writing letters of complaint to the press. None of them wrote to the Committee, which naturally we should have preferred; but the matter, nevertheless, was taken up at once and an extraordinary general meeting was held on November 5 at which the wishes of members of the Association were sought. As a result of that meeting, your Committee endeavoured to re-arrange the plans they had made to meet what seemed to them to be the ideas of a considerable number of those present; and (although the attendance of our own members was rather disappointing) a very successful dinner was held at the Carlton Cafe on November 10 at which a number of official guests, including the Admiral Commanding-in-Chief, the Consul-General, and representatives of the Committees of the French and American Associations were present. On the following evening the members of your Committee were the guests of the French Committee at the French Club. It is suggested to the incoming Committee that before next Armistice Day an extraordinary general meeting of the Association be called to decide what form the celebrations are to take. There is one point in connexion with Armistice Day which I must not omit to mention, namely the thanks we owe the members of the Ladies' Committee through whose efforts our funds benefited to the extent of nearly $1000 from the sale of poppies on November 10 last (applause).

WOMEN MEMBERS.

During the year, the matter of the eligibility of women for membership of the Association came up, and your Committee made the ruling that women who had served in the War in any capacity and had received service medals were eligible as a matter of course, and that other cases would be dealt with by your Committee on their merits. This ruling, by the way, is one which requires confirmation at this meeting.

You will remember that at the last annual meeting a year ago the member sanctioned a proposal put forward by the Committee that the Association should join the British Empire Service League. This, however, was not done, because, when we endeavoured to gain the assent of the neighbouring Associations to the formation of a Far Eastern Section of the League, in accordance with the wish expressed by the League's President, Earl Haig, it was found that Hongkong, on the advice of General Fowler, the G.O.C., seemed to favour joining the British Legion rather than the British Empire Service League. The matter is now in abeyance until the return of Colonel Gauntlett from Home; when your committee, after hearing what he has to say, will put a definite proposal before members.

WELCOME DONATIONS.

A number of donations have been received during the year, for which we are most grateful and of which due acknowledgment has been made. Among them were $5,625, from the British Flower Shop and $4,000 from the Stewards of the Shanghai Race Club. Our special thanks are also due to Mr. E. A. Nottingham, proprietor of the "Shanghai Times," for his generous offer to insert free of charge in the "Shanghai Times" and the "Shanghai Sunday Times" advertisements on behalf of all those whose names appear in the unemployment circular periodically sent out by the Association. (applause). The thanks of the Association are also due to the British Women's Memorial Association who take charge of certain cases and visit members who are sick in hospital; to our own Ladies' Entertainment Committee; to Messrs Seth, Mancell & McLure, who have kindly undertaken to keep our accounts and to Mr. J. A. Turner of that firm, a member of your committee, who actually does the work of Honorary Treasurer; to the Auditor, Mr. W. D. Jamie; and to Major F. R. Barry, our indefatigable Honorary Secretary. Unfortunately Major Barry is leaving for Home this year and is compelled on that account to resign his position. Mr. Tom Martin, however, has been good enough to consent to take up the work and I would ask you to confirm his appointment at this meeting.

The report and accounts were unanimously passed, on the proposal of the Chairman, seconded by Major Reader Harris.

THE NEW COMMITTEE.

The following were appointed members of the General Committee: Mr. A. J. Griffith (late Band Sergeant, R.M.L.I.), Major Reader Harris, Major Hilton Johnson, Captain R.M.J. Martin, Lieut. T. Addis Martin, Lieut. E. H. McMichael, Captain H. E. Middleton, M.B.E., Rev. W. W. Robbins, Major O. S. Benbowe Rowe, M.C., Lieut. H. Suter, D.S.C., R.N.R., Lieut. J. A. Turner and Lieut. H. J. West, R.N.R.

Various matters were discussed. A member suggested that means be devised for getting in touch with the committee and members when any matter of urgency arises, and the Chairman intimated that this is being provided for in the new constitution.

Major Manners suggested that the Association consider the advisability of arranging some programme on Empire Day for the special interest of British children, and it was agreed to refer the matter to the in-coming committee.

A cordial vote of thanks to the outgoing committee was passed.

SHANGHAI RIFLE ASSOCIATION

At the annual meeting of the Shanghai Rifle Association held on Tuesday evening at the S.V.C. Club, Mr. Stirling Fessenden, chairman of the S.M.C. and president of the Association, presided, supported by Dr. S. A. Ransom, chairman of the committee, Q.M.S. C. T. Rose, and Messrs. R. I. Ito, F. E. Hodges, C. G. Hoh and J. C. Bosustow, and Mr. A. M. Collaco, secretary and treasurer. In addressing the meeting Mr. Fessenden spoke a few words of introduction and then begged to be excused from further remarks because he was quite unacquainted with the affairs of the organization.

The main discussion of the meeting centred upon the relationship of the two organizations—the Shanghai Rifle Association and the Small Bore Rifle Club. In proposing a loan of up to $2,000 to the latter group including the past financial aid amounting to $1,413, Mr. Rose said that it was the duty of the elder organization to assist the other, which had been organized but eight months, though it would take as much as seven years to pay off the amount loaned. He was a member of both committees and was actuated by a double motive. They now had as many as 60 to 70 guns and the average attendance at the shoots was less than a third of the stand.

Mr. Lambert was of the opinion that the debt had not really been incurred by the younger group entirely, but that they had already shown a net profit of $200 since its inception. He thought that the S.M.C. might assist them financially, as the service rendered was of great value to the community from a protective and training point of view. He did not have any objection to the proposal of Mr. Rose and he did wish to see the debt wiped out, but it seemed to him that the two bodies were drifting apart.

Dr. Ransom from the chair suggested that there was no desire on the part of anyone to allow them to separate and that the results of the S.B.R.C. season were good (it was too early to criticize), but thought it best to consider the adopted of the accounts first. After this matter was disposed of Mr Rose's resolution that up to $2,000 be advanced to the S.B.R.C., was put and passed.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The present secretary and treasurer, Mr. A. M. Collaco was re-elected as were the committee en bloc with the substitution of Mr. C. J. Langley for Mr. J. C. Bosustow, who is to leave for Home soon.

The meeting adjourned with a vote of thanks to the president, Mr. Stirling Fessenden.

LAW REPORTS

ACT OF 1709 STILL APPLICABLE

Landlord, Tenant and Sheriff in Supreme Court

A legal matter of unusual interest relating to an English law passed in 1709, was dealt with last Friday in H. M. Supreme Court before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner. In connexion with the case of Woo Kan-zung v. W. and T. E. Poignand (trading as Schiller & Co.), Mr. A. Sopher, of Ezra Buildings, entered an interpleader summons (as Trustee of the estate of the late Mr. Edward Ezra), claiming Tls. 275 from Messrs. Poignand, balance of rent due for offices at 9 Ezra Road.

Mr. J. E. Baddeley appeared for Mr. Sopher, and Mr. Tycho Wing for defendants.

Mr. Badeley explained the circumstances in which Messrs. Schiller & Co. took the premises on a three years' lease, and went on to say that in November and December last the rent fell into arrears, and an arrangement was come to with their sub-tenants for payment of $150 per month. A writ was eventually issued for the balance and judgment obtained, and consequently an execution was levied. The landlord did not know of this and when, following the sale of goods distrained upon, people went to remove their purchases, Mr. Ezra's representative objected and told the Marshal of the Court that he had a claim on the goods. The Marshal then informed him that he must submit his claim in the proper form and accordingly Mr. Ezra's representative withdrew his opposition and the property was removed. He now put forward this claim under the Landlord and Tenants' Act of 1709, which was still in force and which, it had been held, must be construed liberally in favour of landlords.

Mr. Wing held that the landlord was not entitled to claim, for the reason that he had not made his claim known to the Sheriff before the sale took place. Notice should have been given either before the sale or before removal of the goods. In this case, the sale was publicly advertised in the newspapers and the landlord should have known what was about to take place. The landlord based his present claim on the fact that, by the act of the Sheriff, he had been deprived of his right to distrain, but in the absence of notice before the sale or before removal of the goods the Sheriff was helpless. Counsel held that the Statute cannot be enforced once the sale has been held and the goods removed by the purchaser.

His Lordship observed that the Act in question was undoubtedly passed to protect landlords from being deprived, by judgment creditors, of their right to distrain. He understood counsel's contention to be, in this case, that the only time the landlord had for distraining was in the interval between the selling of the goods and their removal from the premises. To do so, it would be necessary for him to obtain a distraint order, and while he was doing that the goods might be taken away.

Mr. Wing—Yes. In those circumstances his right might be difficult to exercise, but it is the only right he has. If the Sheriff sells goods knowing that the landlord has an outstanding claim, the latter may hold the Sheriff responsible and claim compensation; but in this case the landlord gave no notice and the Sheriff therefore was not in a position to preserve the landlord's legal rights. Not having taken the necessary steps, the landlord is not entitled to claim now from the proceeds of the execution.

Mr. Badeley pointed out that the landlord knew nothing of the sale. He did not intentionally stand aside, and upon discovering what was taking place he was advised to submit, under protest.

His Lordship reserved judgment, after pointing out that the law of 1709 was certainly one which could be applied as between two British subjects residing here. As to whether this was so in the case of dispute between a British and a non-British subject was a matter of interest, but one which he was not then called upon to decide.

Judgment for the Landlord

In giving his decision, on Wednesday,

His Lordship said:—In this case the plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendants on December 13 last for Tls. 1,989.72 and costs. Execution was levied on the premises and sale of goods so seized took place. After the sale and before the goods were removed from the premises the landlord claimed rent due and unpaid under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1709. The goods were taken away by the purchasers, and in face of this claim of the landlord the Marshal paid the monies still in his hands into Court and a summons was taken out to determine the rights of the parties. The judgment creditor now resists this claim on the ground that the landlord was too late. It is clear that this is the correct procedure in a case like this and it is expressly provided for in our Rule 905 which deals with a claim for rent. To my mind the law is clear that a landlord can make his claim for rent at any time while the marshal (sheriff) has the goods of the judgment debtor in his hands or the proceeds of the sale thereof (Arnitt vt Garnett 3 B. and Ald. 440). The Act of 1709 was passed to protect the rights of the landlord. By the seizure in execution his right to destrain is lost, and it might even be the duty of the Marshal to withdraw any execution where the claim is made before sale. The position was stated by the Master of the Rolls in in re Mackenzie: 1899. 2. Q.B. on p.575, and a landlord can consent to the sale and then obtain his rent out of the proceeds. If the sheriff (marshal) has notice of the landlord's claim before the proceeds of sale are parted with, the landlord can obtain payment out of the proceeds. The question of his consent to the sale does not affect the general law: as long as the marshal has the goods or the proceeds of sale in his hands, the landlord's right is not lost. But the marshal is under no obligation to inquire whether any rent is in arrear.

The result is that the claimant succeeds and I understand the figures are agreed. He must have the costs of this summons.

Mr. Wing asked for an order, that after payment of the present judgment debt to the landlord, and the costs, the balance in court be paid out to Woo Zang-kung, together with the balance remaining in court from a previous execution.

His Lordship agreed, ordering that all monies remaining in court after satisfaction of the landlord's claim and costs be paid to plaintiff in this action.

A Chinese student, born in the Dutch East Indies, was brought before Mr. Jacobs and Magistrate Kuan at the Mixed Court on Saturday on a charge of travelling on the footboard of a tramcar and with assaulting a Chinese policeman. The case was dismissed, on the ground that he was a Dutch subject and because there was not sufficient evidence against him.

An infringement of the Companies' Ordinance by the West End Estate Ld. was the subject of an application to his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner on Monday. The company is registered in Shanghai, with a capital of Tls. 100,000, in 100,000 shares at Tls. 10 each, all now issued, and the present application was in respect of 1,400 shares issued on December 5 to a Chinese merchant for each, of which transaction no notice was given to the Registrar of Companies. Inadvertence was pleaded by Mr. R. G. MacDonald, who appeared for the company, and no objection being raised by the Crown Advocate, representing the Registrar of Companies, his Lordship granted the extension of time asked for.

SIKH CHRGED WITH FORGERY

Interesting Allegation of How He Manipulated a Savings Bank Passbook

Forgery of an ingenious character was alleged against a Sikh named Sadar Singh, who appeared at H. M. Police Court on Monday before Mr. G. W. King charged with forging and uttering a receipt for $550, with intent to defraud.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, who appeared for the prosecution, stated that the complainant, Suchar Singh, at the beginning of January received G.$300 from America through the American Express Company, and subsequently opened an account for this sum at their savings bank in Shanghai, receiving the usual pass book. For some reason or other, he thought the book would not be safe in his own hands, and so handed it over to the accused for safe custody. Subsequently, a Sikh called at the bank, reported that this pass book had been lost, and asked for a duplicate, which was issued to him. Later, accused went to complainant and told him he had better take his pass book back, as he, accused, was afraid of losing it. "I am a poor man," said he, "and if the money was lost I might not be able to refund it." Complainant accordingly received back his book, and upon going to the bank to draw out some money, found it already withdrawn and the account closed, the duplicate book having been used for the withdrawals and complainant's signature forged.

Det.-Sub-Inspector Yorks gave evidence of arresting accused at the Kung Yik Cotton Mill on Saturday morning, at which time he had $209 in his pocket. He admitted that he had had complainant's pass book in his possession from January 8 to 13, but offered no explanation when asked how the money came to be withdrawn. He was put among five Sikhs for identification, and was identified by Mr. Riggs and the Chinese paying teller at the bank, but two other members of the failed to identify him.

Mr. D. S. Riggs, cashier of the American Express Company, gave evidence that the money was paid in by complainant on January 8 and withdrawn on February 11, the receipt being signed by the accused, whom witness later identified.

The company's shroff, who was next called, was unable to identify either the man who paid in the money or the man who drew it out, nor could the book-keeper, the next witness, identify the man to whom he issued the duplicate receipt book.

Complainant gave evidence bearing out Mr. Maitland's opening statement, and his worship then intimated that he would adjourn the case and consider what charge, if any, should be framed against the accused.

Accused was remanded in custody.

Sent for Trial

Sadara Singh appeared again on Tuesday before Mr. G. W. King, and his Worship framed against him a charge of having forged and uttered a document bearing the name of the complainant, Sucha Singh. This is the case in which the accused, upon receiving complainant's bank pass book for safe keeping, is alleged to have falsely declared the loss of it, taken out a duplicate, withdrawn the full amount of the deposit ($550) and then have given plaintiff back the original pass book saying he was afraid he might lose it.

Mr. Kentwell, for the defence, intimated that accused would call witnesses and give evidence himself.

Hr. E. W. Burgess, assistant cashier at the American Express Company, was first called and said he saw neither the Indian who made the deposit nor the man who withdrew it.

Asked by Mr. Kentwell what was required upon the issue of a duplicate pass book, Mr. Burgess said that the bank would require the depositor's signed declaration that the pass book had been lost.

Accused, employed as a clerk in the Kung Yih Cotton Mill, admitted that he received a deposit book from complainant, but he could not say whether it was the original or the duplicate. Witness did not open it, nor did he know the name of the bank or where the bank was situated. Complainant asked for the book back after a week, to make a further deposit of $50, and then he returned it again to witness, finally taking it back again on February 13. On the 11th., the day on which the forged document was alleged to have been uttered, witness was at work in the mill all day, and could not have left without obtaining leave from the foreigner in charge He did not go to the bank at all.

Mr. T. H. Hood, weaving master at Kung Yik Mill, said the accused, who was employed in his department, did not ask leave to go out on the day in question, and witness did not miss him at all that day.

In answer to Mr. Maitland (prosecuting) witness said it was possible that accused might have absented himself for two hours without his absence being noticed.

After further evidence had been heard, his Worship committed accused for trial, allowing bail in a personal bond of $500 and two sureties of $500 each.

DEBT COLLECTING WHEN DRUNK

A Sabbath-Breaking Sikh

A disturbance in the Astor House on Sunday afternoon led to the appearance of Amar Singh before Mr. K. W. King on Monday, charged with having been drunk and disorderly.

Chief Inspector O'Toole, appeared for the police, whose evidence was that defendant called upon the watchman at the hotel and offered some very uncomplimentary remarks about that worthy's relatives. He was ordered to go away but pushed his way into the hotel and gave the watchman one on the head with his stick. He was arrested and caused further disturbance.

P. S. Mesling, who was on dety at Hongkew Station when defendant appeared, stated that Amar swore at witness and the Indian police, in Hindustani and English, pushed witness, and flung his turban on the ground.

Defendant explained that he went to collect a debt, but was told by his Worship that he was a very obstinate person and should not go debt collecting when drunk. Fined $10 or seven days.

A TRAFFIC BREACH

Owner-Driver Who Missed a Signal

At H. M. Police Court on Thursday, before Mr. G. W. King, H. E. Jones was summoned for failing promptly to obey a police traffic signal at the Nanking-Kiangse Road crossing at 11.35 p.m. on the 5th instant.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted, and the police evidence was that defendant, driving along Kiangse Road from north to south at a fast pace, took no notice of the police signal to stop at the crossing but went on, with the result that a car travelling westward along Nanking Road had to swerve sharply to the left in order to avoid a collision.

Defendant explained that he was driving at about 15 miles an hour and first saw the green light. The hood of his car was low, and when he got closer to the signal it was impossible to see that the light had changed unless he craned forward. The night was very "thick" and it was not until he reached the crossing that he realized the light was against him, and then seeing the other car, he put on his accelerator to clear the crossing and avoid a collision.

Judge Lobingier ceased to preside at the U. S. Court for China last Friday, and no further sessions will be held in the higher Court until his successor arrives. Judge Purdy's nomination for the post has been sent to the Senate by the President, but has yet to be confirmed, states a Reuter telegram.

SPECULATION IN ROUBLES

Russo-Asiatic Bank Suing Max Wulfsohn & Co. on Exchange Contract of $160,000

Judgment was delivered last Feiday in the United States Court for China in the case in which the Russo-Asiatic Bank sued Max Wulfsohn & Co. in the matter of certain exchange contracts entered into between them. Messrs. Shuhl & Schoenfeld were for the plaintiffs and Mr. R. T. Evans for defendants. In giving judgment, his Honour Judge Lobingier said in part:—

This is an action on five "exchange contracts" by which plaintiff purchased from defendants an amount in United States currency aggregating G.$160,000 to be delivered at the various dates named in the contracts. The consideration was roubles but no dates are fixed for their payment.

Much is sought to be made of the claim that the banks in Russia were "nationalized" by the Soviet Government. Apparently this means that their property was sequested; but there is not the slightest indication that it involved the termination of plaintiff's corporate existence. On the contrary, as we have seen, plaintiff's power to execute the contracts in suit is admitted. And they were executed in 1919, a couple of years after the Soviet Government of Russia came into power. Up to that time, then, the acts of that government, whatever they were, had not affected plaintiff's corporate capacity which defendant recognized by dealing with it.

It is contended that plaintiff's head office is required to be in Petrograd and that it was transferred to Paris in violation of law. An examination of the English version of the Statutes which is hereby admitted, fails to disclose anything more than descriptive phrases like "the Russo-Asiatic Bank whose Board is situated in St. Petersburg," and "general meetings of shareholders which are held in St. Petersburg." In view of the express permission "to open branches in Russia and abroad" and of the disturbed conditions in the former, we could hardly say that the above quoted provisions make it unlawful to locate the "head office" elsewhere than in Petrograd. In any event there is nothing to indicate that such an act would affect the corporate existence.

No effort seems to have been made to prove the denial (which certainly does not prove itself) "that the persons bringing this action are the Russo-Asiatic Bank to whom defendants gave the instruments" etc. On the contrary the amended petition is verified under oath by one who swears "that he is an officer of the Russo-Asiatic Bank, the plantiff in the above entitled action." He is elsewhere shown to have held various offices for plaintiff "having a power of attorney" which we cannot assume to have been issued more than three years previously. The presumption is that his authority continues.

II

It is claimed in defendants' brief that "the pleading in paragraph 3 of the amended petition is that the roubles in question were delivered after the execution of the five documents in question." But we do not so read these averments which are as follows:

"3. That during the years of 1919 and 1920, the plaintiff bought from the defendants and the defendants sold to plaintiff the sum of Gold $160,000. for which the plaintiff agreed to deliver to the defendants roubles as more particularly set out in these certain exchange contracts hereto attached and made a part of this petition.

4. That the plaintiff has completed its part of the Contract but the defendants have refused, neglected and failed to perform thier said agreement, and that there is now due and owing from the defendants to the plaintiff the sum of Gold $160,000."

These averments would seem quite consistent with the theory that plaintiff utilized a prior delivery or payment of roubles to fulfil its contract.

A PALACE OF ARTS FOR SHANGHAI.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR:—In many ways the foreign settlement of Shanghai is such a model municipality that one hesitates to assume what might be construed as a critical attitude. But the absence of anything resembling a museum of natural history and fine arts is the subject of comment, not to say complaint, among those who would like to see our city rank in cultural matters with other important world centres.

Twice within the past week this need has been emphasized by exhibitions of considerable importance and artistic appeal which were placed before the public through the enterprise of two public-spirited women's organizations:—i.e. The exhibition of pictures assembled through the efforts of the British Woman's Association, and the rare Tibetan collection of religious and household objects shown by Mr. R. R. Service under the auspicies of the American Woman's Club. Both collections merited consideration and study which it was not possible to give them within the time limits that could be accorded for their display. Both suffered from the fact that in the circumstances it was impossible to show them to the best advantage.

When one contemplates the amount of money ungrudgingly expended to give the Shanghai public good music, to afford physical recreation, to maintain proper roads for motor-cars, it would seem that such a valuable educational adjunct as a good museum could be secured provided the community awoke to the possibility of its realization.

The modern museum has come to play an important part in intellectual development not only because of the educational opportunity it affords growing youth by visualizing and vitalizing what otherwise would be merely dead matter and hearsay art—"book larnin'"—but in the cultural stimulation it brings to the entire community and the very real help it gives to students, scholars, scientists, artists, writers and all others who seek to form contacts with life through deeper channels than mahjongg and golf.

That Shanghai contains many persons who are intellectually hungry is evident in the increasing number of thoughtful groups that have arisen this winter for serious discussion, and in the number of persons to be found at lectures good, bad and indifferent, however badly advertised.

Unquestionably Shanghai possesses the nucleus for a good museum which would also contain a reference library and art galleries, where loan collections could be shown, as well as affording a permanent home for objets d'art that would accrue as time went on.

If the various social organizations that look to the betterment of the city, if public-spirited individuals and men and women of artistic ability and scientific achievement could be brought together, with cooperation of the newspapers, it seems to me that the community would get back of such a movement and push it on to an achievement worthy of the spirit that has made of a mud-hole a beautiful and important city.

China has become the happy hunting ground of the archaeologist. Her treasures are shipped all over the world to inspire interest and stimulate further research while we in Shanghai have little knowledge of and less opportunity to learn from these records of the past than residents of far off Chicago, New York, London. Doesn't it seem worthy of an effort?

Thanking you for any courtesy you may extend this letter,

I am etc.,

INTERNATIONAL SOCCER

Wales Beat Scotland 2-0

Cardiff, Feb. 16.

In fine weather to-day before a crowd of 30,000 Wales beat Scotland in an International Association Football match by 2 goals to nil.

The attendance was a record for a soccer international in Wales. There was plenty of thrilling play in the opening half, but the cleverness of the respective defences prevented scoring. After 15 minutes of the second half W. Davies finished a fine run with a splendid goal. After this the Welshmen took command and near the end Len Davies scored a goal in a melee in front of the Scots' goal. Wales winning by 2 goals to 0.—Reuter.

INTERPORT PAPER HUNT AT PEKING

Victory of Col. Ruxton, With Mrs. Feeney Third: Tientsin Visitors Entertained

Peking, Feb. 17.

Under excellent weather conditions, which enticed many people to the meet, the Peking Paper Hunt Club held the Interport Hunt this afternoon. At the sound of the Master's horn about 50 riders got away, the first run being between two or three miles. At the first check there were very few riders missing, and after a rest of two minutes the Master led the field away again. The second run was not so long, a few excellent jumps, kaoliang fences and walls being encountered. The second check was for about three minutes, when the Master lined up the field to go away on the home run.

The field went away at a fast pace towards the first jump of the run, with Mr. H. E. A. Davey leading. Along the valley the leaders were Mr. H. E. A. Davey and Mrs. Feeney, closely followed by Mr. Teichman and Mr. Murray. At the jump on the crest of the hill Colonel Ruxton, Mr. Teichman and Mr. J. S. Jones went over together, coming in sight of the spectators. Immediately after the jump was a thin line of trees, at which the Buccaneer swerved, bringing his rider's right leg into violent contact with one of the trees. This unseated him and he slid under his pony. Mrs. Feeney and Mr. H. E. A. Davey went up to third place, but could make no impression on the leader, Colonel Ruxton, who passed the post half a length ahead of Mr. Teichman, with Mrs. Feeney in third place, two and a half lengths behind. The card reads as follows:—

1. Colonel Ruxton on Grey Mist.
2. Mr. Teichman on Red Tape.
3. Mrs. Feeney on Cinders.
4. Mr. Bradley on Microbe.
5. Mr. Murray on Hsin Feng
6. Mr. J. E. Andrews on Girondin.

The Tientsin vistors were entertained at dinner at the Peking Club on Saturday evening.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Police Report for January.

Serious Crime.—This includes the murder of a coolie who was shot in a field off Penang Road on January 6 when crossing the path of armed robbers retiring from the scene of a crime; the murder of a Chinese female associate of bandits who was shot in a house in the West Hongkew District on the morning of January 23; and the murder of two women and a man who were shot in a house in the Sinza District on January 28. Enquires revealed that the latter was a well-known bandit leader who pitted his men on several occasions against the Government troops in Shantung and who in addition was one of the participants in the Lincheng outrage. He had two fairly well-furnished houses in Shanghai with women in each who had been carried away at different times from places in the North during raids made there by men under his command.

The case against six Chinese charged with the murder of a pawnshop assistant during an armed robbery at a shop on Woosung Road on December 5 was concluded during the month when five of the accused were remitted to the Court of the Military Governor and one was sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

Robbery.—Eight reports of armed robbery from dwelling houses and shops, two of attempted armed robbery from dwelling houses and one of armed highway robbery were received. In three instances shots were fired by the robbers on departing, resulting in the death of one man and the wounding of another. In connexion with the foregoing and armed robberies occurring prior to January 1, fifteen persons in possession of two automatic pistols were arrested. One was remitted to the Court of the Military Governor while the remaining fourteen were under remand at the end of the month. One man was arrested for armed robbery committed in territory under Chinese jurisdiction and handed over to the authorities concerned. Nineteen of the twenty-four persons mentioned in my report for December as being under remand charged with armed robbery, were dealt with. Eleven were sent to the Court of the Military Governor, one was sentenced to imprisonment, one committed suicide in the Police cells, the charge against four was withdrawn and two were discharged. The remaining five were still under remand at the end of the month.

Three cases of highway robbery in which no arms were used and one of attempted robbery from a dwelling house occurred during the month. In connexion with these and reports received prior to January 1, four persons were arrested, two of whom were sentenced to imprisonment and one to expulsion from the Settlement whilst the fourth was under remand at the end of the month. Two persons under remand at the end of December on a charge of highway robbery were sentenced to imprisonment.

Property Stolen.—579 reports made under this heading during the month represent a total estimated loss of $117,473 and include 42 cases of burglary, 10 of housebreaking, 5 of godown-breaking and 6 of shop and office-breaking. Successful investigation was made in 177 cases, resulting in the recovery of property valued at $45,854, in addition to which recoveries to the extent of $6,377 were made in connexion with reports received prior to January 1.

Trafficking in Firearms.—A Chinese saloon boy employed on a foreign steamer was sentenced to one year's imprisonment at the Mixed Court for being in possession of two automatic pistols and 268 rounds of ammunition. A foreigner charged with dealing in firearms and in whose possession one pistol was found, was sentenced to five days' imprisonment.

"Hwo Wei" Lottery.—Twenty-eight Chinese were charged in connexion with the promotion of Hwo Wei lotteries. Sentences ranging from three months' imprisonment to a fine of $5.00 were inflicted.

Threatening Letters, etc.—On January 8, seven men, two of whom were stated to have been armed, entered a dwelling house in the Hongkew District but left without stealing anything on a servant closing down two trap doors which led upstairs. The incident was followed by the son of the widow who occupied the premises receiving one letter on January 11 and one on January 15 demanding $2,000 and threatening death to various members of the family should this sum not be forthcoming. On January 24 a shell about six inches long was found inside the front gate leading to the house, together with a piece of paper containing certain writing which when translated read "Take notice of the bomb. Expecting that you will be awakened." Two other instances of Chinese residents receiving threatening anonymous letters in which the sums demanded were $5,000 and $500 respectively, were recorded.

Crime beyond Settlement Limits.—Three cases of murder, in one of which the victim was a foreigner, and 12 of robbery and piracy were reported as having occurred during the month in territory under Chinese jurisdiction in the neighbourhood of Shanghai. In one instance pirates attacked a boat and seized it, while in another the laodah was killed and several boat hands wounded.

Executions.—Two Chinese found guilty of armed robberies in the Settlement in September last and with being in possession of firearms were executed at Lunghua on January 30 in the presence of a representative of the Municipal Police.

Public Health Report for January.

The state of the Public Health at the beginning of the New Year was, on the whole, satisfactory, the death-rate among foreigners being below, but that among Chinese, slightly above normal.

Smallpox continued to be unduly prevalent. There were 6 fresh cases notified among foreign residents, and 14 deaths altogether among foreigners, 5 of whom were residents of six months and over. Among the Chinese, 35 deaths were reported from Smallpox, compared with none during January, 1923.

Of the 5 fatal cases among foreign residents, 2 were infants who had never been vaccinated, 2 adults who had not been vaccinated since infancy, and 1 adult unsuccessfully vaccinated 2 years ago.

Once again it is necessary to urge the vital importance of vaccination and re-vaccination as an almost absolute preventive measure against Smallpox.

In China Smallpox infection is always present and the Asiatic type of the disease is often so virulent that efficient re vaccination is advisable every 3 years in order to maintain a high standard of immunity.

Again it is urged:

"Plaintiffs have pleaded a contract of sale. They have pleaded that they have sold and delivered roubles to the defendants. They have pleaded that the defendants have not paid for them. [illegible] they have not sold any roubles [illegible] have bought roubles to defendants."

But it will be seen that defendants do not allege that they have "sold and delivered roubles." They allege that they have "bought . . gold . . for which" they "agreed to deliver . . roubles." The latter, in other words, are the consideration for the purchase and we see no reason why it might not have been paid in advance and even in the form of a loan. For a pre-existing debt is a valid consideration. Not only have defendants not pleaded failure of consideration, but they have expressly admitted execution of the contracts which includes the element of consideration.

Again there is positive evidence that plaintiff delivered some 33,000,000 roubles to defendants. We do not think that Gustamesoff contradicts this, even were we to ignore the very serious imputations upon it by Borjanovsky when he says: "The difficulty was on the transfer. The advice was for 20 or 30 million roubles and we received one or two millions at a time."

Evidently he is complaining not of non-delivery but of slow delivery. Moreover repeated expressions from defendants demonstrate not only that no objection before suit was made for non-delivery of roubles but that their liability was fully recognized. Nearly six months after the last contract was made, defendants, through their agent, acknowledged a balance of practically that sum in plaintiff's favour. This agent had a power of attorney and in its absence we do not think we could presume that his signature had no significance.

The answer, indeed, alleges "that gold dollars to the full value of all roubles delivered have been delivered by defendants to plaintiffs in New York." But this affirmative allegation of performance was one for defendants to prove and they do not even claim to have done so. Plaintiff, however, produces testimony to the contrary, which it was not required to do.

Moreover, defendants' course of conduct shows that they recognized their undischarged liability on these contracts from the time of making them until almost the commencement of this action.

We are unable, therefore, to find any valid and meritorious defence to this action and we are obliged to and do, overrule the motion for nonsuit and second motion to dismiss.

It follows that judgment must be rendered for plaintiff which is hereby considered and adjudged to have and recover from defendants the sum of $160,000. United States currency, with interest on the various items thereof from the dates of delivery fixed by the respective contracts, and costs.

THE EXPENSIVENESS OF CRACKERS

The expensiveness of celebrating with firecrackers was demonstrated again in the U. S. Commissioner's Court for China on Saturday morning in a suit brought by Gun Kwei-long, of Route Ghisi, against Mr. Carl Oren for losses, estimated at $267, sustained by the burning of the plaintiff's household goods by a fire alleged to have occurred through the negligent firing of crackers by defendant or his agents on January 1, 1924.

At the opening of the case Mr. F. J. Schuhl, appearing for the defendant made a tender of $75 in payment for damages, which Mr H. E. Snyder, appearing for the plaintiff, refused to accept. Gun, a gardener, gave a minutely itemized list of the furniture and gardening implements of the dwelling, but at that he omitted three wooden tubs and the extra clothes of his wife, as given later on by his mother. On cross-examination he denied having estimated the damages originally at $50 and that the defendant had offered at one time to give him $150 to start him out again. Mr. Horatio Robertson testified to the condition of the ruins of the hut and its contents.

The case was adjourned until Saturday morning, March 1, to be heard after the traffic cases, if any.

POLICEMEN'S PLIGHT

Alleyway Battle with Armed Highwayman

A 22-year-old hawker was brought before Messrs. Martin and Kuan (British Assessor and Chinese Magistrate) at the Mixed Court on Monday on charges of picking a compatriot's pocket and stealing a wallet containing $550, attempting to murder Chinese P.C. 310 and Chinese P.C. 1278 by threatening to fire at them with a pistol, and with returning to the Settlement after an order had been made by the Mixed Court for his expulsion.

The evidence showed that accused was seen by a Chinese police constable (310) picking the pocket of a Chinese. The policeman gave chase and accused dashed off down Chêkiang Road, and as he was nearing Tientsin Road he turned and drew out a pistol, threatening to shoot the policeman if he came any nearer. The policeman stopped and accused ran into an alleyway. Meanwhile the policeman just going off duty at Hsiang Fun Loong saw the man coming and made an attempt to stop him, but was stopped for a second or two with the same threat. The policeman waited to see if he were in earnest when suddenly he (the policeman) rushed up to grapple with him. Accused struck him on the head with the butt of his pistol and run again. By this time there was a general hue and cry, and accused, who had continued to run dashed into the open arms of another Chinese policeman who had heard the whistle blowing and who effected the arrest.

Prisoner stated that he got the pistol from a friend, but did not know how to use it. He simply made the threats to frighten the policemen.

The Court found him guilty and postponed sentence.

CHIVALROUS BAGSNATCHER

Incident at the Unveiling Ceremony

His would-be act of courtesy, according to his own statement, was not appreciated, said Lien Ching, a tailor, who made his second appearance at the Mixed Court on Monday this time because he attempted to steal a leather handbag, containing $15, from Miss Hibbard after the unveiling service on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Hibbard said that he was with his daughter on the Bund on Saturday afternoon after the unveiling of the War Memorial. Witness went in front of the girl, who was 15 years old, because there was a tramcar approaching. A minute later, when he looked round, he saw accused with the hook of the bag in his hand, as though he was going to snatch it. Witness then arrested him and handed him over to a policeman.

Prisoner, questioned by the Magistrate, said that on Saturday afternoon there were numerous people who were pushing against each other, and the girl was being pushed against a tramcar. He put out his hand to prevent her from being injured. He indignantly denied that he tried to steal the bag.

The Court refused to believe this story, and, in view of the fact that he had once previously been convicted, sent him to prison for a month.

Sympathetic reference to the death of Mr N. H. Langley Smith was made in H.M. Supreme Court on Wednesday by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner, who said: May I say before we begin this morning how much the Bench sympathises with the profession and with Messrs. Hansons in particular, on the sad loss we have all sustained in the death of Mr Langley-Smith.

CABARET ARREST

Proprietor Who Gave Credit: Charge of Obtaining Money by False Pretences

An Argentine merchant, Marcello Matias (37), was at the Mixed Court on Tuesday charged with obtaining $4,000 from L. E. Brown by means of false pretences by giving him a worthless cheques for cash without having sufficient funds in the bank to meet them.

Mr. H. R. Snyder prosecuted and Mr. C. S. Franklin defended.

Det.-Sub.-Insp. J. Hunter, giving evidence of arrest, stated that he placed prisoner in custody in the Winter Garden Café at 2.45 p.m. on Monday.

Cross-examined by Mr. Franklin, he stated that the manager of the Winter Garden Café had telephoned to the police. He informed witness that accused, for whom a warrant had been issued, was at the place. Witness went there and saw accused speaking with Brown, the proprietor, the complainant, and a girl. Prisoner asked him if the warrant was for a theft of jewellery. He was taken to the station and searched, a cheque book being found on his person. Witness had been in possession of the cheque-book ever since except when accused required it to get a blank cheque to fill up his security of $4,000. Other than that there were no changes in the book.

Prosecutor stated that he was proprietor of the Winter Garden Café. Prisoner had been known to witness for about six weeks, during which time witness had cashed for him cheques for various amounts. On the afternoon of the 3rd instant witness was resting when he received a call to go downstairs as accused wished to see him. He asked him to go with him to his office lend him $4,000 as he had some cargo arriving on the following day, but did not have enough funds to meet the bill. Witness gave him $1,000 and a cheque for $3,000, and accused made out a post-dated cheque for $4,000 saying that he expected to meet the cheque on the 11th instant although the cheque was dated the 15th. At the same time, said witness, accused wrote out a supposed mortgage on his motor-car so that if he failed to meet the cheque on the 15th instant it might be seized. On the 15th and 16th instant, witness tried to cash the cheque, but accused did not have the funds in the bank to meet it.

On Saturday morning, witness went to the accused about the motor-car and was told that it was at the garage being repaired. He sent a foreigner the next day to the garage to see if the car was there, but this man found accused there to receive it. On the same evening, witness sent a representative to accused's house and found that the car had already been locked up in the garage.

A lengthy discussion then took place between the Bench and the lawyers concerned as to the criminal nature of the case.

Mr. Snyder stated that if the Court would hold accused on substantial security he was prepared to withdraw the criminal action and transfer the case to the Civil Court.

The bench dismissed the case and stated that civil proceedings must be taken against accused and a petition filed within 24 hours. The bail of $4,000 would stand, in lieu of immediate security.

Operators in the Shanghai Telephone Exchange should feel comforted by the fact that they are not in Canton when they read this from the "Canton Gazette": "Not being able to communicate his message to his office in the Police Headquarters from a telephone on the Bund, owing to the detention made by the telephone operator yesterday, General Techen Wu, the Police Commissioner, was very indignant over the operator not dutiful. He immediately sent for the operator when he went back to the office. The operator will be detained in the Police Headquarters for a few days as punishment."

FEET A MASS OF SORES.

Skin Disease Caused by Insect Pests, Cured by Zam-Buk.

Smart eruption and painful itchy spots caused by mosquitos and other insect pests, are a constant source of danger and annoyance in our climate, for eczema and other dreadful forms of skin disease arise in this way. Prompt use of Zam-Buk ends all such skin trouble in its early stages. It soothes away pain and inflammation, kills the poisonous germs, cleanses the whole tissue and grows healthy, new skin.

"Whilst engaged on surveying duty in the French Congo," writes Mr. Henry Rudland, of Green Point, Seven Oaks, Natal, "I was bitten on the feet by mosquitos. Festering and inflammation developed, and soon my feet were a mass of painful discharging disease known out there as "Craw-Craw."

"I could wear neither boots nor shoes for many weeks, nor could I rest day or night for the intense itching irritation. Nothing brought ease until I was able to obtain a supply of Zam Buk. This balm was wonderfully cooling and soothing, and it allayed the fiery itching pain and soon stopped all discharge. Further dressings of Zam-Buk caused all soreness and inflammation to vanish and the disease was quickly and completely defeated."

Sakar Lal Moti Lal, writing from Navb Dewan Dhrol, Kathiawar, says:—"I and my children were afflicted with itch. The disease with its incessant irritation was most distressing. It defied all attempts to remove it until friends told me about Zam-Buk. It only needed persistent application of this pure and soothing balm Zam-Buk to cure us all. I also find Zam-Buk a valuable remedy for the cure of boils, and other troublesome eruptions and sores."

Zam-Buk is the purest and most remarkable healing substance the world has ever known. It is made from rare herbal extracts and guaranteed free from all animal fats. Of chemists and dispensaries everywhere. Direct from Agents:—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

THE NEW TAXATION IN FRANCE

Paris, Feb. 15.

In the Chamber of Deputies to-day the Minister of Finance, defending the proposal for a 20 per cent. increase in all taxes, stated that the 1923 ordinary Budget was balanced with a bonus of Frs. 540,000,000, and the Budget would also be balanced in 1924.

"We have to face only the sums due by Germany and unpaid."

The Ruhr in 1923 brought in a net profit of Frs. 506,000,000. The Government had reduced National Defence Bonds by Frs. 2,000,000,000 francs since 1921. It would repress evasion of capital, carry out the maximum economies and make the war profiteers pay. The 20 per cent. increase was only a transient surcharge and would principally develop the yield of the general income tax.

Feb. 16.

After 18 days of keen debating, the Government has succeeded in forcing the passage through the Chamber of two of the 110 articles comprising the new financial charter. A string of amendments to Clause 3, which increases taxation by 20 per cent., ranging from complete reversal of the Government policy, like flotation of a lottery loan and the institution of a capital levy, to minor modifications, were all defeated by varying majorities, many of which were close.

Members of the Left criticized drastic taxation, while the Government was making loans to Eastern and European States. M. Tardieu and his supporters contend that it would be useless to improve the franc abroad at the expense of the domestic cost of living.

Arbitration Clause Resented.

But the most solid opposition is based on the power the Clause confers on the Government to issue decrees enforcing administrative economies without reference to Parliament. With the object of making definite progress, M. Poincaré may send the Clause to the Senate as a separate measure, as the Premier, while confident of the support of the Chamber, is anxious to test the feeling of the Senate, which is more hostile to his domestic policy.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 15.

In the course of the debate M. Forgeot proposed to replace the 20 per cent. increase by a State of lottery of Frs. 10,000,000,000 free of interest with a view to lowering the currency circulation. If on August 1 the lottery had not produced Frs. 5,000,000,000, the increase would be applied. This proposal was opposed by the Government and rejected by 328 votes to 217.—French Wireless through Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 18.

The Chamber of Deputies has adopted the Government's proposal to increase all taxation by 20 per cent.

The voting was 315 to 254. M. Bokanowski, the Budget Reporter, stated that the taxation hitherto agreed upon amounted to Frs. 4,730,000,000. The sitting lasted till 5.30 this morning.—Reuter.

FRANCE'S ELECTORAL REFORM BILL

Paris, Feb. 19.

Having won the day with the most controversial features of the Finance Bill, namely, authorization of the Government to reduce expenditure by decree and to increase taxes generally by 20 per cent., the Government is now faced with a hard battle in the Senate on the Electoral Reform Bill. The Left Democrats, who are the majority in the Senate, oppose the modified form of proportional representation, which was the feature of the Bill as it was passed by the Chamber of Deputies on December 6, and demand a return to the old majority system, but it is anticipated that many will abstain from voting in order not to overthrow the Government on a question which is not regarded as of national importance.

It is noteworthy that Customs dues on goods imported from abroad are exempted from the 20 per cent. increase in taxation.

The Increase in Taxation.

Later.

The taxation proposals adopted by the Chamber of Deputies were embodied in Clause 3, which has been hotly debated for nearly a month. The Chamber thereafter got more rapidly to work on the remaining 110 clauses of the Government's Financial Measures Bill, passing this morning Clauses 4 to 31, dealing with details of the increases in duties.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 20.

The Chamber of Deputies to-day by 355 votes to 215 rejected a Socialist amendment cancelling Article 36 of the Government financial proposals, which provides for the disposal of the State match monopoly.—Reuter.

The Bourse du Commerce of Paris has been closed sine die by a decree of the Prefect of Police on the ground that quotations resulting from the exchange crisis would be calculated to lead to abnormal increase in prices.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 18.

French Rentes were flat and touched low records to-day, four per cents being quoted at 17-1/4 and five per cents at 21-1/8, ex-coupon, under the influence of the collapse of the exchange to 102.10 francs to £.—Reuter.

FRENCH INTERESTS IN CHINA

The Banque de l'Indo Chine and the Chinese Consortium

Paris, Feb. 14.

Speaking before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Chamber, M. Sarraut, the Minister of the Colonies, pointed out the importance of the French interests in China.

The committee approved the report of Deputy Guernier recommending renewal of the privileges of the Banque de l'Indo Chine under reservation. The Foreign Minister will survey the operations of the Chinese Consortium and will lay before Parliament a yearly report on its operations.—Reuter.

Privilege of Issue Renewed Under Control.

Paris, Feb. 15.

M. Sarraut, the Minister of the Colonies, in a speech before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, referred to the renewal of the privilege of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine. He France's policy in the Far East from the point of view of the imdealt with the whole question of portant position now held by Indo-China and also of French interests in China. He outlined an economic programme, aiming at accelerating the development of the French colonies.

The Committee adopted the conclusions of M. Guernier's report on the question of the privilege of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine. The report pointed out that the Committee had only to consider the privilege of issue granted to the Banque in relation to its activity outside French territory, particularly in China. M. Guernier proposed renewal of the present arrangements with the reservation that the Foreign Ministry should permanently exercise surveillance on the operations of the Chinese Consortium and submit to Parliament an annual report thereon.—Reuter.

GERMAN SEPARATISTS

Paris, Feb. 15.

The prompt action of French gendarmes at Frankenthal in dispersing crowds who were besieging Separatists in the sub-prefecture, prevented a repetition of the events at Pirmasens and Kaiserlautern.

Berlin, Feb, 16.

The Separatist Government in the Palatinate is actually ended. Ex-Government officials have been released from Separatist prisons and have resumed duty. A committee, appointed by the Inter-Allied High Commission, is negotiating with the German authorities on the subject of a definite form of government. The committee has promised to disarm the Separatists and to abolish all restrictions on traffic in the Palatinate.—Reuter.

Feb. 17.

The special Inter-Allied Commission in the Palatinate has reached an agreement with the Bavarian local authorities for the creation of a provincial government by the elected Provincial Council of the Palatinate.—Reuter.

EUROPE'S NEED OF A NEW LEAD

British Premier's Definition of the Essentials for Reconstruction

Paris, Feb. 15.

Interviewed by M. Sauerwein, the correspondent of the "Matin" in London, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald emphasized that he had not committed himself with regard to an international reconstruction conference. A conference must be the end and not the beginning of the chapter. It stood no chance unless preliminary examinations completely clarified the problems. He desired frank, honest exchanges of views with France through the Ambassadors and, if necessary, by personal correspondence.

Differences of opinion did not matter provided they were without ulterior motive. He honestly intended to discuss ideas and not to attack individuals. He would use neither strategy nor complicated formulæ in diplomacy, but would proceed straightforwardly, solely desiring to alleviate Europe's sufferings by settling a few essential problems in agreement with France.

Mr. Macdonald was strongly idealistic and believed in the possibility of human progress. He regretfully admitted that the warlike elements were gaining ground in Germany and expressed the opinion that we had not used the best means to support the moral of the élite of Germany, who to-day were almost decimated by misery. The good elements of Germany must be strengthened and the Imperialistic and bellicose ideas of the Junkers must be eradicated. France and Britain should cooperate morally, economically and politically in order to eradicate everything bad in Europe. In conclusion the British Prime Minister said: "Let us work with confidence."—Reuter.

New German Ambassador to France

Paris, Feb. 16.

President Millerand to-day received in audience Herr von Hoesch who presented his credentials as German Ambassador.

A battalion of infantry rendered military honours on the arrival of Herr von Hoesch at the Elysée. President Millerand was supported by a crowd of dignitaries, including M. Poincaré. In a speech the new German Ambassador said that he was fully conscious of the difficulties in the way of improving relations between the two countries, but he would devote all his efforts to achieving progress and solution of the great questions on which the future of Europe largely depended. President Millerand replied welcoming the choice as Ambassador of so skilled a diplomatist, who was personally acquainted with the wishes of France, which could be summed up by the words "respect for treaties".—Reuter.

THE AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Washington, Feb. 15.

Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip testified before the committee inquiring into the oil scandals to-day. He had no facts whatever to substantiate the use of President Harding's name in his recent speech, but he suggested an inquiry into the circumstances of the sale of the "Marion Star," thinking that it was a public duty to call attention to rumours in order to kill them. He was a life-long friend of President Harding and merely wanted to clear the late President's memory of a whispering campaign against him.

A development which is likely to be very important in the naval oil lease scandal is the Senate's adoption of two resolutions, firstly, calling on the State Department to furnish all the diplomatic correspondence relating to the Colombian Treaty, in the ratification of which the oil interests and Mr. Fall as the Secretary of the Interior are said to have played a leading part, and, secondly, asking for the correspondence relating to the securing of oil concessions for American corporations in Russia, Mexico, Mesopotamia, Palestine, Burma, Persia and other foreign countries.

President Coolidge has nominated the Philadelphian, Mr. Owen Roberts, Government Counsel in the oil prosecutions, replacing Mr. Strawn.

Feb. 16.

The House of Representatives to-day adopted the Senate resolution directing the Department of the Interior to move for the recovery of the Elk Hill naval oil reserves held by the Californian Standard Oil Company.

The Senate has approved the nominations of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Pomerene as Government Counsel in the oil leases case.

Feb. 17.

The Senate, after six-hours debate, to-day confirmed the appointment of Mr. Pomerene as Government Counsel in the oil leases case. Action with regard to Mr. Roberts, the President's other nominee, was deferred till Monday, when approval is anticipated.—Reuter's American Service.

Resignation of Mr. Denby Accepted by the President

Washington, Feb. 18.

President Coolidge has accepted the resignation of Mr. Edwin Denby, the Secretary of the Navy.

The resignation of Mr. Denby followed a telephonic communication with the President, in the course of which the situation as regards the naval oil leases scandal was briefly discussed in the light of information conveyed to the President by the Republican leaders in the Senate. There has been considerable speculation as to whether Mr. Denby would actually resign, in spite of the Senate's resolution on February 11 demanding his resignation and in view of the strong support which President Coolidge has accorded him.

Later.

The Senate has confirmed the appointment of Mr. Owen J. Roberts as Government Counsel in the oil leases case.

It is understood that the possible resignation of Attorney-General Daugherty will be discussed at to-morrow's Cabinet meeting.

Mr. Denby's Standpoint.

Mr. Denby was not only a party to the oil leases, which he signed with Mr. Fall, but repeatedly defended his part in the proceedings. He has publicly declared since the controversy arose that he believes that the contracts are legal. It was therefore pointed out to the President that it might appear inconsistent to retain a member of the Administration holding these views while the Administration was preparing to take action to annul the leases on the ground that they were made without the authority of the law.

Mr. Roosevelt, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, after conferring with Mr. Denby, had half an hour's interview with the President at the White House, after which he announced that he would not resign.—Reuter's American Service

Chicago, Feb. 18.

The supporters of Mr. McAdoo have unanimously approved his candidature for the Presidency. The officials of many railway and labour unions also passed resolutions that his candidature was not impaired by the oil developments.—Reuter's American Service.

Stockbrokers' Accounts Examined.

Washington, Feb. 19.

In order to counteract reports that the business situation has been injured by the oil disclosures, President Coolidge has made known the view that business in the United States generally is in a healthy condition and probably many of the rumours with regard to the oil leases will be discovered upon investigation to be without foundation. Americans, he added, may look forward to the coming months hopefully.

The Senate Oil Committee's private examination of certain New York stockbrokers, who produced their account-books for inspection, and the continued refusal of Attorney-General Daugherty to resign are the features of to-day's development of the scandal. The object of the new turn in the Committeee's inquiry is undoubtedly to ascertain whether any officials took advantage of advance information regarding the Teapot Dome lease to speculate in stocks.

It is learned from a reliable source that the name of one Government official, whose identity has not yet been disclosed, appears in the books of a certain firm, which the Senate oil committee examined to-day.—Reuter's American Service.

Mr. Daugherty Persisent in Refusal to Resign Despite Sentiment in Senate

Washington, Feb. 20.

It is understood that the Republican Senators during the last few hours have been increasingly pressing for the resignation of Attorney-General Daugherty. Mr. Daugherty, in a brief conference with the President, again affirmed his determination not to resign under fire. He then returned to the Department of Justice where he dictated a statement affirming his decision to stay in the Cabinet.

Upon the heels of the publication of this statement Senators Lodge and Pepper proceeded to the White House to acquaint the President with the growing sentiment in the Senate in favour of Mr. Daugherty's retirement.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

SETTLEMENT OF DOCKERS DISPUTE

Dockers' Claim for Reversion to Wages Paid in 1922: Shipowners' Contention that Reductions are Due to Bad Trade: Further Conferences and Agreement

London, Feb. 15.

[illegible] the Secretary of the Political and International Department of the Transport and General Workers' Union, announced to-day that the postponement of the dockers' conference meant that a strike on Saturday was inevitable unless the two shillings a day increase were granted to-night.

Later.

The negotiations in the dock dispute have broken down and a strike is now certain to-morrow.

A final attempt to secure a settlement was made by the Ministry of Labour, who requested the dockers' delegates to remain in London and meet again to-morrow. The delegates, who were about to return to their districts, agreed to remain, but confirmed by telegram the orders to cease work at noon on Saturday.

Feb. 16.

One hundred and twenty thousand men engaged in practically all the ports in Britain are expected to cease work at midday, but the negotiations have not ended and a final effort will be made during the morning. In the event of a strike all sea-going goods traffic will be immediately paralysed and if the stoppage continues for some days coal mines will be rendered idle and other industries affected, and the food problem is bound to arise, accompanied by increased prices.

Dock work, however, nominally ceases on Saturday afternoon and Sunday and, hence, the full effects of a strike would not really be felt until Monday, so there is still an interval in which the mediators may strive to end the dispute. In the event of the strike extending to include all workers of allied unions the total number of persons affected would be 1,200,000.

Later.

Following conferences throughout the day which were interrupted by several adjournments, the negotiations in the dock dispute broke down. The leaders announced that the strike, which started at noon, will continue.

Later.

The only fresh development this evening in the dockers' dispute is that the London employers have issued a notice that from February 18 all empolyees' wages will be increased by 1/- a day on a "half-daily basis." The chief remaining point in dispute concerns the second shilling demanded, on which arbitration has been offered and rejected.

London, Feb. 17.

The Holt Liner Sarpedon, with a full cargo for China, was among the vessels that got away from Liverpool in spite of the strike.

Later.

It is understood that the Prime Minister himself will probably intervene in the dock strike to-morrow.—Reuter.

Surprising Action of the Stevedores' Union

London, Feb. 17.

The first meeting of the National Strike Committee at Westminster this morning passed a resolution in favour of instructing all transport workers to decline to haul to and from docks, wharves and warehouses during the strike.

The last meetings in London today of the National Stevedores' & Lightermen's Union decided to adopt the policy of a "stay in" strike, continuing work during port hours only from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the evening for five days a week and from 8 in the morning until noon on Saturday and going slow on piece work with no over time.

A National Strike Committee bulletin says that reports from all districts are splendid. The men are determined everywhere. The delegates' conference's decisions have been honoured in all ports. Where safety men are allowed to continue work, they may only do so as long as blacklegs are not introduced.

A surprise move in the dock strike to-day was the decision of the National Stevedores' Union in favour of a "stay in" strike. The Union is a rival organization to the Transport-workers' Union and claims to have 20,000 members in the Port of London and to represent all the stevedores and lightermen and 50 per cent. of the dockers. The members of the Stevedores' Executive declared that, as a result of this policy, there would be more chaos in the Port of London in 48 hours than had the Union struck and they would speedily obtain recognition.

Why Should Women Starve?

Mr. Ruark, the General Secretary of the Stevedores' Union in the course of a speech at a mass meeting of the members of the Union at Bermondsey, recommending the "stay-in" strike, asked them why they should punish their wives and children and themselves by striking during severe weather and playing the game of the employers and the other Union. He added that negotiations were not yet all over and he believed that the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister were moving in the direction of bringing about an agreement between all parties. The policy the Stevedores' Union proposed was quite new in industrial strife and he hoped that they would carry it out at least for the first three days of the week, after which, if necessary, it could be changed.

"Hands off London."

Other speakers claimed that the Stevedores' Union controlled the Port of London and said that their message to Mr. Bevin was "Hands off London. Keep to the provinces with your strike action." They were not going to be dragged at the heels of Mr. Bevin and did not intend to pull chesnuts out of the fire for someone else, but to adopt an original policy on the Asquithian method of wait-and-see.

Feb. 18.

Mr. Bevin stated to-day that the dockers in all provincial ports were out solidly and that London had struck in spite of practically all the dockers under the instructions of other unions. —Reuter.

Court of Inquiry Appointed to Investigate Conditions: Work Continuing in London

London, Feb. 18.

In the House of Commons today, Mr. Thomas Shaw, the Minister of Labour, announced that it had been decided to appoint a court of inquiry under the Industrial Courts Act to investigate the causes and circumstances of the dock strike, under the chairmanship of Mr. Holman Gregory, K.C. Meanwhile he would try to get the parties to meet again with a view to coming to an agreed settlement.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald said that the Government did not fear to take the necessary steps to secure the transport of essential food supplies and had already established the nucleus of an organization. Mr. Macdonald added amid general cheers an expression of shope that nothing would be said in the House of Commons which would make difficult the only thing that really mattered, namely, settlement of the dispute.

Asked whether the Government was in favour of demanding payment of reparations from Germany, the Prime Minister replied in the affirmative amid Opposition cheers.

Later.

The employers assert that work is [illegible] owing to some London [illegible] with anyone men and that [illegible] is fairly general at others.

Effect on Cotton Trade.

Later.

With regard to the effect of the dockers' strike on the cotton trade, the "Manchester Guardian" says that the effect on imports of raw cotton is unimportant for the present as stocks in Britain amount to 879,000 bales. A short time movement has started and a great lock-out is threatened, but, if the export trade is suspended for any length of time, probably a great curtailment of production will be necessary.—Reuter.

Cabinet's Warning to Food Profiteers.

London, Feb. 18.

A sharp warning to food profiteers is contained in a Cabinet communiqué to-day. It declares that there is no reason for the increases as high as 50 per cent. in meat and other prices, of which the Cabinet has received information from various centres. The Cabinet intimates that it has requested law officers to draft emergency measures to prevent exploitation of consumers during the present strike.—Reuter.

Many Dockmen Still Working in London.

London, Feb. 19.

Whereas most of the other ports are at a standstill, approximately 3,000 dockers are working in the London docks to-day, being one-fifth of the normal number. Thirty-two ships are discharging.

An emergency committee of the Trade Union Congress to-day passed a resolution congratulating the transport workers and dockers on their magnificent stand, pledging the support of British trade unionism and calling on all affiliated organizations to assist the strikers.—Reuter.

The Court of Enquiry.

London, Feb. 20.

Meetings of the members of the Stevedores' Union at Poplar and Canning Town have unanimously decided to cease work. The stevedores had decided to give a few days' trial to a "stay-in" strike, after which the union officials might decide upon a full strike.

The dockers' strike has spread to Ireland. Following instructions from London, dockers at Belfast to-day declined to discharge ships from Britain. Dockers at Londonderry have struck.

The Court of Inquiry into the dispute, presided over by Mr. Holman Gregory, accompanied by Mr. H. Boothman, Secretary of the Association of Operative Cottonspinners and Sir Andrew Duncan, Vice-President of the Shipbuilding Employers Federation, opened publicly at the Law Courts this morning.

The Case for the Dockers.

Neither of the disputants had retained counsel. Mr. Ernest Bevin, opening the case for the dockers, said that he did not propose to call witnesses, but desired the Court to call witnesses from the other side. Sir Norman Hill, the Vice-President of the Chamber of Shipping, was present, representing the employers.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that the dockers had unwillingly accepted reductions, totalling 6 - a day, since 1921, because they were fighting to establish national agreements and to abolish casual labour, which was a social disgrace. Their present claim was for reversion to the wages paid in 1922. He asserted that many of the employers did not give their permission to reject the claim. Indeed, hundreds of companies wanted to pay the increase.

Shipowners and Bad Trade.

Sir Norman Hill, on behalf of the shipowners, contended that the wages reductions were necessary in consequence of bad trade. While freights had fallen, working expenses had not diminished. Many shipowners had abandoned the hope of ever making profits.

The Chairman said that the strike must be settled without delay. The Court hoped to report to the Minister of Labour on February 22.

The hearing was then adjourned.

Later.

The port employers met to-night with the object of bringing the Liverpool employers into line with the rest of the ports with regard to a new offer by the employers, which, it is confidently expected, will form the basis of a settlement if it is agreed upon. When the meeting concluded after a long session, no statement was made, but such is possible when the Court of Inquiry resumes to-morrow.

The road transport commercial group committee has requested the National Strike Committee to instruct road transport workers to strike.

A Settlement Reached

Feb. 21.

It is officially announced that the dock strike has been settled.

Later.

The Secretary to the Ministry of Labour states that further conferences, held at the Ministry under the chairmanship of the Minister, Mr. Thomas Shaw, Shaw, resulted in the representatives of the parties reaching an agreement, the terms of which have been accepted by the employers' representatives and will be recommended by the men's representatives to a delegate conference, which will be summoned to meet at the Ministry of Labour this evening. Subject to confirmation, work will be resumed in all ports as soon as arrangements can be made.

Later.

The dockers' inquiry has adjourned sine die.

The terms of settlement of the dock strike provide for an increase of a shilling a day immediately and a further shilling a day as from May 1. There is to be no victimization. Reuter.

BRITISH FLEET IN THE MEDITERRANEAN

Malta, Feb. 14.

It is understood that the redistribution of the Fleet, which is now taking place, practically amounts to reversing the positions of the Atlantic and Mediterranean Fleets, rendering the latter the strongest British Fleet in commission. Dispositions have already been made or are impending, including the accepted certainty that the 1st Light Cruiser Squadron will be despatched to the Mediterranean on the conclusion of the Empire cruise.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S AERIAL DEFENCES

Government Asked to Maintain Adequate Strength for Self-Protection: Need for Aircraft Disarmament Conference: A Comparison of Strength

London, Feb. 19.

The evening sitting of the House of Commons was devoted to a motion by the ex-Minister for Air, Sir Samuel Hoare, on the question of air defence, in which he invited the House to affirm the principle of maintaining a home defence Air Force of sufficient strength to give adequate protection against the strongest Air Force within striking distance of British shores. He contrasted the British and French services, the former with 100 first-line machines as compared with France's 1,060. Sir Samuel stated that his resolution followed the lines agreed upon by the Dominion Premiers. It was embodied in a programme only costing £5,000,000 to £6,000,000 annually, but was more vitally important to the safety of the country than any other phase of national defence. He asked for an assurance that the Government were anxious to see civil aviation developed.

Mr. William Leach, Under-Secretary of State for Air, replying, stated that there would be no change at present regarding the expansion of the Air Force already planned. He declared that the war had killed the doctrine that in order to get peace you must prepare for war. All nations that prepared most, got most war (Ministerial cheers and Opposition dissent). The Government would do their utmost to facilitate an international aircraft disarmament conference. Mr. Leach declared that the legacies of development inherited from the old Government would be fulfilled. They were anxious to foster civil aviation and would encourage the development of airships. In conclusion, he declared that the Army and Navy might repel land attacks, but the Air Force could not prevent an air-raid. The only adequate defence was a changed international atmosphere.

An Astonishing Doctrine.

Major-General J. E. B. Seely, Liberal Member for the Isle of Wight and former Under-Secretary of State for Air, declared that the House had listened to a most astonishing doctrine which would mean disbandment of the Army and Navy if followed to its logical conclusion, and they must challenge the Government upon it (Opposition cheers).

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, stated that the Government's policy was definitely to make the Air Force adequate and, whilst recognizing the necessity of defence, realizing the Imperial aspects of the question, and giving assurance of continuity on the first stages of the programme, the Government reserved the right to do nothing which would prevent them working for disarmament. He hoped that the House would reject the motion.

The motion was talked out. The Speaker would not accept the closure, which Sir Samuel Hoare moved, because he was of opinion that the debate on a matter of this magnitude in such a short period ought to be resumed when the Air estimates came on.—Reuter.

LOANS UNDER TRADE FACILITIES ACT

An Aggregate of £65,000,000: Interest on Dominion Loans: A Fleet of Motor-ships

London, Feb. 19.

In the House of Commons today, moving a series of financial resolutions extending the aggregate of loans guaranteeable under the Trade Facilities Act from £50,000,000 to £65,000,000, Mr. William Graham, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, explained that the resolutions included at least one of the proposals of the Imperial Economic Conference, namely, that authorizing the Treasury to guarantee for five years three-quarters of the interest on certain Dominion and Colonial public utility loans, the proceeds of which were to be expended in the United Kingdom.

The resolutions were agreed to without a division.

The Bank of England invite applications for £1,800,000 five per cent. debenture stock, issued at 98½, in respect of which the Government guarantee principal and interest under the Trade Facilities Act. The proceeds are required to pay for a fleet of motor-ships for £1,800,000 ordered from Messrs. Harland & Wolff. —Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

FIVE NEW CRUISERS FOR BRITAIN TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Government's Policy Violently Attacked by Little Englanders but Successfully Supported by Conservatives

London, Feb. 21.

In the House of Commons today a volley of criticizing questions followed an announcement by Mr. C. G. Ammon, Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, that the Government had decided, in view of the serious unemployment, to proceed with the laying down of five cruisers (Labour cries of Oh! and Opposition cheers), three of which would be built in the Royal Dockyard, and two destroyers. Tenders would be invited immediately so that work might be proceeded with as soon as Parliament sanctioned it.

Replying to Mr. L. S. Amery, the former First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Ammon said that the depot ships and other items on the programme, which Mr. Amery had previously submitted to the House, were still being considered.

Mr. P. A. Harris, Liberal member for the Southwest Division of Bethnal Green, asked whether these boats were actually needed for the defence of the country urgently and would it not be better to use the money in more productive ways (Loud Ministerial cheers).

Mr. E. Thurtle, Labour member for Shoreditch, asked whether or not this decision was to be taken as a great moral gesture to the world.

A Labour member asked, Would Mr. Ammon take into account the fact that the laying down of these cruisers would lead to the laying down of further cruisers by foreign countries, which would lead to a possible catastrophe creating far more unemployment?

Mr. Ammon, replying, contended that they were largely replacements and were not really adding to our weight of armaments.

Mr. W. M. R. Pringle, Liberal member for Peniston, asked leave to move an adjournment as the matter was of urgent public importance.

All the Liberals and over half of the Ministerialists present supported the motion, which will be discussed this evening. The Opposition ironically cheered the fact that some Labour members did not support the motion.

Liberals the Chief Critics.

Later.

The Liberals were the principal critics of the Government when Mr. Pringle moved the adjournment of the House of Commons to-day in order to draw attention to the Government's shipbuilding proposals.

Commander Kenworthy, the Liberal member for Kingston-upon-Hull, ironically commented upon this method of pacification of Europe. He asked why, as a logical conclusion, the Government did not seek to cure or relieve unemployment by embarking on a first-class war with somebody.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, explained that the ships would not be laid down until the House had sanctioned the expenditure when the estimates came up. He declared that the vessels were purely for replacement purposes. The Government could not carry out its disarmament pledges by allowing the Navy to disappear by wastage from the bottom (Opposition cheers). The whole question of the future Naval programme was now being explored, until the completion of which no decision would be reached.

Mr. Macdonald stated that 2,250 men would be discharged from the Royal Dockyards in March if fresh construction were not undertaken. This would be increased by another 2,500 in March, 1925. He declared that when he came into office, the Government begged the public authorities, the War Office and the Admiralty to put work in hand with a view to relieving unemployment and the present proposal arose from this.

Mr. L. S. Amery strongly supported the Government. He was only sorry that the Government had not seen their way to carry out the whole programme of the late Government, namely, eight cruisers and a considerable number of other vessels, including aircraft carriers.

Mr. Pringle's motion was rejected by 372 votes to 73.

Saved by the Tories.

Feb. 22.

The result of last night's division in the House of Commons, which was the first critical division since the Labour Party came into office, was greeted with cries of "Saved by the Tories! Baldwin the Socialist! The new Coalition!," a huge muster of Conservatives responding to the special whip and voting with the Government.

The minority were entirely Liberals, plus one Labour member and the Independent member, Mr. Scrymgeour. Mr. Macdonald's explanation had placated the earlier anger of his followers, with the result that they eventually voted almost solidly against the motion, though there were abstentionists, including at least two Clydeside members. Fifty Liberals abstained and 20 voted for the Government.—Reuter.

THE DOCK STRIKE SETTLEMENT

Further Terms to be Discussed: Work Delayed Pending More Concessions

London, Feb. 21.

Resumption of work by the dockers is expected to-morrow. The terms, which include establishment of an inquiry into the question of decasualization, (discontinuance of the practice of engaging casual labour) must first be approved by the conference of docker's delegates convened for to-night, but this is regarded as certain. The situation is complicated by the fact that the stevedores unions are independent and claim an increase of 2s. 6d. This has not yet been considered by the employers, yet resumption will not be fully effective until the stevedores also return.

Later.

There is a more unfavourable outlook on endorsement of the strike settlement in view of the fact that the dockers of Manchester, Salford and Newcastle have instructed their delegates to accept nothing less than an immediate two shillings advance and decasualization.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald in the House of Commons to-day paid a tribute to Mr. Thomas Shaw's skill and patience. He hoped that the dispute would be finally settled to-night to permit resumption of work to-morrow.

An Adjourned Conference.

Later.

The dockers' delegate conference to consider whether to endorse the provisional terms of settlement adjourned this evening after a long sitting until to-morrow, no decision being taken. It is understood that the port areas are sharply divided.

With regard to the terms of settlement, the second shilling is payable on June 1, not May 1 as previously reported.—Reuter.

BRITISH SQUADRON IN AUSTRALIA

London, Feb. 21.

A fantastic story, circulated in Melbourne, that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald had issued instructions to the officers of the Special Service Squadron, which would "considerably nullify any jingo patriotism," ordering them not to make any political distinctions during their stay in Australia, has caused some sensation as it was published on the eve of the Squadron's arrival.

Doubts were expressed by the Australian newspapers as to the genuineness of the story, which Mr. Macdonald to-day authorized Reuter to deny emphatically. Mr. Macdonald says that there is not a single word of truth in it. The source of the story is unknown. Downing Street is completely puzzled.—Reuter.

GERMANY'S CAPACITY TO PAY

Investigations by Committees of Experts: Enormous Expenditure

Paris, Feb. 21.

The Second Committee of Experts has reached an estimate of the amount of German capital sent abroad and will now determine the means of repatriating it.

The First Committee of Experts is observing the strictest secrecy with regard to the drafting of the report on the financial situation in Germany. It is stated, however, that there is no truth in the rumour that the experts discussed the restoration of the German Colonies with a view to increasing her capacity to pay. Such a solution was, apparently, not even touched upon. There is reason to believe that the experts were struck by the enormous expenditure by Germany on domestic works, particularly the improvement of internal communications.

Speaking in the Senate to-day, M. Poincaré said: "I have no secret desire to shirk office at a time when we are on the eve of events which may be decisive and which, moreover, present themselves under favourable auspices." It is presumed that M. Poincaré referred to the work of the experts committees.—Reuter.

FRENCH ELECTORAL REFORM BILL

Constitutional Representation Clause Carried and Also Financial Proposals

Paris, Feb. 21.

The Senate to-day by 150 votes to 134 rejected the proposal to revert to the system of single member constituencies in the debate on the Electoral Reform Bill. M. Poincaré in an earlier debate had made the question one of confidence. He denied that his attitude was a pretext to laying down office.

The Chamber of Deputies by 365 votes to 188 adopted Article 36 of the Finance Bill, abolishing the match monopoly. This was the most hotly contested Article of the Bill after Articles 1 and 3. The Government made it a vote of confidence.

As a result of to-day's divisions M. Poincaré is practically assured of retention of the Premiership, at least until after the elections. The Government's victory in the Senate is attributed to the large number of abstainers, who were hostile on the immediate issue, but were unwilling to create a Ministerial crisis at the present international juncture. Senator Jeanneney, the President of the Electoral Commission, in the course of the debate in the Senate bitterly complained that M. Poincaré was placing the Senate in an unworthy position and compelling the House to vote on a measure with which two-thirds of the members disagreed. —Reuter.

ROBINSON PIANO CO./LD.

While Mr. H. P. Whitney, a prominent New York stockbroker, was giving evidence before the Senate Oil Committee to-day, Senator Elkins (Republican) of West Virginia announced that he had purchased Sinclair Oil stocks and was perfectly willing to go before the committee and tell all he knew about the matter.—Reuter's American Service.

Vanderlip Sued for Libel

New York, Feb. 21.

The joint owners of the "Marion Star" are suing Mr. Frank Vanderlip, the banker for $6000,000 for alleged slander and libel implicating the "Marion Star" in the oil scandal. Mr. Vanderlip alleged on February 13 that an excessive price had been paid to the late President Harding in connexion with the sale of his newspaper, the "Marion Star," shortly before his death.—Reuter's American Service.

MEXICO'S REBELLION

Federal Forces Ambushed

Mexico City, Feb. 15.

The Federal troops under General Obregon entered Quadalajara yesterday, the inhabitants pelting them with flowers. General Escobar, although wounded, ordered an immediate advance against Morelia, where the rebel Generals Estrada and Dieguez are reported to have concentrated their forces. There is an unconfirmed report that the Federal troops have occupied Tuxpam.

Yucatan, Feb. 15.

The American cruiser Richmond and the French light cruiser Capetown have arrived at Progreso.

It is reported that the revolutionary General Pineda has defeated the Federal General Belascos in the State of Chiapas and taken a number of prisoners.—Reuter's American Service.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 17.

It is unofficially reported that the Federal General Topete with 2,000 men, advancing from Cordoba to Port Blanco on the Isthmus Railway, was ambushed by rebels in Motzirongo. His force was defeated and dispersed, losing its trains.—Reuter's American Service.

OBITUARY

Dr. Alexander C. Garrett

New York, Feb. 20.

The death is announced of Dr. Alexander Charles Garrett, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, at the age of 92.

Dr. Garrett was born at Ballymot, County Sligo. He was appointed curate of East Worldham in Hampshire in 1856 and in 1859 left for British Columbia as a missionary. In 1870 he came to America and was elected missionary bishop of Northern Texas in 1874.—Reuter's American Service.

Bishop Domenico Pozzoni

Hongkong, Feb. 21.

The death took place last night at the French Hospital of the Right Reverend Domenico Pozzoni, Bishop of Tavia and Vicar Apostolic of Hongkong, from heart failure.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEW USES FOR RUBBER

Boots, Paving Stones and Waterproof Linings for Teachests

London, Feb. 20.

In a paper read before the Royal Society of Arts on new uses for rubber Mr. P. J. Burgess, the Chairman of the Rubber Growers' Association, suggested that Ceylon tea-planters might experiment in waterproofing teachests with rubber latex instead of lead-foil. He anticipated that crêpe rubber soles would become the standard equipment of all boots and shoes, but the crêpe rubber must be plantation finished and the retail price of such footwear must be reduced to equal to or less than leather-soled boots and the liability of the rubber sole to slip in wet weather must be overcome.

The difficulty of obtaining satisfactory adhesion of the rubber road block to its base appeared to have been solved. Mr. Burgess was of opinion that the use of large blocks would overcome the remaining difficulties of rubber road construction, which was the only direction in which he saw hope of solving the chief rubber problem, namely, finding a use for rubber on a big scale, which would function as a practicable proposition with raw rubber at some pivotal price, say, 1/6 per pound.—Reuter.

ECONOMIC ESPIONAGE IN RUSSIA

Severe Sentence on University Professor

Riga, Feb. 18.

It is reported from Moscow that a Soviet tribunal sentenced to death Professor Clair, of Ekaterinburg University, for economic espionage in supplying French capitalists with information concerning the platinum industry in the Urals. The sentence has since been commuted to ten years' imprisonment and confiscation of the Professor's belongings.—Reuter.

DUEL WITH BOOTLEGGERS

American Senator Wounded

Washington, Feb. 16.

While walking along Pennsylvania Avenue to-day in company with his wife, Senator Green of Vermont was wounded in the head during a duel between Prohibition agents and bootleggers [illegible] a hospital.

The bullet which struck Senator Green did not remain in his head, but caused a slight fracture in the region of the frontal bone.

Later.

Physicians attending Senator Green have come to the conclusion that a portion of the frontal bone has been driven into the brain and an operation, therefore, may be necessary. — Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Feb. 17.

Senator Greene was operated upon to-day and the splintered bone taken out of his skull. His condition is serious, but physicians are hopeful of recovery.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Feb. 18.

The condition of Senator Greene is critical.—Reuter's American Service.

THE MORGAN LIBRARY

Priceless Collection of Books

New York, Feb. 16.

Mr. J. P. Morgan as a memorial to his father is transferring his magnificent library, valued at $7,000,000, with the ground on which it stands in one of the most valuable sections of New York to trustees, who will maintain it in perpetuity for scholars from all parts of the world, but it will not be available to the public owing to the fragility of the books and manuscripts.

The collection contains 25,000 ancient and irreplaceable books and is believed to be the biggest private one in existence. An endowment of $1,500,000 accompanies the gift.—Reuter's American Service.

TUTANKHAMEN'S TOMB

Luxor, Feb. 15.

Mr. Howard Carter on presenting himself at the tomb of Tutankhamen this morning was refused admission by the chief of police who showed him a written order of the Government. Mr. Carter retired.—Reuter.

Cairo, Feb. 15.

It is officially announced that the Egyptian Government will take energetic steps to fulfil its obligations towards science and the public in connexion with Tutankhamen. Lady Carnarvon's licence was issued in July last year and is due to expire on November 24, 1924. The Director-General of Antiquities will proceed with the opening of the tomb, and laboratories and other depots will take measures to safeguard and preserve the antiquities.—Reuter.

GERMANY'S FINANCES

Paris, Feb. 20.

Dr. Schacht, the President of the Reichsbank, has left for Berlin. He will return to Paris in a week's time, when he will again confer with the committee of experts with regard to the details of his scheme for a gold credit bank, which the experts are understood to have accepted in principle.—Reuter.

THE FLIGHT TO THE POLE CANCELLED

Washington, Feb. 15.

President Coolidge has ordered the suspension of the naval aerial expedition to the North Pole in the summer on grounds of economy.

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby, states that considerable opposition existed to the expenditure of the $350,000 required and therefore the President has postponed the expedition until Congress has been given an opportunity of expressing its views.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, Feb. 16.

The newspapers register the astonishment and disappointment of the Navy Department at President Coolidge's order cancelling the Polar flight of the airship, Shenandoah, which is described as coming like a flash out of a clear sky. Efforts will be begun immediately to secure the approval of Congress to the flight, but it is admitted that it is now probably too late. It is declared that, if no Congressional action is taken within ten days, it will be impossible to attempt the expedition this year. The advance party, which was already on the way to Alaska to carry out the preliminary work in connexion with the flight, has been halted at Bremerton Navy Yard in Washington State. All other preliminary activities have been stopped.—Reuter's American Service.

CHINESE LABOUR IN NAURU ISLAND

London, Feb. 18.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Mr. J. W. Black, Liberal Member for Harborough, who suggested steps to secure henceforth that Chinese contract labour employed in the Nauru phosphate mines should only be recruited under the proviso that a certain proportion of women accompanied the men, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, said that the British phosphate commissioners had informed him that many Chinese were offered free accommodation for their wives at the island, but hitherto the social prejudices of the Chinese had prevented more than a very few women from taking advantage of this offer.—Reuter.

MORE COTTON DISPUTES

London, Feb. 21.

The absence of card-room operatives' representatives from a joint conference at Manchester to establish an agreed system of control for American yarn sections of the industry has caused a deadlock in the scheme, and the conference has indefinitely adjourned.

It is feared that the dispute may lead to a lock-out in the cotton trade.—Reuter.

COAL MINERS' WAGES IN AMERICA

Jacksonville, Feb. 20.

An agreement providing for the renewal of the present bituminous miners' wages scale for two years was signed to-day by Mr. Lewis, the President of the Miners' Union. He declared that it laid the ground-work of peace in the coal industry and a continuous supply of fuel for at least three years.—Reuter's American Service.

Dutch Banking Development

London, Feb. 16.

"The Times" city editor says that Amsterdam appears to be making a bid for international monetary fame. The formation of a second credit institution in Holland, in which Swedish, Dutch, British and German banking interests are concerned, is the second development in the past month. It is understood that a third combination is contemplated.—Reuter.

Oldham Cotton Dispute

London, Feb. 15.

A dispute has arisen in the cotton room of the Thornham Spinning Company's mill near Oldham where 300 operatives are employed. The point at issue is of the first importance and may lead to a lockout, involving all the mills within the Federation and 150,000 operatives. The employers have convened a meeting of the whole trade for February 26.—Reuter.

Mr. H. E. R. Hunter's Estate

London, Feb. 17.

Mr. H. E. R. Hunter, the Eastern banker, etc., left £63,161.—Reuter.

Woman's Vote in S. Africa

Capetown, Feb. 16.

The Assembly passed the second reading of the Women's Enfranchisement Bill by 54 votes to 48. The Prime Minister, General Smuts, supporting the Bill, pointed out a difficulty regarding Cape Province, where native men were eligible to vote.—Reuter.

Penny Postage Impossible at Present

London, Feb. 17.

It is stated that the Postmaster General has definitely decided that an early return to penny postage is impossible as the anticipated Post Office surplus will not be available for it.—Reuter.

The Murder of Mr. Day

Calcutta, Feb. 17.

The Bengalee, Gopinath Saha, has been sentenced to death for the murder of Mr. Ernest Day, whom he shot on January 13 in mistake for a high police official.—Reuter.

Round-Table Conference in India

Delhi, Feb. 18.

The debate in the Legislative Assembly ended to-day with the adoption of a resolution in favour of calling a round-table conference to prepare a scheme for further Constitutional advance by 76 votes to 48 amidst Swarajist cheers.—Reuter.

The Prince of Wales

London, Feb. 18.

The Prince of Wales has recovered from his recent accident and attended a football match to-day between Tottenham Hotspur and Oxford University in aid of the Tottenham Hospital. The Prince's right arm is still in a sling. His Royal Highness received an ovation from the crowd.—Reuter.

Bombay Cotton Mill Strike

Bombay, Feb. 18.

All the mills reopened this morning, but the operatives did not return to work. Instead, they assumed a threatening attitude. Some grain-shops were looted, but up to the present no serious disturbance has occurred.—Reuter.

The Fiume Agreement

Belgrade, Feb. 20.

The Chamber has ratified the agreement between Italy and Jugo-Slavia with regard to Fiume.—Reuter.

The Limitation of Armaments

Washington, Feb. 18.

Secretary of State Hughes, in a letter to Mr. Fish, a number of the House of Representatives, declares that it is not feasible at present to call an international conference on further limitation of naval armaments.

The letter adds that as far as light cruisers, submarines and aircraft are concerned America's position is the same as at the Washington Conference and the difficulties of reaching an agreement are not yet removed. An agreement on poison gas was reached at the Conference but one signatory Power has not yet ratified the treaty and it has therefore been impossible to put it into effect. The United States has reduced its land forces to the fullest extent practicable.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. War Debt Policy

Washington, Feb. 18.

The Government's war debt policy remains unchanged after to-day's conference of the Debt-funding Commission, which failed to act on a proposal that the debtor Governments should again be reminded that the United States is awaiting their funding proposals.—Reuter.

Liquor Prohibition in America

Washington, Feb. 19.

A short delay is likely in the signing of the Illicit Liquor Prevention Treaty between Canada and America in consequence of Canada declining the suggestion that vessels plying between Canada and the United States, carrying liquor, should be denied clearance. It is argued that this is a violation of Canadian law.—Reuter's American Service.

Cotton Growing in the British Empire

London, Feb. 19.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Sir Leonard Lyle, Unionist Member for Epping, Mr. Sidney Webb, the President of the Board of Trade, stated that the Government considered an increase in the world's supply of raw cotton as most important and had every intention of carrying on the policy of promoting cotton growing within the Empire.—Reuter.

Violent Storm on U. S. Atlantic Seaboard

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

Less Drunkenness North of the Tweed: Edinburgh's Sober New Year: 6,000,000 Scottish Acres Change Hands

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Jan. 9.

Only 41 cases of drunkenness were called at Edinburgh Police Court on the morning after New Year holiday. This seems a trifling matter to report to an overseas newspaper, but to those who know Scotland and its old holiday drinking customs it is a very interesting and pregnant fact.

In pre-war days the average apprehensions used to be over 100. The figure for the present year, therefore, shows a striking diminution, and the reduction has been recorded not only in Endinburgh but all over the country.

During the war arrests for drunkenness decreased to a surprising extent. They tended to increase after the Armistice and while trade was good and money abundant. Thereafter they diminished, and the final results is that we appear to have reached a state of great and permanent improvement.

It is not only from police statistics that we can draw that comforting conclusion. Every observant citizen knows from his own experience that the change in the habits of the people was in progress long before 1914, and that the war only hastened the process.

Shall we ever return to the old drunken conditions, such as were focussed to our sight with painful cleaness during New Year festivities? We think not. The figures are almost sure to rise with an improvement in trade, but never to the height of former days. What was tolerated 30 or 40 years ago in social and in business life is now quite beyond toleration. It is certain that a different standard of behaviour has been set up, not only in Scotland, but in England, and in many other countries. In Scotland there have been contributary causes. During the New Year holidays, for instance, time was when public-house bars offered almost the only attraction, but now sport is the principal thing that matters. Football claims first attention, and complete programmes on the first two days of the year go a long way to counteract the temptation of the public house. Other causes have undoubtedly been early closing, the high prices of liquor, and, let it be admitted, the advertisement that temperance has obtained by the Prohibition campaign in connexion with the last two Local Veto elections. But the movement has been continuous for years—long before the recent phase of Prohibition was heard of—and the reasonable conclusion is that the fundamental cause is to be found in the enlightenment of the people and in the general advance of education, in the best sense of that word.

ELECTIONS OF PAST TIMES.

Now that matters have quieted down we begin to wonder whether the General Election that has just finished was really so bad in some of its aspects as we supposed it to be at the time. A great deal has been written about election hooliganism—I have written a good deal that is condemnatory about it myself—but is it absolute fact that hooliganism at political meetings grows worse, that the liberty of free speech was never before so imperilled as now?

Is it not the truth that in this respect we are always improving. Brutal assaulting and beastly bellowing were the weapons of the old hustings. Little more than 20 years ago Mr. Lloyd George had to be protected from violent mobs by a bodyguard of police; a pacifist meeting he addressed in Glasgow was able to proceed only because a regiment of Stalwarts had been engaged as chuckers-out and did their work with efficiency and enthusiasm. Stalwarts of this kind used to be employed by all the political parties; a glance over the old files of any newspaper will make it apparent that they were an urgent necessity. To-day the disorderly meeting is exceptional, and as often as not arises from some indiscretion of a candidate.

The first election in which I took a part—a very youthful part—was in a country. There were very few polling-places; and great bodies of electors had to be taken to the poll by special steamers. The Conservatives hung their flags out from the George Hotel. In the community itself there were only about half-a-dozen Tories; it was a sort of belated pocket burgh in which loyalty to the Whig landlord or mere bread-and-butter discretion made the majority frantic at the very sight of a bule rosette. The George Hotel was stormed by the free and intelligent, and practically every window on its frontage broken. The six notorious Tories lived haunted lives for several weeks, their doors were broken open at night and rowing boats were deposited in their lobbies. There were plans for their kidnapping on the day of the poll.

One of the steamers coming in with voters from a distant part of the country was filled with electors known to be solid for the Tory. The passengers had to move in close formation to the polling place, otherwise they would never have reached it. When the steamer was leaving again, it was under a rapid fire of uncooked herrings and potatoes, barrels and bags of which happened to be on the quay. Shameful, imbecile—but great sport!

There was a burgh election at the same time. The Liberal candidate got all the votes, but even his supporters could not conceal that he had most of the attributes of a due. His opponent was conscientiously hooted down, but the Liberal paid painfully for his ultimate triumph at the poll by having to submit to be carried shoulder high, in which helpless position he was joyfully "nipped" in the more salient parts of his person by his more youthful rude supporters. How would the candidate of to-day like that? A few years later and the same constituencies were trueblue Tory.

ANOTHER "LAND FLOAT."

The latest Scottish Peer to form his estates into a joint stock company is Lord Saltoun. The capital of the company is £1,000,000. Lord Saltoun is Superior of the town of Fraserburgh which was originally formed into a Burgh of Barony by one of his ancestors. The Philorth estates, which extend to about 12,000 acres, are all in the neighbourhood of the town and in adjoining parishes. The throwing of their estates into the form of a company gives landlords certain advantages in regard to taxation, particularly in the assessment of income-tax and death duties.

SCOTLAND CHANGING HANDS.

During 1923 another 200,000 acres of Scotland changed hands. Since November 11, 1918 (Armistice Day) no fewer than 6,000,000 Scottish acres have been sold. This means that in all about one-third of the whole country is owned by new lairds. The biggest estate to come into the market was that of Lord Leverhulme in Lewis. The acreage was 282,000.

ST. ANDREWS.

A Plus man stood, driver in hand,
St. Andrews, O St. Andrews;
Watching his caddie tee up the sand,
By the bonny bunkers of St. Andrews.

The ball was placed (a Silver King),
St. Andrews, O St. Andrews;
The golfer smiled and took his swing,
By the bonny bunkers of St. Andrews.

Slow was the rise, speedy the fall,
St. Andrews, O St. Andrews;
The club by a hair's breadth missed the ball,
By the bonny bunkers of St. Andrews.

The caddie laughed out loud with glee,
St. Andrews, O St. Andrews;
The golfer slew him on the tee,
By the bonny bunkers of St. Andrews.

They met to find out how he died,
St. Andrews, O St. Andrews;
And brought in the verdict, "Suicide,"
By the bonny bunkers of St. Andrews.

—N. M'E.

BARING-GOULD A SCOTOPHOBE.

The late Rev. Sabine Baring-Gould was probably the champion Scotophobe. His views about us, if anybody were to collect them, would be highly entertaining. He felt particularly bitter when he thought of the Scottish Archbishops and of Scottish matrimonial alliances with the royal family. This last weakness of his makes it likely that his last year was the unhappiest of his long life.

THE HOUSE WITH THE GREEN SHUTTERS.

The publication of the illustrated memorial edition of that powerful Scots novel "The House with the Green Shutters" recalls a story current at Oxford during George Douglas Brown's residence at Balliol. It helped to explain his marked lack of enthusiasm for Jowett, the famous Master of that College. At a breakfast given to some freshmen, among whom was Brown, Jowett remarked—"I don't know how it is, Mr. Brown, but you remind me very strongly of my late lamented friends. Professor John Conington." Ten minutes later the Master, quite forgetful of his previous remark, said in connexion with some other topic, "Without doubt my late lamented friend, Professor John Conington, was the ugliest man I ever knew!"

LEGEND OF HOGMANY.

A knot of collegiate waggis
Played ball in the High with a haggis;
A man in the scrum
Fell prone on his tum
And flattened the ball on the flaggis.

A Sassenach rescued the haggis,
Reproving the 'varsity raggis;
With various types
Of skirl on the pipes
He blew out the ball with his baggis.

SEEING SESSUE

An Ambassador from the Far East: Cinema Stars Best Kept to the Screen

By Our Labour Correspondent.

Manchester, Dec. 20.

Few weeks pass in any of our larger provincial towns without a visit from some famous man or other. It may be a writer like. H. G. Wells, a poet like John Masefield, a scientist of the standing of Professor Thomson, or a well known inventor, singer, or musician. They all arrive in the cavernous gloom of our grimy stations and drive unwelcomed to their hotels, or they are met on the platform by a few diffident enthusiasts who have a few minutes to spare and take this opportunity of profitably using them. And the unobtrusive manner of their arrival is characteristic of their departure. They may be fêted by their admirers in the lecture room or concert hall, but, civically, we ignore them.

To this commendable restraint there has always been one exception. Royalty is popular everywhere in Great Britain but particularly so in the provinces. Even in the dark wynds of Motherwell where they raise little Communists, it is believed that the King, Queen, and Prince of Wales would be welcomed as enthusiastically as in Conservative Birmingham. And so whenever Royalty of any degree pays us a visit the Lord Mayor dons his Sunday suit, the mace bearer invests in an extra tin of metal polish, the Chief Constable is helped on to his charger, and we put the red carpets down. We then line the pavements with the schoolchildren in front and cheer a little self-consciously, confident that the local press will describle our efforts as "deafening" in the special editions printed to commemorate the occasion. All of which is proper to the event, and in strict accordance with our ancient traditions. Royalty is almost invariably cheered while alive and forgotten when dead. Famous men are usually ignored when alive and lionised when dead. The justice of this is obvious although some disgruntled geniuses have been known to demand the cake and the ha'penny too.

CHIPS OF HOLLYWOOD.

This greediness compares ill with the more debonair deportment of those whom we have always delighted to honour now that they are confronted with powerful rivals from another sphere. For times are changing, and one of their later manifestations has been a willingness on the part of the public to put down the red carpets and re-gild the municipal coat of arms for a new kind of celebrity most of whom hail from the thriving township of Hollywood, California. It matters little to our native fervour whether the superstars of film-land are male or female. Rudolph Valentino is assured of as rapturous a welcome as Barbara La Marr. Another cause for our satisfaction is the pleased conviction we have that our enthusiasm is approved by the Lords of the all-speak-with-one-voice-press. It enables us to compensate them in some degree for the political set-backs we have lately given them. Not but what there have been unfortunate misunderstandings over this. There was the case of Mr. Charles Chaplin, for instance, The popular press blazed the advance trail more conspicuously for him than for any previous trans-Atlantic visitor. On his arrival the traffic was everywhere held up, and we nearly squeezed him to death in our efforts to demonstrate how warmly we loved him. And then the Argus-eyed journalists detected his deplorable predilection for "dangerous thoughts" and the press cooled off, leaving us in the air.

After Mr Chaplin there came a whole host of Hollywoodites—or should it be Hollyweeds? We welcomed them all, as America a few months ago welcomed our incomparable Welsh wizard. The handful of baggy-trousered, bespectacled high brows on the station platform was not their portion. The mayor in his chain of office, the local member of Parliament, and the fattest of our aldermen were all dusted and brought out to greet them. And if there are any ill-conditioned citizens who privately think that Nola Nazimova or Scoot Hobsan are somewhat less impressive in the flesh than in the "close-up," they are well advised to keep such subversive imaginings locked tightly in their bad hearts.

SOMETHING REALLY TOP-HOLE.

And so by slow stages we arrive at the incomparable Japanese super-star, movie genius, Mr Sessue Hayakawa. The first rumours of his proposed visit to us were believed with difficulty. Their confirmation created great excitement, for Sessue is locally regarded as one of the tragic Olympians of the film. And when it was reported that he was to play the principal role in a playlet at the local music hall everyone bought tickets and awaited his advent with ill-concealed impatience. We could not have been more impressed if we had heard that the Prince of Wales was going to be married in our old parish church. Everyone who has seen the preternaturally solemn countenance of Mr Hayakawa in a "close up" will realize its possibilities at first hand. For ourselves we have long harboured an elvish heresy that Sessue would be improved by having a slip or two of Chaplin grafted on him, a wayward fancy we carefully conceal from our fellow citizens who have firmly established the convention that it is the business of a tragedian to be always tragic and a comedian always comic.

When the great day dawned we early took our place among the welcoming crowds at the station. The mayor and mayoress, and the local member of Parliament were also there in their official capacities. In a pretty speech Mr Hayakawa was welcomed as an unofficial ambassador from the land of our brave little Allies. His car was then driven slowly through our principal thoroughfares so that we could all see our distinguished visitor.

OH WHAT A FALLING OFF!

As may be imagined, we were early in our seats that evening to see and hear our honoured guest in "The Knees of the God", the play in which he was billed to perform. The music hall turns preceding it seemed if anything a little more tedious than usual and when Sessue's number went up it was with ill-concealed impatience that the audience endured the films of Sessue alighting from the train, Sessue shaking hands with the mayor, and Sessue being interviewed by the reporters. But the great moment came at last, and then,—alas for our roseate dreams. Sessue may be a superstar in film-land but the only star that evening was the ancient author of the wise old saw "A cobbler should stick to his last." As an actor on the legitimate stage Mr. Hayakawa's terrestial magnitude is about the size of a snow ball.

It was true that the wretched play would have taxed the powers of a Martin Harvey. Its only apparent connexion with the "knees of the Gods" was their suitability as a whipping place for Sessue in tackling something so obviously beyond him. He appeared in the rôle of a Europeanized Japanese who had been brought up in childhood with an English girl who called him "little brother." Little Mary, now in her teens, is engaged to be married to a brutal Briton with a wicked past, although it was difficult to imagine how a Tooting Percy with a pronounced Cockney accent and a taste for profuse 9-carat adornments could be guilty of any greater villainy than snatching odd pennies out of the petty cash box. Nevertheless, "little brother" has documentary evidence of Percy's ineligibility for membership of the Y.M.C.A. and surprises him in a nocturnal effort to obtain them. There is a heated argument during which Percy's fiancée arrives on a visit to "little brother." Her attempt at peace-making provokes Percy into shooting "little brother" through the stomach. The victim, to soothe the girl's troubled heart, declares the bullet has missed him, and spends the remaining 10 minutes of his life in the joint occupation of joining the lovers' hands and surreptitiously applying clean handkerchiefs to his abdominal perforations. The lovers gone, he concentrates his energies on the laborious business of dying theatrically, and the curtain falls.

LITTLE BROTHER.

Having no wish to minimize any of Mr. Hayakawa's achievements we willingly admit that his pronuncation of the two words "little brother" was perfect. Nor did he let us forget it. Of his brave struggle with the rest of our language the less said the better. Nor could any exception be taken to the excellent moral of the play. The contrast between his own attitude to women and the chivalrous beauty characteristic of Japanese men must have made the most, thick-skinned Lancastrian blush for shame. At the conclusion of the performance applause was fairly general but it lacked warmth. It was as nothing compared to the riotous shout of laughter which greeted the two red-nosed comedians who followed, when the fat one entering from the right greeted the thin one from the left with, "Where have you been little brother"?

Sessue was ill advised to do it. We shall never again sit spellbound in a cinema at the slow play of emotion on his impassive Oriental face, while he commits hari-kari in the cold grey dawn, or balefully lifts a Vermilion Pencil to condemn an erring concubine to a slow passage through a Berkel bacon-slicer, without a dispiriting memory of his inadequacies in the flesh. It is, however, some help to us in our efforts to preserve our waning awe at the fabled glamour of the mysterious East to think that Sessue may after all hail from the Far West, and claim California as the land of his birth.

And from now onwards our heart will go out in sympathy to those unhappy cinema owners in America who in their trade papers are frantically beseeching the super-stars to stop in Hollywood as nothing more surely deflates the movie-madness of the film "fans" than the sight of their idols in the unromantic flesh.

THE Taikoo Dockyard and Engineering Company of Hongkong has constructed a complete model of its dockyard for presentation at the forthcoming British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, London. The model shows at a glance the wide scope of the company's activities, and will undoubtedly interest and surprise visitors to the Exhibition as to the extent of the ramifications of a dockyard out East.

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

The Tropical West Progressing: Budget Comedy: Treasurer Who Expected too Little Now Piling up Huge Surpluses: Pearl Luggers Smuggling Japanese into Dominion

From Our Own Correspondent.

Melbourne, Jan. 3.

There is no lack of holidays in Australia, but there is some proof that the constant joy-making is beginning to pall upon both workers and employers. The usual year-end holidays passed off with nothing of special notice. The weather was fine, not abnormally hot, and though there were the usual batch of accidents, motoring, drowning, and so forth, there were none out of the ordinary.

In Victoria the manufacturers largely solved the difficulty of broken time and abnormal wages by closing their works and sacking all hands for about a fortnight. This of course caused much feeling, but the employers pointed out that it was less unprofitable to do this than to keep men, imbued with the holiday spirit, nominally at work at something like treble rates of pay.

In New South Wales the authorities closed down the Cockatoo dockyards, and gave the men a prolonged holiday without pay. In the past, the yards being controlled by the Commonwealth Navy Department, there was no Minister with backbone sufficiently stiff to do this. Now they are under the control of the non-political Shipping Board, which is quite independent of Parliament. The men were furious, but of course powerless. It is probable the action taken by the Board was more for the purpose of impressing upon the men that there was an independent board in control, and that in future they could not hope for political interference, than of saving a few hundred pounds.

On the New South Wales coalfields the miners took the usual holidays, but even now with the New Year actually started there are at least a dozen mines where the men have not yet returned to work. They declare that their holidays are not yet finished.

As a useful gift very welcome rains fell during the holidays in the pastoral areas of most of the States. In some parts where drought had been causing much anxiety great relief was experienced. The harvesting of the wheat crops went forward unbrokenly, the fruit-picking is being somewhat delayed by the lack of ripening weather, the sugar industry nearly reached optimistic expectations, and its outlook for the coming year has been relieved by rain. On the whole, therefore, the holidays passed over satisfactorily and the new year commences with the prospects of industrial prosperity.

JAPANESE SMUGGLED IN.

Temporary excitement was caused by the news that some eleven Japanese had been secretly landed in North Queensland from one or two pearling luggers. Most of these men have been arrested and promptly given six months' gaol, pending their deportation.

It is interesting in this connexion to know that some of the men were arrested because they could get no help from their countrymen already in Australia, these worthies being afraid of the penalties attaching to harbouring prohibition immigrants. Thus, though perhaps unintentionally, the Japanese themselves have helped to enforce the Australian law.

It is about this time every year that the talk of smuggling coloured labour into the country is heard. The pearling luggers have to come into Thursday Island on the northeast and Broome on the northwest and lay up until after the hurricane season. Twice at least when they have failed to do this in time they have been caught by cyclones and scores of luggers and hundreds of the crews sent to the bottom of the sea. The men form camps ashore, where there is much drinking, gambling and sometimes knifing, and it is not unusual to find some of the episodes translated into attempts by the Japanese to over-awe the comparatively small force of Australian officials.

But there are two main reasons why coloured labour does not enter the country, and these are because the men will starve if they do not come in at places where there is settlement, and because the settlers give them away to the authorities if they land where there is a white population. Further Queensland offers the best chance along her eastern coast, but the State insists upon Japanese registering themselves before they can be employed in the sugar industry, and the Japanese seeking work without a ticket is naturally liable to be pounced upon at any time.

TROPICAL POPULATION.

An interesting return has just been issued by the Commonwealth Statistician which shows to some extent the progress of otherwise being made in the matter of settling the Australian tropics, which comprise almost 40 per cent. of the whole of the Commonwealth. Figures of the last five censuses show that in the Northern Territory the population has remained unimportant and stationary; in Western Australia during the past 30 years the population in the tropical portion, asserted by some meteorologists to be the worst country in the world for white men, has slowly increased, being now 5,691, exclusive of aboriginals. This, however, is the figure of the 1921 census. Since then there has been a strong movement towards increased settlement, a regular aeroplane service established with Geraldton, north of Perth, and further service on the verge of being started between Derby and Wyndham. There is little question that the populating of that portion of tropical Australia will now go forward space.

The chief progress has, of course, been made in Queensland where the population north of the Tropic of Capricorn has risen in the 10 years 1911-21 from 157,112 to 181,397, despite the disturbing influences of the war. The quality of the people is best shown by the fact that of these 172,723 are of European blood, and of these Europeans 168,811 are either Australian or British-born.

The total coloured or half-caste population in the whole of tropical Australia only amounts to 12,224. Of these 1,683 are half-caste aboriginals, and nearly 2,000 Japanese employed chiefly in the pearling fleets. There still remain some 1,474 Polynesians in the country.

The Chinese, numbering 3,750, are the most numerous of the coloured nationalities. It is probable that the greater number of these date from before Federation, and from the days when many thousand were brought by South Australia to the Northern Territory for the purposes of railway construction.

It may be argued that the progress is slow but it is certainly sure, seeing that the newcomers in North Queensland are mostly connected with the sugar industry, while at the same time there has been much decadence in regard to mining. Had the latter industry thriven as a few years ago the increase of the population would have been far more striking.

While upon this matter it may be mentioned that the vital statistics show that in the four registration divisions of Queensland, entirely within the tropics, the infantile mortality is the lowest, the female death-rate the lowest, and the male death-rate only very slightly higher than the average for all Australia.

It seems now that the Northern Territory is no longer to be the Cinderella of Australia. It is true that the great meatworks, erected by Vestey Bros. at Darwin, costing nearly £1,000,000, are still idle. There has been a continuous and unremitting effort to show that the idleness of the works is due to the stupidity of the workers, who certainly played at Sovietism with most disquieting effects. But there are other causes, and ones which seem to show that the proprietors are merely holding work up in their own interests until the beef market, in which Argentina is playing a desperate game, becomes something more worth while. Vestey Bros. want better harbour accommodation, and at one time they were asking the Commonwealth to guarantee them a supply of coal, because the coalminers of New South Wales had at one time left them without fuel. The works will probably reopen in due course.

But the Commonwealth Government is trying other measures to attract a population to the Territory. Farms of reasonable size have been granted along the Katherine river, which flows westerly from about 200 miles south of Darwin. More important than this is the project of a large cotton venture on the Roper river, a stream which rises about where the Katherine does but flows easterly into the Gulf of Carpentaria. The proposed company is to be allowed some 60 square miles of country along the river, which is navigable for a fair sized vessel for some 100 miles or more from the mouth. The latter is only about 100 miles north of the McArthur river, where it is proposed to establish a port among the Sir Edward Pellew Islands. The land on the Roper will be given rent free for 21 years, but the lessors will be expected to plant a certain area with crops, and facilities will be given to sub-let the land in farms to settlers. Though nothing can be done until Parliament meets the Minister for Home and Territories has announced his intention of creating a permanent commission to administer the Territory, and it is clearly intended to take the place of Melbourne in the matter of control, lasting until the time comes when the people will be able to manage their own affairs. Its powers will, however, be executive and advisory, and not legislative.

FINANCIAL SURPRISES.

Even his warmest friends can no longer accuse the Commonwealth Treasurer of knowing much about national finance. Last July he boastfully produced his Budget, and Estimates of revenue and expenditure for the coming year. He was urged further to reduce taxation, and make greater concessions to the old age pensioners in view of the abundance of his Treasury surpluses and the continued high cost of living. He refused, and when some of the ministerialists were disposed to back the last request actually threatened a political crisis which might prevent the Prime Minister attending the Imperial Conference. He declared that the surplus of £7,500,000 in hand must be reserved partly for defence, partly for the redemption of gratuity bonds and partly to balance any possible losses incurred by his proposals in regard to taxation. He also expected the Customs and Excise revenue to be less by £3,000,000 and the Post Office receipts by £100,000. Six months have passed, and so far his customs and excise receipts have in that period wiped out the whole of his estimated deficit, leaving him with a prospect of £3,000,000 more instead of less than last year. His postal receipts already show an increase of £87,000, instead of the proportional loss of £50,000. No hint is given as to how the expenditure is going, but seeing that nothing but bare necessaries are being bought for defence, and none of the £2,500,000 nest egg has been touched, there seems quite a possibility that at the end of next June there will be an accumulated surplus of £12,000,000, or about £2 per head of the population. It is a large sum for any government to play with.

LABOUR SHOALS AHEAD.

Labour professes itself quite assured of getting back into power in Australia upon the next appeal to the country, which in the ordinary course of things would take place in 1926, but it is still desperately fighting in its own ranks.

Probably the most important quarrel just now is that in New South Wales, where the Australian Workers' Union, quite the most powerful Union in Australia, threatens to break away. The whole matter arises out of the decision of the A.L.P. (Australian Labour party) executive in that State to expel the President of the A.W.U. from the ranks of Labour in consequence of his being proved guilty of malpractices with ballot-boxes used within the movement. On the other hand the A.W.U. declares that it considers its chief official innocent and demands publication of the whole of the evidence. The A.L.P. executive agree to this provided it is all published, and not specially bowdlerized editions of it. Or the said executive is willing to have a public trial, provided that it can be made a legal one, the tribunal to have the right to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents, and so on and so forth.

The matter has been in abeyance during the holidays, but will probably be soon taken up again. It certainly does not make for the comfort of the 750,000 members of the party, nor for their harmonious working, and there seems a growing tendency for the members of the craft unions to settle their quarrels with the employers, rather than rely upon the aid of the enormous political machine they have created.

The Industrial Christian Fellowship, which has gained such a hold in Britain, has made a start in this country, and its activities are bound to create more friction. As usual the Labour leaders harp upon the string that the movement is one of poor people, and must depend upon the pennies of the masses, to help against the thousands which capital pours into the ministerial coffers.

A circular letter recently stated that the A.L.P. in Sydney was always hard up, and just now is more so than usual. It invited Federal Labour members to make a levy on their own parliamentary salaries and contribute. The secretary of the Parliamentarians—doubtless with his tongue in his cheek—advises that it would be better to rely upon voluntary subscriptions than upon a levy.

Mr. E. J. Holloway, Secretary of the Melbourne Trades Hall, has returned from attending the International Labour Congress at Genoa. When he left he promised to examine the labour question in most European countries including Russia, and in America. However he has hurriedly returned, saying his health would not stand the strain, and declines to say anything until he has reported to the Federal Government which appointed him.

BUSES v. TRAMS.

Many citizens of Melbourne are just now holding their sides with mirth at the controversy which is going on concerning privately-owned motor 'buses, which are competing very effectively with the tramways and suburban railways, both of which are owned by the State.

Sydney has been through the reform, and now the 'buses are there in large numbers and the State tramways must adjust themselves to public requirements, or go out of business. Happily for the reputation of the Harbour City it was not proposed to block this form of vehicular traffic in the interests of the State-owned services.

In Melbourne, which is only just now awakening to the fact the people prefer the 'buses, which stop anywhere and pick up anywhere, and pull in close to the pavements, to the rigid tramway service in the middle of the streets with its attendant risks to passengers, the Government actually introduced a Bill, the simple purpose of which was to drive the 'buses off the streets by excessive taxation, but the measure was not passed when Parliament rose.

The Tramway Trust complains that the 'buses cut up the streets, while the Tramway Employees are solemnly saying that the 'buses should not be allowed to compete with the trams and deprive them of revenue, otherwise the employees on the trams may find their employment curtailed or their wages reduced. The Government frankly says that it does not want the 'buses because they cut into the tramway and railway revenues.

One leading newspaper, which spends its days looking for cases of government failure and private enterprise success, argues that the Trust should start 'buses of its own, and then consideration might be given to the matter of driving private enterprise off the streets. Meanwhile the 'buses are thriving and increasing in numbers, and variety of services, the latest being the initiation of all night services. The tramways knock off about midnight, so that only the hirers of taxis or owners of motors can indulge in a night at the theatre, and supper afterwards, without the risk of having to walk a few miles to their suburban homes.

SHIPPING COMBINE'S DISCOMFITURE.

As a set-off to the foregoing paragraph about the Melbourne tramways and 'buses, Queensland is giving us the opposite picture. There for a long time past the shipping combine which, protected by the Navigation Act, controls the coastal shipping. The combine has been charging outrageously for carrying passengers between Brisbane and Townsville and intermediate ports. A short time ago the last link between Mackay and Townsville was completed, and trains were able to run right along the coastal line from Brisbane to Townsville. The Government announced its charges, which after making due allowances for food on the trains, sleeping accommodation, etc., enabled a passenger to make the return journey between Townsville and Brisbane at a saving of £6 in actual money and two days in time. The shipping companies appear to have held out for two or three weeks, but they have now announced a reduction in fares, bringing themselves on to figures which will compete with the railway. But the competition will not cease at that. There must clearly be room for cheaper carriage of goods by the trains than by the steamers as at present.

MALTESE IMMIGRANTS.

When Australians read the stories of the United States Immigration authorities and the horrors of Ellis Island they are prone to flatter themselves that such happenings would be impossible in Australia. They have quite forgotten the famous six hatters, and the drowning seamen who were promptly locked up as prohibited immigrants. They are just being reminded of one of the most unpleasant episodes which occurred in 1916.

There arrived in Sydney a steamer upon which were some 200 Maltese. As the first conscription campaign was on just then Labour seized upon this fact to preach the story that the purpose of conscription was to get all the white workers out of the country, and substitute coloured, and, pointing to the Maltese, there was the first batch. Mr. Hughes, then Prime Minister, prevented the Maltese landing, and probably the men were sent home again. Later an arrangement was made by which the number of Maltese allowed to leave for Australia was limited to 260 a year. Now we hear that a new understanding has been reached, removing all restrictions, except a proviso that the people must be able to talk English. The whole civil population of Malta is less than 250,000. The people are mostly southern Europeans, Roman Catholic in religion, and they are British subjects. In 1917 at least one State Governor, Sir Gerald Strickland, was a Maltese and to-day is known as Count Della Catena, and is a member of the Maltese parliament. No, we cannot always throw stones without damaging our own glass house.

WE are informed by the Coast Inspector that wireless messages dated 16th instant have been received from Captain Rowe of the str. Takada, reporting that that vessel sighted a waterlogged derelict fishing sampan, with mast and sail attached, in Latitude 37°38'' N. and Longitude 121°35'' E., and a derelict junk, bottom up, in Latitude 27°58½'' N. and Longitude 121°50'' E., both of which are dangerous to navigators.

THE OLD AGE PENSION ACT IN BRITAIN

Agitation for its Extension: How British Subjects Abroad Stond: Boon to the Aged

From Our Labour Correspondent.

Manchester, Dec. 3.

The recent political changes in Great Britain have encouraged those people who advocate an extension of the Old Age Pension Act to think that success is now in sight. As this matter is one that might be of considerable interest to those British subjects abroad who ultimately intend to return Home a short article on the subject might be of some interest to them.

At present every man and woman in the United Kingdom over 70 years of age, and with an income from all other sources not exceeding £26 per annum, is entitled to an Old Age Pension of 10/- per week; subject to the fulfilment of certain important residential qualifications. These are that the recipient, if a natural born British subject, must have resided in the United Kingdom for an aggregate period of not less than 12 years since attaining the age of 50 years; and if not a natural born British subject for an aggregate period of 20 years. From this it will be seen that the British subject abroad must return Home at 58 years of age if he is to be eligible for the pension at 70, and the fortune he has won in exile must not bring in more than 10/- per week if he is to receive the maximum amount. For man and wife the joint Old Age Pension is, of course, £1 per week

The agitation for an extension of the Old Age Pension Act has concentrated first on the clauses that limit its payment in proportion to the private income of the pensioner. It is justifiably argued that these penalize thrift, and discourage ex-employers who are willing to grant coals, money, and additional pensions to their old employees. They also penalize dutiful sons and daughters who help in any way their aged parents, and those people who buy their houses through Building Societies, or endeavour to make some small provision for their old age by paying weekly contributions into Friendly Society and trade union superannuation schemes.

MAJORITY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

The Majority Report of the Government Departmental Committee on Old Age Pensions recommended that the means limit should be abolished and that the pension should be paid to all citizens over 70 years of age. It was pointed out that the pensions cannot be compared to any form of Poor Law Relief but are granted as a reasonable provision for old age in recognition of long service. As, in many cases, the alternative would be the workhouse it is pertinent to note that the average cost of an indoor pauper in the United Kingdom is £1. 15. 6½d per week, so the State saves more than 25/- on every person whom the pension keeps out of the workhouse. The net weekly cost of every criminal in penal servitude is £2. 9s. 7d. It is now fairly certain that in the near future the 10/- per week will be paid to every person over 70 who fulfils the residential qualifications, no matter what his, or her, private means may be.

Labour proposals for the extension of the Old Age Pension Act include an increase in the pension and the reduction of the age limit to 65. Now Labour is on the threshold of power less is heard of these expensive additions to the Act from Labour leaders and Members of Parliament. The rank and file, however, have not forgotten them, and if Labour has a long spell in office they will expect something done on these lines. During the General Election most of the candidates of the older political parties gave evasive replies to demands for support to these extensions. There have been no proposals for a reduction in the residential qualifications, and these are likely to remain at their present figure.

For every shilling of private income a pensioner has over 10/- per week a corresponding shilling is deducted from his pension. Of the 1,029,367 persons drawing old age pensions in 1922, 70,000 were suffering reductions for this cause. It is curious to note that these pensioners comprised 366,255 men and 663,112 women. The net cost of their pensions for 1922 was £26,009,500. It is estimated that the cost of paying the Old Age Pension to all persons over 70 who are exempt from payment of the Income Tax would be £38,000,000; and the cost of Universal Pensions, £41,000,000. There are at present 64,000 persons over 70 years of age in receipt of Poor Law Relief, 43,000 of whom are in the workhouse. The cost of administering the Old Age Pensions Act is just over a million pounds per annum.

AN INEXPRESSIBLE BOON.

Although the Pension is so small it is difficult to exaggerate what an inexpressible boon it is to most of the recipients. It is true that in urban areas it is difficult for an aged couple to maintain a decent life on the joint income of £1 per week if any considerable proportion of that sum is expended in rent. But there are few old people who do not get some additional assistance from somewhere. They may earn a shilling or two, or receive some little assistance from their children or other relations, or they may receive superannuation from a trade union. Most of the older trade unions have generous superannuation schemes on which the older members can retire when unable to work any more. In the smaller towns and rural areas where rents are very low and it is possible to cultivate a small garden and keep a few fowls, a frugal old couple can just manage on the weekly £1. And where in the old days there used to be bad feeling among the undutiful children of old parents as to who should give them shelter there is now no little competition to get paying guests who can be boarded at a profit, and who are usually able to render many little services that would otherwise have to be paid for.

MASKED BALLS

Successful Tricks in Preserving Incognito

Organizing a 1,000-guest dance, when the dancers are drawn from one world—of the theatre, of art, of Society—is comparatively simple. But when the guests run into 3,000 or 4,000 and anyone may come who cares to pay two or three guineas for a ticket, the undertaking bristles with difficulties.

Expenses may run into £5,000. Everything depends on the chance sale of tickets. It is hard to satisfy everyone in the huge crowd, and harder still to keep people amused from 10 to three.

The fun flags in the vast hall, where few people know one another, and surprise spectacles, midnight punch-bowls, carnival toys, fail to stimulate.

So smaller dances are the order of the night; and as the eternal foxtrot and waltz tend to make too many "straight dances" monotonous, masked fancy dress balls, small and intimate, are having a great and growing vogue.

The peculiar charm of the bal masqué is three-fold; fancy dress is romantic or amusing, masks are intriguing, and then there is the dancing. But half the fun lies in an impenetrable disguise.

At one party in the United States last year the hostess devised a plan for separating husbands and wives, fiances and fiancées, and members of the same house party. The guests scattered to different houses to dress, and the secret of each costume was carefully kept by its owner.

Some people go to extraordinary lengths to achieve a successful incognito. Men and women with easily recognizable hair often wear wigs. Brushing or dressing the hair in an unfamiliar way is another method of preventing recognition. Costumes are padded cunningly to hide noticeable physical characteristics, a neat little imperial disguises a distinctive chin, a beauty spot or expert use of lip-stick alters the appearance of a well-known mouth.

Unfamiliar rings, or bangles, or a borrowed wrist watch, or unusual perfume often deceive a husband as to his wife's identity.

MIXED TYPES AT BROADMOOR

By H. L. Adam

Some recent cases have led to strong criticism of our methods of dealing with prisoners declared to be insane. Quite unfairly some of this criticism has passed over to the Criminal Lunatic Asylum at Broadmoor. I say unfairly because a recent visit has convinced me that the efficiency and humanity with which the institution is conducted are up to an astonishingly high level. The striking varieties of the cases with which the staff has to deal, and with which the public ought to be acquainted were impressed on my mind during a recent visit.

Passing along one of the corridors, I was attracted by the figure of a tall young fellow, whom I was sure I recognized as one of the most discussed cases recently sent to Broadmoor. I naturally became interested in him, and watched him closely as he chatted volubly and pleasantly to an attendant. He was dressed in a fancy woollen vest, light cord trousers, and wore a limp collar, fastened in the front with a safety pin. He had been employed in painting (the whole interior of the place is being repainted), and there were splashes of paint upon his vest. His eyes—large brown eyes—impressed me most, for they were the eyes of a man who had not a care in the world, whose past was unsullied, whose future was bright and promising. Very remarkable, I thought it, and still think it. To the criminologist there is no end to the riddles of the human mind.

The patients usually dine in association in the several blocks at Broadmoor, but on the occasion of my visit there was one notable absentee. He was instead seated in his cubicle living alone, a tall and stately individual. He has a "batman" to attend him. I saw him again later on. I was leaving the building when I saw a detachment of the male inmates moving slowly along the private Broadmoor road, on their way to the farm. What a crowd it was! of all kinds and conditions of men. It moved with a gliding motion, outflanked by uniformed attendants. In the middle of it, towering above it and dominating it, was a lofty, upright figure, almost enveloped in a capacious, black military cloak, striding along in rhythmic, military precision. He is working on the farm. He held his head aloft and himself aloof; he was with his companions, but not of them. Like many others in this grim house of shadows, he was self-absorbed, facing an inscrutable destiny.

Undoubtedly the most painful part of Broadmoor, both on the male and the female side, are the refractory wards, wherein the worst cases are housed. I saw there a red-headed, pale-faced, saturnine-looking youth, apparently oblivious of his surroundings. This was the "juvenile adult" who so cruelly murdered that poor old warder at Borstal with a brush, in an effort to escape.

In another room, seated at a table with a newspaper spread out before him, was a man with a big, heavy-looking face and a spacious, bald head. He was the mad actor who murdered William Terriss many years ago. Strangely enough, I thought I could detect in his voice a note or two of the voice of Irving, as though he were mimicking him.

These are but a few of the many strange and perplexing problems which beset the authorities at Broadmoor. The public that does not know of the difficulties of dealing with men and women of such different types may criticize, but those who know realize the admirable way in which the staff, from the highest to the lowest, conduct one of the most difficult duties in the State.

NEW YEAR POEMS

Translations of Some of the Lyrical Compositions

Each New Year the Emperor of Japan holds a poetry contest, every subject in the Empire being entitled to submit a poem. Japanese poetry differs greatly from that of Europe, consisting more of suggestive allusions than of definitely expressed ideas. All of the poems submitted at the contest are tanka, or a classical form of 31 syllables. We print below a literal translation of some of this year's poems. No attempt has been made to give them poetic form in the English language.

BY THE EMPRESS.

When the dawn of a New Year comes
I pledge myself to follow the teachings of old.

BY THE PRINCE REGENT.

At the advent of each happy New Year
My care for my people's wellbeing grows ever greater.

BY PRINCESS TSUNEKO KIKUMARU.

Overhead arches the bright blue vault;
Beneath comes the happy New Year riding on the Horse of Time.
Great is the delight of the people.

BY PRINCESS TOMOKO KUNI.

Underneath the spreading arms of a pine tree
In the garden of the Palace
A couple of young cranes
Raise a permanent chorus of joy.

BY PRINCESS ITOKO YAMASHINA.

On the eve of the restoration of the capital
To its former state of prosperity,
A happy New Year has come round
To our joy and delight.

BY PRINCE TAKA.

In contemplation at the dawn of a happy New Year
There spreads before us in splendour and glory a prosperous reign.

BY PRINCESS MASAKO TSUNEHISA.

In order to bid welcome to the New Year,
People should turn their minds to the good and beautiful.

BY PRINCESS TOSHIKO.

I see a smile on the face of the bright New Year coming this way.

BY PRINCESS MASAKO YI.

A happy New Year having come round to the capital,
Blossoming spring is now being eagerly awaited.

BY COUNT HIRATA.

The dark clouds that gather around Mount Fuji.

BY VISCOUNT MAKINO.

At the dawn of a happy New Year
My heart swells within me for congratulation.

BY MORIMASA TAKEI.

At the recurrence of a happy New Year
I am resolute, though advanced in life,
To give the best that I have for the cause of the State.

BY COUNT OHARA.

The first prayers offered on the morn
Of a happy New Year
Are for the restoration of sound health
To the person of the Emperor.

BY A SHINTO PRIEST.

On the dawn of a Happy New Year,
That comes in place of the Old One,
Burdened with evils,
The blessings of Heaven are my prayer.

A VOLCANO BLOWS OUT

Awe-Inspiring Upheaval in Alaska

Steamship Latouche, viâ St. Paul Island, Jan. 7.

With a roar which shook the Alaska peninsula for hundreds of miles and brought terror to the inhabitants of the little villages far out to the westward, from Seward, Alaska, the southern edge of Pavlof volcano was blown off by a gigantic subterrancan disturbance this morning.

Dense steam and smoke were still observed above the volcano late this afternoon. The eruption was followed by a sharp earthquake lasting seven minutes. Inhabitants of Belkofsky on the Alaskan peninsula, ten miles south, fled from their homes but returned later when the volcano became less threatening.

Pavlof volcano is 120 miles due east of Dutch Harbour and 30 miles west of Unga, western Alsaka. This volcano exploded last fall. It has the reputation of being one of the most violent volcanoes in the world.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

OUR PARIS LETTERS

Acquittal Verdict in Anarchist Girl's Trial: No Sentimentality this Time

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Dec. 28.

The trial of Germaine Berton, the young anarchist, for the murder of M. Marius Plateau, the Royalist organizer, was so full of politics that it naturally produced a political verdict.

The jury returned a negative answer to all the questions put to them, and the girl was acquitted. The jury may of course have been impressed by the argument that Germaine Berton's loveless youth and the bitterness engendered by being knocked about from pillar to post constituted some excuse, but it is far more likely that the 12 Paris citizens made up their minds to give the Royalists a lesson.

In the course of the trial a good deal was heard about the vigorous methods of the camelots du roi, as the militant royalists are called. One witness described their organ the "Action Francaise," as the only newspaper in the world that you read with a stout stick in your hand, by which he meant that those who go in actively for ward politics and do not espouse the Royalist cause may look out for trouble.

Nobody denies that Marius Plateau was a gallant soldier, but he was also a moving spirit in an Opposition faction that shows great readiness to stir up trouble whenever an opportunity offers, and he could hardly be expected to excite the sympathies of a Paris jury, especially after the excessive zeal with which his friends pressed the case against Germaine Berton.

As to the justice of the verdict, that is another matter. M. Binet-Valmer, a leading Royalist, sums up the situation as follows: "Mme. Caillaux killed Gaston Calmette and was acquitted. Vaillant killed Jaures and was acquitted. Germaine Berton killed Marius Plateau and was acquitted. Killing is therefore allowable. We make a note of this system, of which we do not propose to be the helpless victims."

DIXMUDE DISASTER.

The disappearance of the great airship Dixmude is one of the most dramatic and tragic events that have occurred since the war. The Dixmude, formerly the L72, one of the Zeppelins surrendered by Germany to France—left her shed at Cuers-Pierrefeu, near Toulon, early in the morning of Tuesday, December 18, for a training cruise southward across the Mediterranean to the confines of the Sahara Desert and back again. The cruise was to last only three days. In addition to her ordinary crew, she carried several staff officers: 50 persons in all.

On the Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday she was in communication with the land stations by wireless, but in consequence of the strong northwesterly gale which had sprung up, she was told not to attempt to return to France. This was the first intimation of trouble. An airship that cannot return to its base is doomed, unless there happens to be another suitable base within reach, and this was not the case in the present instance, the only airship shed in Northern Africa, near Algiers, being too small to admit the Dixmude. After the Friday morning no message of any kind was received from the airship. Vague reports came from people who thought they saw her searchlights. The gale continued for a whole week, long before which time it was certain that the Dixmude must have exhausted her petrol supplies and was either drifting about helplessly or had come down.

There was no means of knowing whether she had been driven out to sea or to the sandy wastes of the interior. Yesterday the Ministry of Marine expressed the view that as the airship was not seen over Tunisia, it was much more likely that she had come down in the desert than in the sea. This opinion is supported by a report received last night from Ain Salah, the most southerly point on the route laid down for the Dixmude to follow. According to this report, the airship was seen by natives at 8 a.m. on the 26th, about 120 miles south of Ain Salar, drifting towards the Hoggar mountains in the Sahara desert. It is impossible to say from this report whether the Dixmude still carried her cars or whether the object seen floating across the sky was merely the gas bag. There is still a chance that the passengers and crew got away from the ill-fated vessel and are now in some part of the great desert, perhaps starving. Camel patrols and aeroplanes are searching such portions of the desert as are accessible, but even an airship, big as it is, can be lost quite easily in the immense tracts of the Sahara. The whole country is waiting with bated breath for the denouement of the tragedy.

STRUGGLING AGAINST HEAD-WINDS.

When the Dixmude started on the morning of the 18th, the weather was perfectly fine, and an anti-cyclone prevailed over Algeria. On the following day a depression, extending south and west, was reported from Poland, and the Algiers weather bureau announced a change, with rain and northwesterly gales. This forecast was correct, and the unlucky Dixmude, which had started under the most favourable conditions, found herself struggling against head winds. She might perhaps have escaped by going northwest to Colomb Bechar, which was outside the disturbed area, and an attempt was made to convey this information to her by wireless, but apparently she did not receive the message, and, turning northeast from Ain Salar, she got into the track of the storm again.

The National Weather Bureau in Paris says that it saw the storm coming from the north and, if consulted, would have advised the Dixmude to postpone her journey. When great air currents flow from the west, they are seldom known long enough in advance, owing to the lack of properly equipped observation stations in western Spain and on the west coast of Africa; but, when a cyclone travels from north to south, it can be watched from its origin to a considerable distance inside the African continent, and can be predicted days in advance. Possibly the officer responsible for starting the Dixmude on her cruise was so satisfied with the settled appearance of the weather in the south of France and Algeria that he did not think it necessary to solicit the wider purview of the National Weather Bureau in Paris. Two years ago a smaller airship, the A T 16, was very nearly lost through a storm in the Channel which the Weather Bureau had announced the day before. The public would naturally like to know why the meteorological services, which are kept up at the expense of the community, are not utilized to the fullest extent before an airship is sent out on a long journey.

Jan. 4.

The joys of welcoming the New Year are far from being undiluted. Even if you are a lonely exile you will find that you have an unsuspected circle of "friends" when these festive days come round. They bring you wishes for a bonne annee which, according to custom, you will pay for, meekly and without protest; and when you have crossed their palm with imitation gilt coins or greasy batik notes they pass out of your life for another year. There is the postman, two of him; one for letters and the other for printed matter; the telegraph boy, though you may receive no telegrams, the young person who brings your morning paper; the man who says he sweeps your street and the chiffonnier who make a living by sorting the contents of your garbage box; the gas man, the electric light man and the water man.

Just as you are trying to conjure up a philosophic smile, there is another ring at the bell, and, wondering how much it will cost you, you open the door. It is a postman. 'What, again? You've been here already" you growl. 'No, I'm not that one," he explains. 'I'm the one who clears the box where you post your letters." In addition to all this you have the most important personage of the lot—your concierge, who can influence your life for good or evil according to the view she may take of your New Year offering. Much experience is needed to hit on just the right amount: enough to meet her expectations and avoid future action based on the principle that a fool and his money are soon parted.

PRISON NUN'S DEVOTION.

Sister Léonide, a nun who, in the course of many years' service at St. Lazare Prison, has been brought into contact with many notorious female criminals, has been given the cross of the Legion of Honour, on her retirement, in recognition of her long and unselfish devotion to duty. The first celebrity who came under her care was Gabrielle Bompard, who helped her lover, Marius Eyraud, to kill an attorney named Gouffé and pack his body in a trunk. Eyraud was guillotined, but the woman's death sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life. She was eventually released, and died a few years ago.

Sister Léonide also had to look after the celebrated Thérèse Humbert, that remarkably persuasive person who invented the story of the Crawford inheritance and fooled her dupes for years with a big safe containing nothing; Mme. Caillaux, who shot M. Gaston Calmette, editor of the "Figaro," and was acquitted just before the war broke out; Mata Hiri the dancer and spy, whom she accompanied on the journey to the execution ground at Vincennes; Mme. Bessarabo, who murdered her husband and sent his body in a trunk to Nancy; and finally Germaine Berton, who was acquitted the other day of murdering M. Marius Plateau, the Royalist organizer. Sister Léonide is now 72.

ONCE VICTORIOUS TWICE SHY.

Grock, the musical clown and international fun-maker, has knocked out Battling Siki in the first round. This would make a fine boxing sensation if it were true without qualification; but it happened in 1912, when the Senegalese boxer gave up dish-washing to fight his way towards notoriety and big purses.

It seems that Grock was appearing at the Folies Bergère at the time, and he and a few friends, including Adrien Hogan, Siki and Maurice Chevauier, the French comedian, who is a fine amateur boxer, used to meet regularly for practice with the gloves. Siki, though strong as a bull, was inexperienced, and he soon succumbed to Grock, who has been an enthusiast in boxing and other sports since his early youth and never misses a big fight. It was suggested to him the other day that he might like to try his hand with Siki again. "No, thank you" was his reply; "I'm quite satisfied with one victory."

THE DIXMUDE—LATEST THEORIES.

The discovery of the dead body of the Dixmude's commander, floating in the sea off the south coast of Sicily, was the first clue to the fate of the unlucky airship. Of the fabric itself, nothing has been found except an aluminium tank, damaged by fire, and a few scraps of silk. There is now very little doubt that the Dixmude was caught in an eddy of the gale, swept northwards at great speed, and struck by lightning while between the coasts of Tunis and Sicily. She must have caught fire and fallen into the heaving sea, so that there was not the slightest chance of escape for anyone in the gondolas. Perhaps these gallant men will not have died in vain if the lesson of the catastrophe is remembered.

The Dixmude was asked to do too much. An airship cannot be expected to make a voyage of three days unless one can be sure of three days' fine weather, or unless there is some place of refuge available. The Dixmude was sent across the Mediterranean with the knowledge that there was no shed big enough to shelter her in case she was prevented from returning. She might have been directed to a quiet atmospheric area, but, assuming that the information was sent to her, she either did not receive it, owing to the breakdown of her wireless apparatus, or her petrol supplies had fallen so low that she could not make the place indicated. After this disastrous experience, it is to be hoped that the naval and military authorities, and also the public, will realize the limitations of the airship.

BUILT TO BOMBARD ENGLAND.

The newspapers publish a statement attributed to Capt. du Plessis de Grenédan, commander of the ill-fated airship, made shortly after he went to Germany three years ago to take over the Dixmude, then the L 72. Discussing the question of the probable usefulness of the airship to France, he said: "There is no need to make elaborate calculations. She will only do that for which she was designed. On paper, she can make a journey of 1,000 miles at the rate of 35 miles an hour. She can be depicted as flying to America with a large number of passengers and of cruising in distant seas, but in reality she can do nothing of the kind, because she was never meant for such duties. She was designed about three years ago for special war purposes which might not occur again. She was designed to fly at a great height and bombard places in England. She was to start in the middle of the afternoon, pass over the enemy's coast in the darkness, and, after the bombardment was over, to return to her base, flying at an altitude of about 20,000 ft. In other words she was built for a journey of not more than 20 hours." He added general criticisms to the effect that the airship was undoubtedly fragile and unable to withstand any great strain.

AGONY "ADS."

The Vogue of the Personal Column: For Star-crossed Lovers and Self-seekers

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Jan. 10.

The agony ad. is growing in popularity because it is carefully cultivated. Every self-respecting paper has an agony ad-writer. He also presides at the counter where they take them in and when the supply is short or the quality low he contributes a few himself, just to show the amateur "how it should be done".

The ads. even existed to some extent in the war and thereby hangs a well known tale, since I can guarantee its accuracy. This medium of communication was undoubtedly used by German spies initially and so every ad was watched and doubtless they helped our Government quite as much as our enemies. But some people were not satisfied. One famous cipher writer was convinced that a series daily appearing were the work of treacherous minds—in fact he worked out their purport himself and the Admiralty made inquiries. They found that the ad. chiefly complained of—in the alleged translation it purported to give the news of a pending British attack on Zeebrugge—was a dummy ad. written by the office expert. The amazing part of the whole matter was that the translation was so far right in that the attack was pending. So the authorities sent for the writer and were proceeding to take the gravest view of the matter because they knew nothing about the "dummy ad." system when one member of the Commission of Inquiry, the late Mr. Kennedy Jones, M.P., who was a journalist himself, laughed the whole thing out of court. He said to his fellow members "Let me write a dummy ad. and ask the cipher expert what it means. Then you'll soon get some idea of what is happening." So he wrote a dummy ad. of "Meet me in the Park" type and signed it "Johnny." The next day the cipher expert turned up with a complete translation of this effort showing that it conveyed information to the enemy of the most important nature. The Commission told the enthusiast to go home and take some cooling medicine and not to come worrying round again.

Nowadays there are three types of dummy ads. There is the personal ad. of undoubted genuineness—I take "The Times" of this week—of the "Write me, I have much to tell type." Then there is the dummy ad. of the paper a little too ornate to be guaranteed authentic—"Will the lady who dropped her musk-scented handkerchief in the tube station at Leicester Square communicate with Box R2345. (This of course is a type only, but not an unfair one) Then finally there is the trade agony ad. of the type "C. B. had an excellent game of golf yesterday and with a mustard bath afterwards felt in the pink. A D."

All sorts of commodities are being advertised at double the rates for genuine heartoutpourings—in one issue I notice mustard, cyder, whiskey, Welsh mutton and dressmakers' shops, etc. I need only add that the man who can evolve an agony ad. out of Welsh mutton deserves all the worldly prosperity he can get.

Cipher ads. are rare. People have not the time or inclination to worry about evolving them and they know that when they do resort to this means of communication, it always sets going the armies of individuals who seem never so happy as when they have something in the cryptogram or acrostic line to unravel. Yet nobody scorns these humble means of imparting information. I notice that Lady Lugard employs it to announce to all and sundry that she is retailing vegetables while there are plenty of "titled persons" giving cheap advertisements to aged retainers whom they wish to load off on to others to avoid the noblesse oblige obligation of having to pension them off themselves.

If you are a masseuse you have to be discretion itself and allude to "doctors" references or someone may suggest you are not all you might be, as if anybody was. Only one or two London papers, including the "Daily Telegraph," admit the ads. of money lenders. Few papers will take any personal ads. offering to adopt or bring up children. You never know the snags waiting for you till you apply.

Yet they say these personal columns while being very lucrative to the papers concerned are the best read of any by the public. I believe it. The age of romance is not dead and half those who peruse this part of the paper do so to discover some element of romance which they follow from afar off with amusement and even interest—especially the series type between the jilted lover and the fickle damsel. The other half who read the columns do so from pure curiosity to see who are the crafty individuals who advertise "grand pianos for sale; owner going abroad" and to wonder when the race of Mugs will be really extinct.

MAD BULL AMONG MILL GIRLS

Four Hours' Struggle In Factory Yard

A scene reminiscent of a Spanish bull-fight took place in a mill yard at Blackburn recently, to the great alarm of a crowd of mill girls.

A runaway bull became infuriated and was chased by a number of men for half an hour. The animal then plunged into the mill yard and the gates were promptly locked.

It was the dinner hour, and as the canteen was on the other side of the yard the girls were unable to cross to get their lunch.

Meanwhile, the bull was plunging about the yard, a number of men trying to secure it with lassoes. The bull foiled all their efforts, however, and charged furiously at the men.

One man seized a pickaxe and tried to brain the animal on the spot, but he was driven to take hasty cover behind a motor lorry.

The fight went on for four hours until someone hit upon the idea of turning some cows into the yard. This was done and the bull at once cooled down and proved an easy prey. He was slaughtered on the spot.

WARSAW, Feb. 16. The Diet Foreign Affairs Commission has unanimously ratified the Polono-Japanese Trade and Navigation Treaty. Reuter.

seldom been questioned and who has had some little time in which to view China's political troubles in perspective, said after no little thought and hesitation: "By understanding." He then proceeded to explain that if the Western Governments really knew what was the matter with China and what was going forward in China all would be well. An educated foreign opinion, he thought, would guarantee China's salvation. An hour or more later one of Marshal Tuan's retainers, who has had the reputation of being one of the cleverest officials in China and one who has never been guilty of so much as an evasion in his business dealings with foreigners, said: "It is always flattering to us Chinese to find a foreigner who is genuinely interested in our political affairs; but it always makes me nervous because I have never yet met one who did not, with the best possible intentions, make a mess of things when he meddled with Chinese politics."

WHAT WE DO NOT SEE.

Such remarks sound platitudinous and are usually credited to unfathomable Chinese conceit, but they are essentially true. Neither our Home Governments, nor our people at home who are supposed to endorse Government policy, nor those of us who are supposed to convey clear impressions of conditions in China for the guidance of those at home have consistently shown a clear understanding of China's difficulties. We not only fail to convey to the Occident a clear impression of what is going on in China but we refuse to come to a clear understanding ourselves about conditions here. We refuse to admit among ourselves that, lacking some sort of check from above or below, all officialdom in China must develop into a predatory class and that in our dealings with this class if we are anything but disciplinary we cannot but foster conditions which make trade impossible and life precarious. We will not admit to one another the obvious truth that what we call Governments in one quarter of China or another are simply predatory cliques, inevitably eliminating all sense of loyalty, obligation, responsibility and everything else which makes a Government a Government; nor will we admit that the comparatively decent persons within these cliques must either descend to the general level or be eliminated. We will not recognize that the official of to-day is the rebel of to-morrow, the soldier of to-day the bandit of to-morrow and that it is therefore impossible to support what we are pleased to call to-day's order without helping to foment what we shall be pleased to regard as the next day's disorder. I help Wu Pei-fu because I like him and fondly believe that when he has beaten his way to the top he will help me to do business. You help Chang Tso-lin for the same short-sighted reason. Jones helps Sun Yat-sen, Brown flatters Chi Hsieh-yuan and Smith pats Tang Chi-yao on the back. A little later one or the other or all of these is letting his soldiers pot at our relatives, laughing at our treaties, looting our Chinese traders and doing it all with a lighter heart because of the help and "face" that we have given them. We unite to recognize whatever clique happens to make its way into Peking and deal coldly and distantly with the cliques that have failed to break into the capital with the single obvious result that the one is in a position to defy us impertinently and chatter about sovereign rights when it has broken a bargain or violated a treaty, while we are free to threaten the others with gunboats and call them bandits and outlaws.

Foreign diplomacy in China has for years been a simpering acquiescence in make-believe, querulously but timidly accompanied by dirges hummed over the wasted corpses of our treaties. We vie with one another to sing pæans to burlesque administrations with bemedalled bandits at their heads and only contrive to strike a harmony when our diplomatic pagliacci agree to sing some clown's lament about ruffled feelings.

CUT-THROAT BUSINESS.

Business in China is bad at the moment and we all feel it, but the persons who pay most calls at the Legations telling how bad it is and who write the longest screeds home about disorder in China are the merchant diplomats in Peking who in the past have promoted trade by selling their Chinese pals thousands of dollars worth of destructive playthings after advancing millions of dollars earmarked and devoted to the discomfiture of domestic and foreign commerce. Nine out of ten of these worthies are at this moment using every medium of communication to persuade the diplomats or the Home Governments that the way to bring back the "good old days" is to renew credit in Peking or Canton or some other administrative sponge so that there will be a livelier market for more destructive playthings. They want to put the likin or the octroi or the wine and tobacco collectorate under foreign control to improve Peking's credit so that Peking can buy more high explosives to turn over to provincial armies to turn over to rebels and tufei, so that the latter can with more ease and assurance blast foreign trade into the welkin. They want surtaxes imposed for a funding loan which will pay for all past shipments of murderous toys lately used upon foreigners and which will thereby revive Chinese credit and provide for the negotiation of new loans, more toys, bigger armies, fatter Tuchuns, bolder bandits, more spectacular outrages, glibber and more insulting Chinese foreign ministers, and more miserable Chinese farmers and merchants; less peace, less production and less trade.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

For nearly a generation much of the big and particularly lucrative business in China, both in finance and commerce, has been "trading with the enemy" in that it has catered more to the interests of the predatory class than to those of the productive classes. It has helped in countless cases to foster the strength, courage and independence of the governing classes upon whom rigid checks were essential and has done little to foster the strength of those who should exercise the checks.

If foreigners are now to join in any systematic search after peace in China, their first task must of necessity be that of uniting among themselves to adopt a fixed policy and then to pursue it with good will, in good faith and with rigid consistency. There is no use writing to your Foreign Office, or your Minister, or your Mission Board or your business chiefs at home to tell them that anti-foreign feeling is growing in China, that foreign prestige is on the wane and that something should be done and then to expect intelligent action, unless you are ready to give an intelligent explanation. You must explain that the Chinese attitude towards foreigners has always been and always will be purely a matter of discipline and that a liking for us and our ways has never had much of anything to do with it. The struggle for wealth, position and power among all classes of unbridled Chinese officials has broken down all discipline from the top of the old administrative machine to the bottom. At the very top it is worst of all because under the precious Republic those who are boldest and most ingenious in evading or defying discipline are the ones who reach the top. And anti-foreign feeling is growing while foreign prestige is waning because those at the very top are boldest in breaking treaties, defaulting on promises and repudiating bargains in their dealings with foreigners. The soldier in the railway train and the bandit in the mountains feels less bound to behave in a deferential way towards the Occidental barbarian, for whom he has an innate contempt, because the highest of his responsible superiors habitually flaunt their contempt for the foreigner in his face and coolly violate bargains with him, call themselves Governments and are recognized by him, wheedle money out of him, squander it and go back to him for more, shoot his ammunition at him and then get more with loans to pay for it, play those with axes to grind against one another and all the while talk louder and louder of sovereign rights and sacred privileges.

THE FATAL CIRCLE.

There is no use talking about anti-foreign feeling in China or of writing Home about it or of expecting anything either from the Chinese or our own authorities to better relations until we are ready to admit that foreign diplomatic, financial and commercial tactics of the concession-hunting, axe-grinding variety have never failed to cultivate in the Chinese mind a growing contempt for us, blossoming into open hostility in due course, culminating in violent anti-foreign demonstrations and finally in punitive wars.

The end is inevitable and heretofore the reaction has been inevitable. The difference between the present and the past is that with the stage fully set for it, with diplomacy, finance and commerce as ready as ever to carry on in the good old way right up to the day of the explosion, the conventional punitive war is not in sight. In the old days, because punitive wars were so frequent and their advent so inevitable, the foreigner in China was always in an aggressive position. Now, because the punitive war is nowhere in sight but the demand for it which we have helped so much to create, so urgent, the foreigner in China is actually on the defensive and the need for common defence measures is pressing and vital.

If we are going to re-establish a position of some strength and dignity in China and at the same time contribute towards the restoration of order or make it possible for the Chinese to re-establish discipline among themselves, the closest possible co-operation between all nationalities and all classes of foreigners is essential.

THE LACK OF COMMON ACTION.

The first step in any campaign is to recognize the enemy. The second in a modern struggle is to cut off every source of supplies which we can possibly control. We have first to understand that the unchecked, undisciplined, predatory official class in China is essentially the enemy of both the Chinese producer and the foreign merchant. We must understand that we cannot expect the Chinese people to believe in our sympathy for them or in our desire to help them until we have made a frank declaration of war upon the common enemy, until we have passed a sort of international "trading with the enemy act" to which we are prepared to hold ourselves rigidly bound. The very first step in the inauguration of a new helpful policy in China must of necessity be a real embargo upon money, arms and "face"—particularly face.

In diplomatic circles in Peking co-operation in good faith to any end seems just as much a subject for despair as intervention. There is no good reason why it should be. Intervention is blocked by big financial and military problems, by popular disapproval in many countries; and there are sentimental if not moral objections to it which would require much propaganda to override. Co-operation in China now depends entirely upon a recognition of mutual interests in China. In other parts of the world it may be profitable for this or that nation to work at cross purposes with the rest, but with China in her present condition and with the prospect of improvement so dark, there are no conflicting interests here which are so important as the mutual interests at stake. When the Legations were under actual siege in 1900 the fact that the Powers represented in Peking had many conflicting interests not only in China but all over the world was not taken seriously into consideration when the time came for planning a common defence. While there is no reason for suggesting that the Legation Quarter in Peking will ever again be subjected to similar assault, it is not an exaggeration to say that foreign rights and prerogatives, not to mention foreign persons and properties, are in as precarious a position throughout China now as the persons of the Ministers in Peking were in 1900. There is, therefore, as good reason now for all of us to appreciate that we are on the defensive, that whatever we have to squabble about in Europe or any other part of the world has no bearing upon the question of our common security; and to subordinate every other interest, real or imaginary, to the business of helping China evolve some sort of a sane, responsible and respectable government by putting every possible disciplinary check upon the predatory official classes.

THE ARMS EMBARGO USELESS.

An arms embargo we have, dating from the early spring of 1919, which is ineffectual for the sole reason that we cannot work together in good faith. It has been broken in both letter and spirit by many Powers, to the knowledge of Ministers in Peking. The document signed in 1919 certainly needs to be rewritten so that it will cover a much wider field and so that the foreign authorities in China will have more authority to make it binding and hold one another accountable for breaches.

But it is much more important that the foreign communities in China should realize clearly that every trade transaction which puts arms, money or credit at the disposal of a Chinese official is literally trading with the enemy because no possible guarantee can be given by any Chinese official that such arms, money or credits will not be used in the work of harassing the Chinese people and reducing their productive power, in the obstruction of trade and industry, or that they will not be turned against the foreigner in someone's hand. No exceptions can possibly be made with China in her present condition.

If you believe in Wu Pei-fu and sell him a hundred guns because you think he is fit to have and handle them and refuse to sell to Chang Tso-lin or Sun Yat-sen because you do not believe in them, you are establishing a precedent which gives someone else the moral right to sell arms to Chang Tso-lin or Sun Yat-sen because he does believe in them. If you sell Wu Pei-fu arms, moreover, you are putting the strongest possible pressure upon his rivals to secure similar arms by hook or by crook, at whatever the cost to the Chinese rank and file whom they exploit. Under existing conditions you cannot sell to your favourite without stimulating his rivals and you cannot sell to anyone without helping the bandits and putting fresh burdens on the people. The Manchurian Hunghutze are all armed with Chang Tso-lin's weapons. The Szechuanese still fire on foreign steamers with ammunition sold by foreigners to Chang Chin-yao in 1919 and 1920, obtained subsequently from Wang Chan-yuan in exchange for opium. Sun Mei-yao's robbers of Lincheng fame had many foreign rifles and no little imported ammunition. Lao Yang-jen was equipped and armed by Wu Pei-fu. During the past year much equipment has been sold by foreigners in Peking dealing directly with bandit agents. These truths are so patent that the Legations are bored with the recital of them and they have been reviewed at endless length in despatches to the Occident.

OUTLAW THE CULPRITS.

What is needed to make an embargo effective now is not more information nor more despatches but organized opinion in China outlawing the whole trade in every article having to do with warfare which a Chinese official might care to buy. Public opinion should put just as strict an embargo upon the sale of aeroplanes, arsenal machinery, armoured cars and such like, and upon the employment of foreign military officers, engineers, arsenal workmen and aeroplane or wireless experts, as upon the sale of big guns or little ones. Teaching a Tuchun and his men how to make war is no more a neutral act than selling him the munitions of war. Supplying him with money is much the same as giving him the guns which money will buy. These are truths which are vaguely realized by many but admitted by few. They need to be clearly realized and admitted by all of us in China if we want peace and the opinions which they engender need to be focused upon the Legations and our Home Governments through organization.

THE LATEST DEVICE IN STRIKING

The Stay-in Weapon at London Docks: The Split Among the Unions

To-day's report of the dockers' dispute indicates two features of particular interest. The first is the split in the ranks of the strikers, and the determination of the National Stevedores' and Lightermen's Union to pursue its own policy as distinct from that of the Transport Workers' Union. Interal dissension of this character is becoming a common feature of trade union disputes, and the explanation is perhaps to be found in the curious fact that while the number of trade unions has immensely increased of late years, there have been enormous decreases in the membership of individual unions. Following upon the tendency to disavow agreements entered into by their representatives, the more unruly elements in the various unions have broken away from the parent body and formed new organizations, being suspicious of their leaders, impatient of control, and filled with belligerent ideas of direct action as against the constitutional method of negotiation. The Stevedores' Union is apparently one such body of extremists led by an ultra-rebel against the authority of the principal union.

The "stay-in" strike, as the telegram reports, is a novelty in labour disputes and its precise nature can only be matter of conjecture for the moment. Judging from the speech of Mr. Ruart, reported in our telegrams, the scheme has been invented for the purpose of disorganizing the London dock service and at the same time securing wages for the virtual strikers and saving the Union from having to hand out strike pay. This being so, it clearly would be tantamount to obtaining wages by false pretence, the pretence being that of carrying on an ordinary day's work. For, as we see, Mr. Ruart openly boasts that the "stay-in" strike, the "ca' canny," "wait-and-see" workmanship, would quickly reduce the dock system to chaos, the intention obviously being to do as little as possible in the most perfunctory way. The situation of the employers is thus an extremely difficult one. Either they must submit to being "held up" in this dishonest fashion, or declare a lock-out, since a strike is sufficiently expensive without having to pay strikers for carrying on with it.

A VALENTINE

Into a little wayside shrine
I turned from off the weary street,
Awesome and dark in grove of pine,
But redolent with blossoms sweet.

A plum tree, lo! in fullest flower!
And underneath its canopy
Of drifting petals, like the bower
O'er Shinto priest in matsuri,
Behold my priestess stood!
With upturned face you stood and smiled
Through mossy blossoms at the sky,
And murmured, "When a little child,
I often dreamed, with Springtime nigh
That Heaven must be a place like this!"— (Oh, as for me, what need to climb
The magic steps, I cannot miss
Heaven here with you in blossom time!)

And then you wrote a little song
(You did not know, I lingered long)
Of lovely verse without compare,
And hung it on the branches there.

Now dare I take my song and tie
Just o'er the one that you have hung,
O'er all the rest that folk have sung,
And will you come,—and look so so high?—
Oh, if you only would!

JUSTICE, FORTITUDE, SACRIFICE

Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland on Sunday, Feb. 10, 1924, at the Unveiling of the Memorial Windows in Union Church, Shanghai.

"He shall not fail nor be discouraged until He has set Justice (E. V. Judgment) in the earth." Isaiah, Chap. 42, v. 4.

I.

Mr. Galsworthy has written a telling drama called "Justice," which he identifies with the working of penal law, and describes as "a machine that when once it is started rolls on of itself." That is not of Justice Messiah will establish on the earth, but almost its antithesis. The Justice He inspires by no means rolls on of itself. It cannot come into existence without the effort and sacrifice of men of vision and of valour. For Justice may be described as the consummation of love to our neighbour in the sharing of rights, according to the measure and power of God. This greatest of human problems is indeed a task worthy of Messiah, who "will not fail or be discouraged till He have set justice in the earth." Now we are called into partnership with God for this supreme achievement of His Spirit among children of men. And there are three chief phases in the long campaign. (1) There is the struggle for Liberty against the rule of oppression and the ways of violence. It was under the sanction of this banner that our young men went forth from Church, school and home, nearly 10 years ago. This was the thought that fired and sustained them. For this cause they suffered the toilsome march, the muddy discomfort, the bitter tension, the freezing terror, the hellish sounds and devilish scenes —that make up modern war. There "in fields of mashy mud and trampled leaves" they came to grip with the last enemy. They fell for liberty. And their examples reach far through all years.

THE MIRAGE OF PEACE.

Beyond the battlefield was the vision of Peace. But when the exhausted nations struggled through to the other side they found it was a mirage: in reality it was a new battlefield in the long campaign for justice—the fight for equality had begun. Equality among the nations, opportunity for the smaller peoples. In this field we pay our tribute to the late President Wilson, the founder of the League of Nations —that organ for International Justice which recognizes the equal weight of all nations that compose it, whatever be their size. The great President whose voice resounded so far five years ago, was twice foiled, first at Versailles and then at Washington. Then he was stricken by a disease to which a long name has been given. But the simple fact of the matter is that he died of a broken heart. And when men die for a cause they win a new life. "In the eyes of the foolish they seem to have died, but their hope is full of immortality." He lives again in the quickened conscience of mankind concerning weaker nations. And how can we forget that already Athens and Jerusalem small in size but great in genius have conquered Christendom, and in the day of Justice we shall see that the dignity of a nation consists not of material things but of things that are spiritual.

THE CLIMAX OF JUSTICE.

(3) But there is a third phase of the age-long conflict for Justice. When you have won Liberty and Equality you have still to win Fraternity. The heavenly justice is not fulfilled. With Love, with the disarming not merely of the soldier and the ship but of the politicians and the Press and the ordinary, ignorant, prejudiced crowd. There must be a riddance of bitter, vengeful, and contemptuous feelings, there must be a dethronement of that national egotism, that has no concept of its own failings and no imagination of another's point of view. The attempt to gain this higher standard is the mission of Love and the issue is Fraternity. We may indeed sit down with our successes and victory, and call ideals Utopian, but I call on every Christian to be sure that the Redeemer of the world will not be content with the denial of Equality and Fraternity; He will not fail nor be discouraged until He have set Justice in the earth.

II.

The second point to notice is that this goal cannot be reached without courage—the moral courage that belongs to the spirit of a man. We call it Fortitude, and it is more than the physical courage which mounts with the moment and dies with the mood, it can stand the wear and tear of time. It can repel not only the stings and arrows of outrageous fortune but the weary siege of adverse circumstances.

BOTTICELLI'S FORTITUDE.

The Italian artist Botticelli once designed a strange figure of Fortitude, and this is how Ruskin describes it. "Everybody else's Fortitude stands firm astride on his legs and is confidently ready for all comers. But Pottcelli's Fortitude is no match, it may be for any that are coming. Worn somewhat, and not a little weary, . . . she is sitting apparently in reverie, her fingers playing restlessly—nay I think even nervously —about the hilt of her sword. For her battle is not to begin today; nor did it begin yesterday. She is thinking about the manner of the end, and would fain let her sword if it might be, and yet how swiftly and gladly will her fingers close upon it, when the far off trumpet blows."

Is not that a picture of the kind of courage that was needed to last the war, and to outlast its failures and discouragements? In the long war for justice certainly God's men must not fail or be discouraged.

THE COURAGE THAT SERVES.

We need the grace of Fortitude that makes a man undertake hard things without fret or fuss, not because they are applauded but because they are appointed, not shirking the labour nor shifting the responsibility, ready to excuse another, but slow to excuse oneself, laying aside all airs of consequence and putting a cheerful courage on. John Milton has grand lines upon this point in Samson Agonistes where he contrasts the courage that excels with the courage that only serves.

"O how comely it is and how reviving
To the spirits of just men long oppressed.
When God into the hands of their deliverer
Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, the oppressor,
The brute and boisterous force of violent men.
But patience is more oft the exercise
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude,
Making them each his own deliverer,
And victor over all
That tyranny or fortune can inflict."

It is for us to know and believe in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, that by our fortitude in the appointed things of every day we are permitted to share the service of Him who will not fail or be discouraged until He have set justice in the earth.

III.

Our last thought must be given to a brief search for the secret of this fortitude. Why should a man submit to this discipline all the days of this warfare? Why not surrender to the prizes of the world? Why not give way to discouragement? Why not return to the fleshpots of Egypt? Why not let sword sleep in our hand?

THE INSPIRATION OF SACRIFICE.

Fortitude is courage that is transformed by faith and hope, sure of the co-operation of the Eternal, the unfailing Purpose, sustained by the remembrance of Christ, the perfect sacrifice. Mr. Gladstone was a great warrior in this cause and never feared the risk if he could forward Justice. His biographer John Morley says he had "the sovereign quality of courage," and the secret of that courage he has himself half disclosed in eloquent words. "Walking in the light of justice we cannot err. Guided by that light, that divine light we are safe. Every step that we take upon our road is a step that brings us nearer to the goal, and every obstacle, even although for the moment it may seem insurmountable, commonly for a little while retard, and never can defeat the final triumph." There lies the secret of his fortitude, in an invincible hope that

"Fierce though the fiends may fight
And long though the angels hide,
We know that Truth and Right
Have the universe on their side."

And where do we get that hope but by reading and accepting the cross of Christ in the light of faith, by believing that there and then, in the obscurity and cruelty of Calvary's hour, "the Lord stooped down to save us because He loves us so." By that sign we conquer, by that interpretation of the fortitude of Christ that it was the sacrifice of God, and if God be for us who can be against us? The self-sacrifice of Christ is the inspiration of that fortitude by which alone justice can be established and the will of God be done on earth as it is in heaven. And those who live for Justice now are one with those who died for it awhile ago, one "in foretaste of the dawn," one in the hope of being "for ever with the Lord."

THE PRAYER OF DEDICATION.

"Lord God Almighty whose glory shines in all things fair and wonderful, we praise Thee for the revelation of Thy greater glory in the humility, love and sacrifice of Jesus Christ our Lord, Who gave Himself to death for our sakes and for the redemption of the world.

In the shadow of the sacrifice of those our brothers, and of all who in defence of their cause have counted not their lives unto them, we magnify Thy name; and we pray that their memory may inspire us to patience and fortitude in all the issues of this troubled life and be a perpetual light to all who shall worship in this sanctuary. So we would give ourselves afresh to the fulfilment of Thy perfect Will through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

LINES TO THE OLD LADY

From a Candid Correspondent

Then opening ceremony of the "North-China Daily News" new building has inspired one of our foreign readers to poetry. We thank him for his kind thoughts and happy expression of them.

To the Editor I must tender
A line of congratulation
For the words he deigned to utter
On our collaboration.
His spirit is enthralling
It makes one feel progressive
'Tis the "last word" in his calling.
Impartial not aggressive.
I listened to Sir Ronald speaking
'Twas a notable effusion
A climax in epoch-making.
Sound sense and no delusion.
He reviewed the "North China's" mission,
Discoursed on the trend of treaties,
Referred to writers of fiction,
And dwelt on the journalist's duties.
And the words by Sir Ronald spoken.
Rang so true, they needs must linger
In long memory unbroken.
Years to come, perhaps for ever.
Some "ists" were quite forgotten,
Such as those who verses scatter,
By a wayward muse begotten,
But, of course, that does not matter!
And, forsooth, the lady writer,
Had not e'en a trifling mention!
With her page not rare shine brighter
Nor her comments on the Fashion!
And the music Critic's raving
May this harmony o'er glitter,
From Olympian heights now falling
Raise at least a graceful titter!
But here is still consolation
If your columns will but cherish
This spontaneous creation
Lest my humble muse should perish.
Anon the dog days will soon teach us
When some service we may render,
Nothing serious then to teach us,
Duty must to Mirth surrender.

∴

So here's long life to the Paper!
May it never be torn asunder.
Ever Green may it remain! Sir!
Strong and steadfast ne'er go under.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

Some Thoughts on How Both Foreigner and Chinese Can Help: Facts We Must All Face

From Rodney Gilbert.

When the writer set out some weeks ago to discuss the prospects of peace in China from various angles it was simply with the idea of stimulating thought on what must appeal to everyone in the Orient as a vital subject and it did not appear to matter very much whether the opinion expressed were right or wrong. The only purpose was to get a number of opinions before the Chinese and foreign public which the readers would be induced to endorse, correct and reject. But after the appearance of each article many persons have either written or buttonholed the writer to tell him that they were looking forward to the publication of his "plan" or to exhort him not to make a fool of himself by airing some silly political theory of his own. Such unexpected attentions make one self-conscious and have forced the writer to take this conclusion seriously and to devote much more thought, time and space to it than he had intended.

In an effort, therefore, to close the subject and at the same time to satisfy critics by dealing cautiously with the possibilities that the future holds for China, the writer has already spent many hours at the feet of local pundits and has already written and torn up enough manuscript to fill pages of newsprint. He now enters upon the following discussion of the possible ways in which foreigners and Chinese can help towards the restoration of order and a permanent Government, with the reservation that opinions which sound positive are to be accepted by the reader as suggestions subject to such amendments as time will indicate and not as dogmatic articles of faith.

A PROBLEM REALLY SIMPLE.

As the writer has said earlier in this series of articles the problem of restoring order is, in China, most particularly one of discouraging disorder. All old residents of this country have observed that the Chinese people are not aggressive trouble makers, that the less government the better, that their attitude towards the political machinery of the country and towards its political problems is passive rather than active, and that they do not require so much to be ruled as to be protected. The members of all Chinese communities are very ingenious in establishing a modus vivendi among themselves if someone over them exercises just enough force to keep a check upon the aggressive trouble-maker. The shepherd who has the means at hand to beat off the wolves always has more than enough force at hand to rule the flock. There are some communities in the world in which the one temperamentally peaceful, industrious person has to be protected by some sort of Government against nine lazy and quarrelsome ones. In China, when times are normal, 99 harmless and indefatigable workers have to be protected against one troublesome drone. The problem of Government in China is therefore a comparatively simple one. A very small percentage of any community has either to be ruled or be driven to work. The promotion of industry and trade requires little more than an effective check upon the fractional proportion of the population which has graduated into the exploiting class. If the one drone can be pounded into something like quiescence the ninety-nine workers will contrive to get along somehow without much instruction and produce a huge surplus above their needs. In few other countries does the temper of the people make the economic and political problems so simple. There are very few countries in which a light check upon a relatively small trouble-making class would solve economic and commercial problems so easily; very few parts of the world in which a simple police system would give play to so much creative physical and mental energy. The devising of remedies for China's ills is therefore very largely a matter of finding ways of embarrassing the fathers of disorder.

THE WOLF CLASS

These fathers of disorder in China are particularly conspicuous and easy to indicate. Under the pseudo-democracy which our Home Governments recognize the yamên divides the man who promotes and profits by disorder from the would-be producer and chronic victim, almost as certainly as litmus paper turns red under acid and blue under alkali. Those inside the yamên, China and the world have to check and render uncomfortable and those outside have to be protected. Under the Republic, Government in China has come to mean the exploiting of those who scarcely need to be ruled at all by an unchecked predatory class who constitute the small fraction of the population upon whom a strict check is essential. With the collapse of the Empire the wolves have all got into shepherd's clothes and have been having a grand time for some years eating up the flock. To restore order China must exterminate them, make things so uncomfortable for them that they will frankly shed their hypocrisy and take to the wilderness, or put such checks upon them that they will turn good shepherds.

HOW TO HELP THE SHEEP.

To drop figurative speech, the restoration of order in China depends almost entirely upon putting an effective check upon an official caste which profits from disorder and which is constantly recruiting from what ought to be the productive mass of the Chinese population.

If we believe that the Chinese people can at one time or another re-establish some sort of a check upon their new official caste with foreign sympathy and encouragement but without active foreign intervention and control, the restoration of order is one problem. If we believe that the restoration of order upon Chinese initiative is now utterly impossible and that everything here depends upon such conditions abroad as will permit the Occidental Powers to cooperate in giving the Chinese militarists and politicians a frightful drubbing and in giving the whole of China or separate fragments of China good government, the problem is an entirely different one. The two schools of peace advocates have absolutely nothing in common and must always carry on their discussions under separate porches. The writer is addressing the former school only, because he believes that if the Powers confine themselves to protecting their own interests consistently and limit their aggressive movements in China to aggressively sympathetic demonstrations against the trouble-making elements, if they cannot be absolutely neutral, the Chinese will solve their own problems some time before the Powers are themselves prepared for effective intervention.

The writer does not believe that the Chinese people can work out their own salvation, can restore order, put effective checks upon their official classes and evolve good Government under any and all possible conditions within a reasonable time. But he does believe that if the foreign attitude could be absolutely neutral the Chinese could work out their own salvation and further that, lacking theoretical and practically impossible neutrality, a clear understanding of China's difficulties and a sincerely helpful attitude would shorten and relieve the birth pangs of a decent Government. The Chinese say that this is the worst period in their history since the Five Dynasties and that there is less hope of a happy outcome because there now exists a "Foreign Affairs" problem which they did not have to take into account a thousand years ago. When the writer last summer interviewed Marshal Tuan Chi jui and asked how the foreigner could best help China back to order and sanity this old gentleman, who has a great official career behind him whose personal good faith has

LOW-BROW LITERATURE

Confessions of a Secret Reader

By Elizabeth Pepys

Locked away from public view in a more or less curiosity-proof closet we all have a skeleton. Sometimes the skeleton drinks, or swears, or goes crazy. Ours, we blush to say, reads low-brow literature. By one Peeping Tom who applied his eye to the key-hole he was once even seen to chuckle over a story in the "Saturday Evening Post." In writing this we do not mean to point the finger of scorn at the millions who take an honest pleasure in the S.E.P. Far be it from us!

Popular literature indeed is an excellent thing, one touch of W. J. Locke makes the whole world kin. We own to a liking for Frances Hodgson Burnett's convincingly impossible whimsies just as we admit to liking chocolate creams. We are often embarrassed by not being enough of a literary democrat to enjoy Harold Bell Wright or Ethel Dell.

LOW TASTES.

But the reason that the skeleton rattles his bones and clanks his grisly chain in our closet is because we have a sneaking fondness for the sentimentalities of a highly popular author who shall be nameless; and we are ashamed to admit it. Striving as we do to keep up with our high-brow friends we endeavour to suppress this craving. We will not read him—at least in public. We are obliged to admit his mawkishness—and yet, there is something about him that we cannot help enjoying, no matter how many times we take the Ridicule Cure.

We were reading him the other day in the public tram, feeling confident that none of our friends would patronize that popular conveyance, when alas, one entered. We flinched. We closed our volume and carried it wrong side up. We felt far more put about than if we had been detected in reading "Ulysses" or any other book which while banned by the censor is impeccably artistic. We fear that if we take this book out in public again we shall have to make it a paper cover and write "Marius the Epicurean" upon it lest our skeleton be disclosed to public Jeers.

DRESSING ON A SMALL INCOME

Thought, Not Money, Secret of Smartness

Since the war, many of the smartest women in France have been obliged to dress on a very moderate allowance. Their natural taste combined with necessity has enabled them to achieve an amazing and unique success. Vogue is offering a list of the wardrobe and the exquisite plan of campaign employed by one of these clever Frenchwomen as a proof of how practically and perfectly it may be done by the woman who spends most of her time in town, with an occasional sojourn in the country. The ten commandments adopted by this particular Frenchwoman are:

1. Never buy in a hurry.

2. Form a year-to-year plan of campaign. Never deviate from it except to improve upon it.

3. Buy only what can be worn the year round, or, in other words, nothing that is strictly of one season.

4. Select the most becoming colour. Try to choose a practical one and wear only shades of this single colour, with the exception, of course, of black.

5. Always give black a place in your wardrobe, especially if your means are limited.

6. Remember that clothes in themselves are only half the battle in the contest for a smart appearance. Neatness and care of the smallest details are equally important. This is achieved by the intelligent use of time—not money.

7. Select, when it is possible, clothes that may be washed; this saves cleaning bills.

8. Use only good materials. Cheap clothes are expensive.

9. Never select exaggerated models.

10. Understand your type, and —stick to it.

The first commandment, this lovely lady says, is that you must never buy in a hurry. Frenchwomen dare to go into a shop, look at everything, and then go away and consider for two days. After that, they return and, with a more critical eye, try on whatever they expect to choose before making a final selection.

In regard to the second commandment; it is not hard to have a good yearly plan of action, but it is far more difficult to stick to it, for the average woman is apt to be lured away. The Frenchwoman insists that it is the courage of one's convictions, no matter what the income, that accounts for the well-dressed woman. As for the third rule—buying only what can be worn all the year around—, it should be noted that either the felt hat or the satin one may be worn in town or country at any season of the year. In deciding on the one colour to employ, one has difficulties. It requires real courage not to be led, against one's better judgment, into buying some lovely shade, smart or particularly attractive at the moment. The Frenchwoman whose story we are telling has chestnut hair and brown eyes, so that her difficulties are not great. She is able to choose brown without a tremor. Brown is unquestionably the wisest colour. However, if it is not becoming, some other shade should be selected. But brown through beige to tan, dark brown, and tête de nègre, all of the different shades of this one colour will harmonize perfectly.

The fact that the woman of limited income must wear black a considerable part of the time is very fortunate just now, because there is nothing smarter than than black for the daytime. For the evening this winter, many of the smartest New York women wear black, always distinguished; but they wear a brilliant black—not the dull crêpes and marocains of two or three years ago. There is no more important lesson to learn from the smart Frenchwoman than that it is not what you wear, but how you wear it, that counts!

The woman whose rules we quote proves her sagacity in her exquisite appearance. No detail is left unnoticed. Once a week, she washes her hair. As she says, a couple of cakes of pure soap are not expensive. She melts this soap into a liquid with which she washes her hair thoroughly, thus keeping it glossy, silky, and beautiful. The woman in question has that double advantage of having a slight natural wave. Less fortunate women must depend on an ondulation or on the permanent wave. But neither of these is of any avail unless the hair is in beautiful condition. She insists that it may be expensive to buy the most elaborate of ball gowns, but it is only a question of sense how you dress your hair. Here is arranged in the newest fashion, pulled snugly down and done in the smallest and softest roll at the base of her neck. Two moderate-sized tortoise-shell hairpins hold it in place. She manicures her nails twice a week and keeps them as brilliant as jewels.

Many people do not know that a considerable number of fabrics may be washed even more successfully than they may be cleaned. It is not unpleasant to wash and iron one's delicate blouses, nice lingerie, or silk stockings. Nothing will save one's clothes more effectively than this personal attention.

The idea prevalent in America that, unless a woman is wealthy, she can not afford the best materials is not true. If one buys as little as the woman whose yearly wardrobe we are describing, one can certainly afford the best materials, which are always the cheapest in the end. Again, however tempting some model exclusively of one season may be, it is well to remember that, the following year, nothing will give it novelty—not even the most engaging ideas for remaking it.

This Frenchwoman, in attempting to understand her type, never tries to fool herself and is, therefore, more easily able to fool other people. She accentuates her best points and obliterates, as far as possible, those that are less good. Her eyes and eyebrows are her loveliest features; the latter she combs as carefully as she does her hair. She uses a very pale, almost unnoticeable rouge, so that her cheeks and lips offer no competition to her eyes, the important note of her face. Very subtly under her soft hair, she gives just a touch of rouge to either lobe of her ear.

And last—not even an unlimited bank account will give a woman a true understanding of her type; only brave experiment, taste, and discretion will accompplish this.

RUTH MUSKRAT AT WASHINGTON

Many Shanghai people will remember that at the time of the meeting of the World's Student Christian Conference in Peking during the spring of 1922, Miss Ruth Muskrat, a Cherokee-Irish girl, representing the boys and girls of the U.S. Indian Schools, spoke at several gatherings here.

We now learn that at the recent meeting in Washington of the Committee of One Hundred, appointed by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior to advise with him on Indian affairs, during a meeting at the White House where the Hundred had been invited to meet the President, Miss Muskrat, who is now a student at Mt. Holyoke College, appeared, dressed in skins and her head with a bead bound with a bead fillet, holding a volume bead and skin bedecked in her hand, which she offered to the "Great White Father" with a prettily delivered speech.

WOMEN AND SERMONS

The End of the Chapter

"People will no longer listen to long sermons" said a West End vicar the other day. "Even women nowadays will stand no more than ten minutes."

What women have suffered at the hands of the long sermon makes a fascinating little chapter in social history. Often chastisement in the form of the long sermon has been hurled at the head of one particular miscreant woman to such an extent in the eighteenth Century that when the Ladies' Almanack was published one of the first laws to be laid down in it was that ministers were "to chastise the sinner, but to make mention of no names." Most of the chastisement was incurred, as might be expected, for love of finery, though it is not only the frivolous woman to whom finery appeals. St. Edith, daughter of King Edgar, brought up in a convent at Wilton and looking forward eagerly to the holy life, loved to array herself. St. Ethelwold reproached her for it. "I trow," she rapped out, "as clean a soul may be under my clothes that are arrayed with gold as under thy slight fur-skins." St. Bernard's sister was not so bold. "Know you not," he said to her, "how you displease God and His angels in adorning with such pomp and pride your body, which is carrion?" "And then the ladye wept, and sold away her clothes and lived a holy life."

Not always was the effect of preaching so lasting. A wandering friar attacked the steeple headdresses with such fervour that in the very middle of his sermon the ladies threw their steeples at the foot of the pulpit and made a bonfire of them while the friar smiled at their labours through the smoke. But when he had gone the steeples reared themselves higher than ever.

PEREMPTORY PIETY.

In the reign of James I. Hall, Bishop of Exeter, often gave the ladies of the court an extremely uncomforable half-hour. "Hear this, ye popinjays of our time, hear this, ye plaster-faced Jezebels, God will one day wash your faces with fire and brimstone." But sermons like that, which could not but raise anxiety, were preferable to the dull and endless sermons which were preached in France.

Louis XIV. at his greatest laxity of morals was adamant in the matter of attendance at church, and no one listened to more sermons than Madame de Montespan. One Sunday when, as usual, the ladies in the royal chapel had lighted their candles, not to be able to read their prayer-books but so that their presence should not be missed by the King, an official stepped into the tribune and cried, "Guards of the King, retire; the King is not coming." It was not only the Guards who retired. When, presently, the King arrived there were no candles and no ladies. If he laughed at the practical joke Louis did not forget to admonish.

Queen Caroline, wife of George II., was partial to the company of learned men, and invited the renowned Whiston, scientist and divine, to come once a week to acquaint her with the progress of science. One night the Queen, a little bored, turned the subject by requesting Whiston to tell her of her faults. "Your irreverent behaviour at sermon-time in church, ma'am," came the unflinching answer. A few weeks later she repeated her question. "Madam, I have laid it down as a maxim never to tell any person of more than one fault at a time and never to mention a second until the first is mended."

BANKERS AS SHY BIRDS.

No woman loved a long sermon so much as Hannah More. Her favourite preacher was Mr. Newton, famous for his marital philosophy that "if my wife is willing to deliver the reins when I ask for them I shall always be willing to let her drive." But it was no use Hannah going to Mr. Newton on Sunday mornings, for then he was very short indeed. There were several bankers in his congregation, and, in his own words, "the fowler must go cautiously to meet shy birds."

So perhaps if women had been bankers the tale of the long sermon would have had a more speedy ending. Short of that, no weapon has been more effectual than the high pew, and no one has known better how to wield this weapon than Jane Welsh Carlyle. "I turned the depth of the pew to good account," she writes to her husband after good manners as a guest had taken her to an afternoon service. "When the sermon began I made myself, at the bottom of it, a sort of Persian couch out of the praying cushions, laid off my bonnet, and stretched myself out very much at my ease, I seemed to have been thus only one drowsy minute when a slight rustling and the words 'Now to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost' warned me to put on my bonnet quick and made me aware that I had been fast asleep."

But the greatest sufferers under the long sermon have been children. Walking home from the sermon of which she had heard never a word. Mrs. Carlyle inquired what part the portly man waving a stick five feet long in the gallery had been playing. He was there, she was told, "to beat bad children." "And are the children here so bad they need such a functionary?" she asked. "Ah, they will be doing mischief in the church," was the reply. "It's a-wearisome for the poor, little things and the rod keeps them in fear."—G. M. A. "Manchester Guardian."

"EVERYBODY'S WEARING THEM AT HOME"

The Prettiest of the Season's Novelties

You know what fun it is to gather round while your friend just back from Home unpacks her trunk and discloses the very latest thing to your envious eyes. In the case of the Trunk from Home, one's envy need not go unsatisfied, for there is opportunity for those who appreciate the charm of the novel to secure the "different," dress that marks its owner as being a little ahead of the mode.

The Trunk from Home has within its capacious trays some jaunty jumpers of camel's hair and brushed wool, or silk and Shetland wool in the heather mixtures. There are knitted and jersey dresses, a fetching costume of tricolette, a marvellous creation of Peking blue duvetyn with a fetching bead cabuchon, and the most stylish of three-piece suits, a wrap around skirt, a blouse of chenille and georgette combined in the chicest way, and a nobby sack coat tying on the side.

The tea-dance and evening frocks are the most alluring of the collection, however, and it seems ridiculous to state that the simplest models may be had for only $50. There is one "Love-Apple" model (this being the new name for tomato) with one long sleeve, one excuse for a sleeve, and a trailing hip train. There are the freshest and most winsome dancing gowns of mauve over yellow, or pink, some fascinating petunia shades, a sea-weed silk, brocaded cerise chiffon made up with black satin, a stunning green crepe, trimmed with brilliants riveted in, and there are all manner of new devices, new ribbons, new uses for pearls—in short the gowns simply demand to be seen and you will find them on view in Room 48, the Astor House.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

A revised and "adapted" version of Mr. Galsworthy's "Strife" has been produced on the Communist stage in Russia. A new ending has been specially written for the Bolshevist version, whereby the fall of the curtain sees the workers continuing to put up a valiant fight against capital. "This ending," says the dramatic critic of the Moscow "Isvestia," "is, of course, much better than Galsworthy's."

∴

Mr. Liam O'Flaherty, the author of that successful first novel, "Thy Neighbour's Wife," has had romantic career. He was born on one of the wild and lonely Aran Isles, off the coast of Galway. After the war, in which he served with the Irish Guards, the author signed on as a trimmer aboard a tramp steamer bound for Brazil, and for some time he tramped and worked all over the United States.

∴

One of John Morley's most intimate friends, a man always in his literary counsels, can be quoted for the statement that he left no writings for publication, and that he left very little, either in the way of personal letters or diaries. He took the view that a writing and public man's life told its own story, either in the books he wrote or in the work he did. This was really why he inserted in his will a clause to the effect that there should be no authorized biography of him.

∴

Pathos always attaches to a posthumous book, and a volume of verse which has attracted attention this autumn is posthumous. It is "A Devonshire Garden," by Mr. R. H. Forster, who himself brought the manuscript to Mr. Jonathan Cape. He died before it could be put into print, and so never saw an ambition realized. He wrote because he had to write, and he did not think of publishing his verses until he was pressed to do so by his friends.

∴

Mr. A. S. M. Hutchinson has written an extremely interesting preface to a popular edition of "This Freedom" in which he explains the idea of the novel and incidentally refers to the relations that exist between him and the characters that he creates. It will be remembered that in "If Winter Comes" Mark Sabre would have avoided all subsequent trouble if he had obtained furnished lodgings for the unfortunate young woman whom he befriended instead of taking her into his own house. Many critics have asked why on earth Sabre did not adopt this obvious common-sensical procedure? Mr. Hutchinson answers that "Mark Sabre never thought of it," and he adds: "All my characters in all my books never do think or act as, critically judged, they ought to have thought or acted. They do as they do, right or wrong, because they are what they are and can be no other.

∴

This is all very well, but a critic is perfectly justified in suggesting that the character would not have acted as Mr. Hutchinson makes him act or, as has occurred to many people in the case of Mark Sabre; if he did act in Mr. Hutchinson's way, that he would is a fool. Mr. Hutchinson, as a matter of fact, takes very high ground when he says:—"When I am writing I inhabit these people or they inhabit me. I do not know how these things happen, nor profess to know anything about the art of writing whatsoever and they tell me it is that that is troubling them and I just put it down. Do you, when a man is come to you for sympathy, stop him and tell him what he ought to have done; or when a woman, similarly beset, comes to you with a confession and with what her confession means, stop her and desire her to tell you what it does not mean? I think you do not: and I, when I am writing, do not. You listen. I transcribe."

AN AUSTRALIAN AT HOME

THE ENGLISH. 1909-1922. By Frank Fox. John Murray. 9/- net.

Mr. Fox is an Australian and, therefore, prejudiced. The task he sets out to perform is impossible, for him, of complete accomplishment. It is as if a man should sit down to write an impartial criticism of his mother. Even apart from the inhibition such a circumstance must set up, there is the matter of the common outstanding trait of critic and criticized. This common trait, for want of a more comprehensive word, must be called sentimentalism. A more comprehensive word is needed, a word that shall include a genius for deceiving themselves, for closing the eyes to the realities of life. A worthy criticism of the English can only be written by a citizen of a country whose people have not this genius, as, for instance, one of the two nearest neighbours of England. At this date of history it must be generally acknowledged that the Irish and the French are the least sentimental of all Western peoples. As such they should be competent critics of the English, who, with the possible exception of the Americans, must be the most sentimental people in the world.

It may be a subconscious realization of his too great sympathy with his subject, for his avowed purpose that makes Mr. Fox's "criticism" a matter (for the most part) of rather mild observation of the superficial attributes of the English people.

In truth there is too much admiration for impartial judgment, and, where the generalities, which seem sound, though biassed, give way to individuals Mr. Fox seems to go astray somewhat. These criticisms of individuals are inconsistent in places with the general axioms which he ennunciates. One instance is where he talks of the English public services and says, surely truly:—

> "It is the option which faces us all, I suspect, in old as well as new communities, to be good-tempered, easy going and popular, or to do things and arouse antagonism."

Yet his criticism of Mr. Churchill shows that he does not believe in the universal application of that aphorism.

If it does not go deep enough, or as deep as its title leads one to expect, it is, nevertheless, an interesting book. We have the reputation, probably deserved, of indifference to the opinions of other people. But the opinions in this book are certainly worthy of our consideration. And whether we learn anything from them or not they make good reading.

J. L.

A PHILOSOPHER ON THE LINKS

ITS MORAL BEAUTY. By A Divotee. Mills & Boon. 3/6 net.

Some years ago Arnold Bennett visited the United States for the first time. He wrote a book of his first impressions of that country called respectively in its English and American publications "Those United States" and "Your United States." It did not pretend to be more than a record of first impressions and there were, inevitably, several criticisms which we, who had a longer acquaintance with the country, felt Mr. Bennett would wish to revise when he had the same advantage. One especially struck the present reviewer, and the antagonism aroused by it is revived by the little book under review. Speaking of the conduct of business, the luxurious office setting, the whole-hearted devotion to business, of the New Yorkers, Mr. Bennett finished up a glowing eulogy with some such words as the following:—

> "One felt that these people had a religion, and it was not golf."

The rage of all true believers who read that sentence has probably by now turned to pity. For it is rumoured that much of Mr. Arnold Bennett's leisure is taken up with jazzing. Whether "A Divotee" (it is a pity he did not write his real name) read the heathenish line is unknown. Though it certainly might have inspired the excellent work "Its Moral Beauty," it is probable that the poisonous profanity missed him. For he writes in his first chapter:—

> "It occurred to me as we zigzagged towards the eighth green that if one could show mankind in simple language and by persuasive arguments which owed nothing to casuistry that golf, apart altogether from its obvious influence on the liver, has a moral beauty which is of eminent importance to the soul, one might take up one's stance in the future, if not with the reckless confidence of a Tolley or the calm conviction of a Joyce Wethered, at least without the intolerable and paralyzing feeling that one knows nothing at all about this incomparable but wholly incomprehensible game."

Having read the book, one can but declare that the author has earned the right to take up his stance in the future with the confidence of Walter Hagen. For he has supplied the world's great need. Almost he might persuade Arnold Bennett. If that poor man could but be captured in an interval of his dervish rites and his twinkling feet (one had almost said cloven hoofs) be bound to a chair while "A Divotee" read to him the enlightening words, he too would bow his head and declare his faith that if the soul of America can be saved the miracle is more like to be performed upon the fairways of Van Cortlandt than in the palace-offices of Wall Street.

Golf has no better book.

CHINESE CEREMONIALS

"CHINESE BIRTHDAYS, WEDDINGS AND FUNERALS." By Annie Cormack (Mrs. J. G.). The Commercial Press, $3.00.

The second and enlarged edition of this handy volume dealing with the most vital customs of the Chinese, especially those of the official and wealthy families living in Peking, merits as cordial a reception as the first booklet received. The author has endeavoured to gather her information at first hand and to answer the questions which spring to the lips of the mystified foreigner curious to understand the significance of the strange rites of which he catches glimpses. The chapter headings—The Chinese almanac, Births and Birthdays, Betrothal, Marriage, Funerals, New Years, Festivals, The Twenty-Four Solar Terms, and Special Days—give a good idea of the scope of the informing little volume. Numerous illustrations add to its interest, but unfortunately there is no index.

A PROSE ANTHOLOGY

THE CHOSHAM BOOK OF ENGLISH PROSE. By Stephen Coleridge. Mills & Boon.

This is a very interesting anthology of English prose from the time of translation of the Bible to the present day, with descriptive and biographical comment by Stephen Coleridge. It is a very personal anthology and in no sense comprehensive. Such little known and seldom read writers as Lyly, Ascham, Clarendon, Southey, H. N. Coleridge and Robert Hall are quoted, while Poe, Pater, Washington Irvine, Wilde and other stylists are ignored. But the volume is none the less interesting for that, and can be recommended as an excellent "bedside-book." It would be still more enjoyable if the author had refrained from taking the opportunity to air, in one or two places, his prejudices on unliterary matters, such as vivisection.

W.J.D.

Mr. MAIS SURPASSES HIMSELF

BY ACHILLES.

"Prunello" (Grant Richards: 7/6) is incontestably the masterpiece of the schoolmaster-journalist, Mr. S. P. B. Mais; in fact it appears to be one of the chief of the best-sellers of the winter season, and quite deserves to be. It is the tale of a man whose family has been caught by the dangerous drift of laissez-faire, and has sunk into a hopeless state of depravity bordering on savagery. Father, mother, brothers and sister, living on the Derbyshire moor, have become worse than beasts, except for one of the brothers, Colin Entwhistle, dramatic critic, clever and energetic, whose regular salary is derived from the office of the "Sun," on the staff of which newspaper he acts as a caption-writer.

The father, a doctor, got into the way of saying to his wife: "I shall not shave to-day: it is too cold," and she to him "I cannot wash to-day, or I shall freeze" —and so they left everything for the morrow, and collapsed into a state of utter chaos, and misery.

Colin falls in love with a dramatic author's sister and as she is of the nouveau pauvre aristocracy, refuses to allow himself to marry her until she sees what his own people are like. He overdoes this act of sacrifice, and rubs it in to the lovable Olwen that he himself must possess lazy, shiftless traits like his Derbyshire next-of-kin and makes her visit them, so that she witnesses a condition which would shame for filthy disreputability any caricature of a poor man's dilapidated cottage. One can hardly believe such a wretched condition could exist in an erstwhile respectable family, and when we are told that the father is a doctor for the district we feel it is going a little too far. That one entirely without vitality, whose fingers were stained with nicotine, and whose nails were choked with grime, who was dirty all over, wore a gravy-stained tie and waist-coat, and trousers the ends of which were stuffed into coarse army socks, and who had to be reminded to blow his nose, could be a medical practitioner holding lives in his hands, is hard to credit.

The sixth chapter in the book, entitled "This Working Day World," is one of the best that can have been written in fiction for some time. It is a description of work in the "Sun" office, and of Colin's boarding-house and visits to London night clubs.

Crammed in his office, the caption-writer hears, behind partitions, the gabbling of proof-readers, stenographers, and others. One typist argues all day in loud tones with an artist as to whether God exists. Telephone calls come down from Sub-Editors to 'kill Hobbs,' 'kill half-column Oval,' 'kill Lady Rachel Cavendish' "(like a Russian newspaper)" and to 'cut' carefully-written reviews, and the continual din of mingled voices, if noted on paper, would have read approximately thus:—

> "I am the man in the barrel he said shoot me if you will I shall not scream My God you are brave as you are beautiful remember what Voltaire said if there be no God it would be necessary for marmalade in two-pound jars 1/11 all jams Box 3075 knickers with initials kiss you My God the revolver—"

A girl and man friend in the boarding-house persuade Colin to go the round of London cabarets. The women of pleasure in these palais de danse provide him with an object lesson on the beautiful influence of work, as they have no saving grace whatever. When Penelope, the boarding-house girl, says she will have a dance with an attractive stranger, Colin, disgusted, gives a questioning look to the first girl he sees, and has one dance with her in silence, taking her back to where he found her. He prepares to dash back for Penelope when: "Anything for the partner, please, kind gentleman? I can't afford to dance for nothing, kind sir, she said, kind sir, she said. A sovereign would help me a lot," muttered the maiden. She gets it and "You ought to be a head-waiter in your next incarnation" from Colin. This sounds an expensive form of brief and silent exercise!

There are many thoughtful sentences and epigrams throughout the book, which delight the reader. Colin had four great pleasures: beer, the open air, pretty women and books. He loved life.

A FAMOUS CHINESE BEAUTY

YANG KUEI-FEI, the most famous beauty of China, by "Shu Chiung" (Mrs. Wu Lien-teh). Published by the Commercial Press. Illustrated. $3.

This is the first book on this fascinating subject to appear in the English language, by a Chinese lady, and we say without hesitation that it has been written in a most delightful style.

Mrs. Wu Lien-teh (Shu Chiung), the authoress, is the helpmeet of the world-renowned Chinese doctor who for many years has devoted his time and his energy to stamping out plague in the homeland of his ancestors. She has given much time to the study of Chinese, especially Chinese classics, history, and civilization, and she is among the best informed women on these subjects.

The story of Yang Kuei-fei is one which no writer of Chinese history can overlook, and is familiar to the whole people. She was the most beautiful and accomplished of all Chinese concubines, and without a rival. The last two words of her name indicate the title of Second Rank Imperial Concubine, she being a concubine of Emperor Hsuan Tsung (A.D. 738).

The daughter of an official, in the Tang Dynasty, Yang Yu-han (her personal name) was said to have been born at night when her parents saw a strange vision, viz., a brilliant meteor gliding slowly from the heavens, amidst magnificent rainbow lights which shone around the bed on which the child was lying, finally striking the earth with a great noise. This was taken to be a good omen, and the father remarked that the girl would one day become Empress of the land.

In later years she was told of this occurrence, and received special training which would prepare her for the day when she was to be the first lady of the land. Her talent developed with age and the best education possible was accorded her. Ambitious girl that she was, Yang Kuei-fei mastered the Five Classics and the history of China at the age of 16, and her exceptional alertness and activity of mind, combined with her unusual skill and love for music, enabled her to surpass her sisters. She took special interest in singing, dancing and musical instruments and was adept in composing verses.

As a stepping stone towards her great aspiration to become Empress, Yang Kuei-fei was married to Prince Shou, the son of Ming Huang, who, however, was not in line of direct succession. She was therefore not content with this alliance, and the story shows how subtly her personal influence was used in the achievement of royal patronage.

During 20 years in the Emperor's harem, where she alone reigned, she caused the infatuated monarch almost to ruin his kingdom by licentiousness and extravagance. Though not cruel she was the cause of much cruelty, and finally when insurrection arose, the Emperor strangled her in order to pacify an outraged people. Thus tragically died Yang Kuei-fei, during her life beauty unsurpassed, whose talents were unexcelled, alone and unmourned.

On the whole, Mrs. Wu Lien-teh has produced an excellent work. It is to be hoped that Mrs. Wu will soon present to the public sketches of the lives of other women famous in Chinese history. We would especially like to have translations of the stories of Ta Chee, Tiao Chan, Hsi Shih and Chao Chun.

Mr. Wu Shih-ying's able and beautiful illustrations add to the interest of an extremely pleasant book.

THE TRADEMARKS LAW CONTROVERSY

Diplomatic Body Trying to Extract Concessions: Waichiaopu Only Returning Evasive Replies

Peking, Feb. 27.

The Diplomatic Body have not yet received a reply to their Note stating the conditions on which the Powers are prepared to recognize the Trademarks Law. It appears that the Powers on december 1 sent a Note to the Waichiaopu requesting a general assurance that the new law would not operate in a way detrimental to foreign treaty rights. No reply to this Note had been received when the aforesaid Note was sent, but later the Waichiaopu replied giving an undertaking that the priority of trade-marks registered with the Chinese Maritime Customs would be guaranteed. This was not what the Diplomatic Body wanted as they were satisfied with the provision in the Trademarks Law which recognizes priority usage even though the mark is not registered with the Customs. In a further Note, therefore, the Diplomatic Body removed Chinese misapprehension in that connexion and now there does not seem to be any serious obstacle in the way of a final settlement.

Without casting doubt on the good intentions of the Chinese Government the Diplomatic Body point out that it is obvious that the Chinese Government will meet with serious difficulties in applying their law unless foreign expert assistance is employed. It has been hinted that the cost of such assistance will be considerable, but this is a small consideration in view of the amount of revenue China will receive immediately the Powers recognize the law. But if the Government invite the assistance of a Commissioner of Customs familiar with the registration of trademarks, that will probably be found satisfactory as a preliminary measure and will be taken as proof of the Government's desire to make progress in this important matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT AND CANTON

Marshal Wu's Recommendation of Control by Force: The Canton-Hankow Railway

Peking, Feb. 20.

According to unofficial Chinese reports Premier Sun Pao-chi, at the Cabinet meeting yesterday, brought up for discussion recommendations made by Marshal Wu Pei-fu regarding Canton. These were referred to the Military Council and other organizations concerned for consideration and report.

These reports state that Marshal Wu Pei-fu is of opinion that the time has come to bring Canton under the control of Peking by force, an enterprise for which the Central Government should set about preparing the necessary funds. While Marshal Wu is not reported to have made any reference to Chêkiang, it is said that Premier Sun is somewhat disturbed as to the possibility of this policy being extended to his native province. It is expected that further developments will take place when Admiral Wu Yu-lin returns from Nanking.

Feb. 22.

It is understood that Marshal Wu Pei-fu has telegraphed to the Minister of Communications saying that, as Gen. Chao Heng-ti, Commander-in-Chief in Hunan, has agreed to hand over the administration of the Hunan section of the Canton-Hankow Railway to the Central Government, he wishes the sanction of the Central Government to the appointment of Mr. Tan Tao-jen as Acting Director of that section of the railway. Mr. Tan is already carrying on the duties of that post pending approval of the Ministry of Communications. Marshal Wu further suggests that $50,000 a month should be allotted to maintenance of the forces at Yochow from the revenues of the railway.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PARLIAMENT IN MILDER MOOD

The Fight for Vice-Presidency

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Feb. 21.

Parliament has been exceptionally tame since Chinese New Year and seems to have forgotten all about the high explosives which it threatened to set off under the administration just before the holidays.

Mr. Lo Chi-han, the most aggressive leader in anti-government demonstrations, died some days ago of a ruptured blood vessel in the brain when mapping out a fresh campaign against Mr. Wang Keh-min and it is suggested that the noisy element in Parliament is quiet now because it lacks a leader. It would appear, however, that Mr. Wang Yu-chih, the power behind the presidential throne, has adopted a conciliatory attitude.

There is much talk in palace circles of abandoning the suggested parliamentary elections and of recognizing the claim of the legislators to sit for ever if no successors are elected. The talk of electing a vice-president also has a soothing effect because another election would hold out the promise of more money.

Wu Pei-fu's friends and correspondents in Peking insist that he has not the slightest intention of soliciting or accepting the vice-presidency, but that he really hopes to see Lu Yung-hsiang accept this office as a step towards reunification. Chi Shieh-yuan is also mentioned as a candidate with Sun Hung-yi as campaign manager. Such gossip is of immediate interest to the legislators as prospective electors.

THE CIGARETTE TAX

Chekiang's Violation of the 1922 Agreement

Peking, Feb. 25.

Telegrams from foreign sources report that the Chêkiang authorities are renewing their activities with regard to the stamp duties on cigarettes. On February 23 they seized a houseboat, belonging to the Tobacco Products Corporation, conveying cigarettes from Ningpo to Fenghua. The boat is still being held.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S FINANCE COMMISSION

Review of the Work Since the Commission's Inception: Substantial Results

EFFECTIVE CONTROL OF REVENUE NEEDED

Peking, Feb. 22.

The Commission for the Readjustment of Finance had a meeting at 11 o'clock this (Friday) morning, with Dr. W. W. Yen in the chair, when a general report on the present financial situation was laid before the members. This general report was accompanied by a number of supplementary reports dealing with the public revenue, administrative expenses, secured and unsecured foreign and domestic loans, etc. These reports were carefully examined and discussed.

Practically all the members of the Commission were present, including Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo, Dr. C. T. Wang, Mr. Chang Chia-ao, Gen. Huang Fu, Mr. Chang Chi-tau, Mr. Fu Tseng-hsiang, Mr. Hsu Fu-su, Mr. Chao Chun-nien, Sir Francis Aglen, Sir Ernest Wilton and Mr. M. G. Padoux. The Minister of Finance was absent on account of illness, but was represented by the Vice-Minister. Admiral Wu Yu-lin was out of town, but was represented by Mr. Lo Meng-hsiung, Senior Counsellor of the Ministry of Communications.

Dr. W. W. Yen made a brief review of the work of the Commission since its inception. He said that so far the Commission had been chiefly engaged in collecting data from various sources, comparing their figures and adjusting their differences, and that, owing to the complicated nature of the subject, more time had been taken than was at first expected. But, in the meantime, substantial results had been accomplished, as evidenced by the many carefully drawn up reports which he was now able to present to his colleagues.

It was the general sense of the Commission that for the solution of the present difficulties there must be an increase of revenue as well as an effective control over the revenues belonging to the Central Government, and that to make this control effective the Government must be backed up by an intelligent public opinion. On account of the scope and importance of the problem, it was decided that the subject should be given further study, and discussion thereof continued at a later meeting.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE FRICTION IN THE CHINESE NAVY

Peking, Feb. 19.

Admiral Wu Yu-lin did not leave Peking last evening as expected, but he will do so this evening or to-morrow at latest. Admiral Wu had an interview with the President this morning. According to Chinese unofficial reports, Admiral Wu's mission is ostensibly to inform Admiral Tu Hsi-kuai that the Tsingtao Squadron must remain under his control, but more particularly to remove recent friction between Marshals Wu Pei-fu and Chi Hsieh-yuan over the report that Marshal Wu had promised to secure the Vice-Presidency for Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, Governor-General of Chêkiang, if the latter would join the Chihli Party.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE H. & S. BANK MEETING

Feb. 25.

THE chairman's speech at the annual meeting of the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank is always awaited with eagerness. It is probably the weightiest expression of British business thought and policy that we hear during the year, and it is one to which no Government can afford not to listen. No disparagement of any other organization or financial institution need be looked for in this statement: for not only are the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank's interests in China in excess of other establishments', but it is alone among banks in having its policy wholly directed in the Far East, inspired by the acutest perception of the inseparable nature of British and Chinese interests, by the knowledge that nothing can be done to benefit the one which does not consider the welfare of the other.

The speech delivered by Mr. Lang on Saturday is important in proportion to the deplorable conditions in China and it was more than usually plain-spoken. His summary of those conditions needs no underlining and he is to be complimented on his denunciation of "the policy conceived in the artificial atmosphere of Washington" as having "ceased to have any relation to facts." The only criticism here possible is that such a relation has not ceased; it never existed. No one will question the description of the proposed 2½ per cent. surtax as "of minor importance beside the vast and complex problem now calling for solution" "a useless tax on trade unless accompanied by measures of fiscal and administrative reform." But the corollary to this assertion appears less acceptable. For the financial and conjoined problems, the chairman says, "a 2½ per cent. surtax is now utterly inadequate," and

> It is difficult to see how anything short of the full 7½ per cent. surtax proposed by the Mackay Treaty will meet the case, accompanied by provisions for a just apportionment of the revenue to the provinces in return for the abolition of all internal taxation on trade and their relinquishment to the Central Government of what may properly be classed as national revenues. The price to be paid may seem at first sight large, but it is insignificant compared with the gain in foreign trade resulting from a restoration of peaceful conditions and good government throughout the country, which must be the indispensable guarantee demanded.

The proviso in the last sentence must certainly be given due weight. But how is this indispensable guarantee to be obtained? Further, how shall the Powers secure "a just apportionment of the revenue to the provinces," their relinquishment of internal taxation and payment to the Government of the revenues it ought to have? On a smaller scale just such an apportionment was tried between Peking and Chêkiang in respect of the special tax submitted to by the tobacco companies in 1922 in order to free themselves from further taxation in transit; and the arbitrary imposition of a twenty per cent. tax in Chêkiang caused consternation last year chiefly because it so obviously destroyed all confidence in the similar arrangements for the sharing out of a Customs surtax between capital and provinces which were the whole basis of the Washington Conference's consent to that surtax. There is no limit to what Chinese officials would promise for a 7½ per cent. surtax. But the Powers would not be able to hold them to those promises for one moment longer than the officials wished without a scheme of foreign control virtually amounting to intervention, which would probably be impracticable in China's present temper, and to which the Powers would certainly never agree. The only result of the larger surtax would be to waste five per cent. more money, to put a still larger useless burden on trade.

The recommendation touching the disposition of the actual Customs surplus—namely that it should be withheld "from all contestants to accumulate in reserve until they had composed their differences"—points to the only efficacious way of dealing alike with this question and that of the projected surtax. A year ago the "North-China Daily News" urged very strongly that, if the time-clause in respect of the 2½ per cent. surtax really meant nothing, as contended by some people (now less positive in the matter), and if that surtax must indeed be imposed forthwith, then at least its proceeds should not be surrendered to any group of Chinese officials to play with nor used for addition of new, or consolidation of old, loans, but that it should be banked, as Mr. Lang said on Saturday, to accumulate until there was a Government to which it could safely be handed. Because two things are absolutely certain today: first, that there is no Government which can be trusted with money or security for money; secondly that the Powers cannot buy a good Government in China by any device which oriental duplicity would not outwit. Neither the financial nor any other problems of China can even be approached until she produces a Government worthy of the name. Therefore, the suggestion of temporarily withholding all surpluses, which are now a cause of bitter feeling among some Chinese politicians against the Powers—witness Dr. Sun Yat-sen's ceaseless contention that the latter enable Peking to collect revenues from Kuangtung for the purpose of warring on her—is wholeheartedly to be supported and pressed upon the Powers by every possible means.

For such a policy of rigid abstention from any direct or indirect interference in China's affairs, there is a further important argument. Chinese tell us frequently that the presence of foreigners among them prevents their adjusting their quarrels as would have been done in the past. In point of fact, it would repay the Chinese business community a hundred fold to insist on the sanctity of treaties, by which they themselves must be advantaged far more than the foreigners. But while the latter can hardly be expected to withdraw themselves and their belongings from China, they can practise a diplomatic withdrawal. We are accused of being unneutral: we can effectually silence that accusation by taking the course which Mr. Lang suggests and by refraining from diplomatic and financial patronage of any political faction which to-day is and to-morrow is cast into the oven In so doing we should confer upon Chinese public opinion, upon the unmistakable nationalistic spirit of which Mr. Rodney Gilbert writes to-day, a sense of freedom and responsibility to which it could not fail to respond.

IDENTICAL INTERESTS

Feb. 26.

THOSE of our readers who have glanced over the copy of the first issue of the "North-China Herald" with which we presented them on the occasion of the opening of our new building must have observed that the leader—the first ever written by an English journalist in China—was on a "Consideration of our present and future relations with China." That was seventy-four years ago and it is almost terrifying to think how much ink has been spilled and how many reams of paper utilized since the first newspaper saw the light in Shanghi in the further "consideration" of this perennial topic. How much heat has been generated and how many futile expletives discharged in the course of the discussion only the recording angel could tell.

What the Chinese have said on the subject of China's relation to the foreign community is not so well known to us, but the discussion must have been, at least, as interesting and as irritating to them as to our forebears seventy years ago and to our correspondents now. For the influx of foreigners into China, uninvited and unwanted, has had much the same effect as the intrusion of the irritant inside the shell of the oyster which is inevitably a continual worry to the mollusc, however satisfactory the result may be to the vendor of cultured pearls.

We seem to the Chinese to be for ever wanting something. We want roads and railways and wireless telegraphy. We "want the moon to play with, and the stars to run away with," and this constant restlessness is very annoying to those who are content with things as they are. Maugre these cross purposes, we believe there is one principle which if acted upon would, like a master key, open every lock and reduce to a minimum the friction which we all find so unpleasant. This is the frank recognition of the fact that our interests, as sojourners, and the interests of the owners of the land we live in, are essentially identical. Whatever is good for us is good also for the Chinese people. We might well test every concession or reform we ask for by this simple principle. Will it benefit the Chinese as much as ourselves? If so let us press for it by all reasonable means and if not let us be content to live without it.

A little thought will show that this principle covers every legitimate concession that we have any right to request. Take, for instance, the suppression of brigands. Foreign trade would certainly benefit if the country were rid of the bandit pest, but the benefit reaped by foreigners would be infinitesimal compared to the vast relief it would be to the Chinese. We were all moved by the story of two ladies who were carried off by brigands in the province of Honan. We read with alternate indignation and pity how they were dragged over mountains and through rivers. But the brigands had carried off some three thousand Chinese captives who were treated with infinitely less consideration than the foreign ladies. These captives were called "Ch'ien p'iao-tze," "cash tickets." And when one failed to be redeemed he was shot and this was called "sze-liao ch'ien p'iao-tze," "tearing up the cash ticket." Even when the brigands were scattered and the ladies set free, the Chinese captives had still to purchase their freedom, only the "cash tickets" had to be redeemed from the soldiers instead of from the brigands. We see that in this one case the elimination of brigands would have benefited the Chinese as against foreigners in the proportion of 3,000 to two.

Or take the abolition of likin, a reform that has been persistently asked for, often promised and never granted. The abolition of likin would benefit foreign trade considerably but more by getting rid of vexatious delays and annoyances than by the actual remission of the money value of the tax. The benefit to Chinese trade would be easily a hundredfold that secured by the foreigner. Beside the fact that even the tax on foreign goods falls ultimately on the Chinese consumer—this is as sure as death and as inevitable as mathematics—the native trader suffers a hundred times more from the iniquities of the tax collector than does the foreign merchant. Its abolition would be to him a relief unspeakable and the government that granted the boon would be in danger of incurring the woe denounced on those of whom all men speak well.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Feb. 27.

SOME of the most interesting pictures that we have seen are those that the Carlton Theatre has lately been showing of Marshal Chang Tso-lin's army. That army, as readers of an article we published a fortnight ago may remember, is estimated at a strength of 200,000 and forty foreign instructors are said to be engaged in the training of it. But no article can convey an idea of the Manchurian troops' efficiency such as we get from the cinema. We see these troops drilling and in field manœuvres. The trenches they dig, their management of the guns, the camouflage they practise could hardly be improved upon anywhere. The air force is an important arm: one picture shows the sky full of Marshal Chang's aeroplanes. Then comes the grand inspection, a march past of cavalry, foot and artillery of all descriptions, precise, smart and perfect in detail and in mass. It is truly an awe-inspiring sight.

Now on the opposite page today one of our correspondents describes his visit to the camps of General Feng Yu-hsiang. There are no pictures available here to help the written word, but this is certainly vivid enough to make the reader pause. In equipment General Feng's troops may fall short of Marshal Chang's, for want of money, although one gathers that they have aeroplanes: and we hear nothing of foreign instructors. But in physical fitness, in drill and in devotion to their officers (who appear fully worthy of it) they are clearly inferior to none. And further they are possessed of that religious fervour which would seem invariably to produce the most terrible soldiers. Let such men be inspired with the belief that their country needs them and it will go hard with any troops whom they encounter.

General Feng Yu-hsiang is on the same side of the political hedge or at any rate vis-à-vis of Manchuria, as Marshal Wu Pei-fu. The latter's troops have long enjoyed the reputation of being the best trained and best led in China. It is recognized now that the victory over Chang Tso-lin's army in 1922, which gave them the best of their prestige, was not quite a fair test. But if they are as good as the other two forces mentioned above, they must be fairly formidable. It needs no great perception to see that Marshal Wu Pei-fu is doing all that he can to consolidate his power in Honan. His reach extends from the Navy at Tsingtao, for which he is endeavouring to make the Tsingtao-Tsinanfu railway pay, to the rich province of Szechuan, over which his lieutenant General Yang Sen appears at last to have gained control. He makes friends with the salt merchants of Shantung; he transfers the civil power from Kaifeng to Loyang; southwards, he is firmly supported by Tuchun Hsiao Yao-nan in Hupeh. What can all this mean but strenuous preparation for the possibility of another struggle with Chang Tso-lin?

This article is not risking prophecy; it seeks only to underline certain signs of the times which ought not to be overlooked. Here is one more of a different stamp. Last Saturday a Chinese lady opened in Shanghai a school for Chinese girl law students, of whom she has over a hundred, either in the school or taking instruction by correspondence. All over China, girls, for whom but twenty years ago education of any kind would have been considered quite unnecessary, are now giving themselves ardently to every branch of learning; and when a vote comes to mean anything at all, we may safely anticipate that women will exercise it equally with men. While the peasantry go on as they have done for centuries—a phenomenon not at all peculiar to China—through the classes just above there is an intellectual ferment at work which can neither be stilled nor ignored. Its immediate manifestations may appear silly and wrongheaded.

WU PEI-FU AND THE TSINGTAO NAVY

A Back-stairs Assault on Party Round President Tsao: The Struggle for Shantung

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Feb. 19.

Admiral Wu Yu-lin, Minister of Communications, has just set out on what is advertised as a tour of inspection of the railways. Since the first objective in his itinerary is Loyang, and since the Minister of Communications is an elderly gentleman who loves his ease, the local press and all local officials are busily speculating upon the real purpose of this journey, assuming that it must have to do with political matters of great moment.

The general assumption is that the Admiral is travelling on behalf of President Tsao to relieve the serious strain within the Chihli party resulting from Wu Pei-fu's latest manœuvres. The Loyang Marshal has evidently appointed himself high controller of the retrieved Southern navy with the initial purpose of making trouble for the Chinese companies which have officially been designated as China's heirs to returned German holdings in Shantung. The ships recently shifted from Canton to Tsingtao, after much trouble with barnacles, were not moved against Chang Tso-lin as so many persons assumed, but against the present administration of Shantung which Wu Pei-fu would like to eliminate, thereby crippling the group behind the throne in Peking.

It is very widely advertised that the actual authority in Peking is divided between Wang Yu-chih and Li An-ching. Wang Yu-chih, better known as Wang Lan-t'ing, who is now chief secretary in the Presidential Palace, was originally a company scribe in the Peiyang army, formerly attached to Tsao Kun's 3rd Division, who became closely attached to Tsao Kun in Szechuan in 1916 when an illiterate aide was made a staff officer and had to have a writer as colleague to help him with his clerical work. Li An-ching, now palace treasurer, was until recently President Tsao's number one boy. While it is generally reported that these two worthies are the high directors of policy in Peking, it is not so generally known that they take their advice from Chang Chih-t'an who was a cabinet minister under Chin Yun-peng and who is still on the closest possible terms with Chin Yun-peng and Pan Fu. Chang Chih-t'an lives in Peking, holding no office, but sees Wang Yu-chih at night whenever the latter is faced with a serious political problem and wants advice. It is this organization that Wu Pei-fu is attacking indirectly through Shantung.

THE SHANTUNG CONCESSIONS.

It will be remembered that the Sino-Japanese agreements relative to the retrocession of German concessions in Shantung provided for the designation of Chinese companies to take over these concessions together with Japanese firms and the designated companies were, as everyone anticipated, those controlled by Chin Yun-peng, Pan Yu and Wang Chan-yuan. Wu Pei-fu, in attacking the Peking advisorate to the President, has taken the usual Chinese round about course of storming Chang Chih-t'an's friends in Shantung Chin Yun-peng and Pan Fu, through Chang Chih-t'an, influence policy in Peking. They are the principal concessionaires in Shantung, operating under the patronage of Civil Governor Hsiung Ping-chi, until recently Tsao Kun's chief of staff, so Loyang undermines their influence in Peking by assailing Hsiung Ping-chi, by bringing a fleet into Tsingtao, by taxing the Kiao-Tsi railway for its upkeep and by denouncing the companies which control the salt area near Tsingtao and the coal mines on the railway. If Wu Pei-fu can upset the present administration of Shantung he can so seriously incommode the men now in control in Peking through Wang Yu-chih, Li An-ching and Chang Chih-t'an that they will crumple before a frontal attack. This campaign is much more exciting in local political circles than the Chihli-Fengtien situation.

While the Kiangsu Military Governor, General Chi Hsieh-yuan, has much reason to complain of Wang Yu-chih's monopoly upon influence and would derive much satisfaction from his removal, it is assumed in Peking that he will be led to co-operate with the present administration in Shantung in opposition to Wu Pei-fu because of other grudges which he has against Loyang. General Chi Hsieh-yuan is now allied with Admiral Tu Shih-kuei, who has deserted Wu Pei-fu's camp and with General Sun Chuan-fang, who is no longer taking Wu Pei-fu's orders. General Chi of course wants to be absolute master of the lower Yangtze so that he can step into President Tsao Kun's place when the latter steps out. To this end he would like to remove Tsai Cheng-hsun from Kiangsi and Lu Yung-hsiang from Chêkiang. Wu Pei-fu insists upon retaining General Tsai in Nanchangfu and, through negotiations with Marshal Tuan and General Lu Yung-hsiang, is showing a strong disposition to make his peace with the Anfu party and use them to limit Chi Hsieh-yuan's expansion.

FUKIEN'S DESIGNS ON CHEKIANG.

Sun Chuan-fang meanwhile is in a desperate position in Fukien. His troops are unpaid and he has no real control over Wang Yung-chuan and the other northern commanders who evicted Li Hou-chi and retain the actual control of the province. Sun's greatest ambition now is to get out of Fukien and to get control of either Kiangsi or Chêkiang. Chi Hsieh-yuan is not in a position to make war upon Wu Pei-fu in Kiangsi or upon Lu Yung-hsiang in Chêkiang, but he would be delighted to see Sun Chuan-fang undertake a campaign in either province as his ally. It is generally believed here that Sun Chuan-fang is now desperate enough to attack Chêkiang and the Chinese press is giving circumstantial reports of troop movements which appear to confirm this belief. According to telegrams published here the 2nd Division and the 10th Mixed Brigade are moving against Chêkiang from P'uch'eng under Meng Chao-yueh, while the 12th Division under K'ung Chao-t'ung is advancing from Ch'ung-an.

If Wu Pei-fu can be successfully resisted in Shantung and if Chi Hsieh-yuan becomes the leader of a coalition at the mouth of the Yangtze, with his own men in Anhui, Chêkiang and Kiangsi and with the Shantung officials as allies, he will exert much more influence upon Peking's policies than Wu Pei-fu, and the Chihli party is likely to become a league of militarists which will be solidly opposed to Wu Pei-fu and which will force him either to take orders or to play the rôle of an insurgent. The Tientsin and Paoting factions have just had a reunion in Tientsin which seems to indicate that Wu Ching-lien, Tsao Jui and Pien Shou-ching are again to exert some influence in Peking and there can be no doubt that they will unite to defend Hsiung Ping-chi and his subordinates in Shantung against Wu Pei-fu if the latter proves himself determined to rule his native province from Loyang.

It is said here that Admiral Wu Yu-lin's tour is undertaken on the President's behalf to pour oil on all these troubled waters and particularly to forestall an open breach between Chi Hsieh-yuan and Wu Pei-fu which would split the Chihli party beyond chance of healing and inevitably weaken Peking through the loss of one or the other of them.

CHINESE CONVICTS

Amnesties and Reduction of Sentences Forecast

Peking, Feb. 27.

The Ministry of Justice has issued an order to the Courts throughout China, in pursuance of the Presidential mandate on January 1, for inquiry and report with regard to prisoners (1) under sentence but not yet sent to gaol and (2) those who have been in prison for long periods.

With regard to the first list the Courts are required to ascertain what circumstances, if any, may be put forward in mitigation of the sentence, while the conduct in gaol of those in the second class will form the basis for reduction of sentence.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NAVAL ARMAMENTS

Misleading Message as to China's Non-Acceptance of Restrictions

Peking, Feb. 27.

Questioned regarding the message from Rome that China, among other nations, had declined to accept limitation of naval armaments, a representative of the Waichiaopu this evening said that he considered that the message, stripped of all explanation, was misleading, adding that China was always peace loving and she had never hesitated to lend her support, albeit meagre, to any project tending to eliminate warfare, but she possessed only a few cruisers with an aggregate displacement of about 15,000 tons, which was comparable with only one medium-sized dreadnought. It was therefore evident, he said, that China's naval forces were far from sufficient for defensive purposes.

Considering the extent of her coastal line, which was nearly 2,800 miles, she had a right to a much larger fleet and limitation at all in her case would practically mean no navy.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CANTON'S WAR CHEST AND CIVIC BILL

Proceeds of Confiscation and House Taxes Not Counting Gambling Revenue

Canton, Feb. 22.

According to an announcement made by Mr. Sun Ke, Mayor of Canton and son of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, at the committee-meeting of the executive of Canton, the revenue of the Canton Municipality, from March to December last year inclusive, amounted to $8,500,000,

This included $6,000,000 raised by selling public property, $1,500,000 from house-taxes and house-surtaxes, and $1,000,000 of miscellaneous income.

Of the above total, $6,000,000 was expended as military funds and $2,500,000 went to expenses in connexion with the municipal administration.

In view of the fact that the greater part of the military funds expended by Dr. Sun's troops since the beginning of last year has been raised in Canton and that, besides the above income, a vast amount has been raised in gambling taxes arbitrarily by various Government offices and troops, the actual revenue of Canton must have aggregated much more than the figures outlined.

The Merchants' Self-protecting Corps of Canton has of late greatly increased its influence, every time that Canton has undergone military disturbances, and is showing remarkable efficiency in the maintenance of peace and order in the city. During last year more than 1,000 men joined the Corps and up to the present its membership has reached about 3,200. If only more arms and ammunition can be obtained, three or four thousand men will, it is believed, be easily enlisted, thereby creating a formidable influence in the near future.—Eastern News Agency.

GEN. FENG'S NEW POST

Gilded Banishment to North-west Frontier

Peking, Feb. 28.

The Cabinet this morning voted $60,000 to be set aside for the expenses of the headquarters of the Tupan of Northwest Frontier Affairs, General Feng Yu-hsiang.

The Cabinet also considered a report from Dr. C. T. Wang regarding developments in Sino-Russian affairs.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

Six Bills Before the Senate: Headquarters at Yochow for Northern Army

Peking, Feb. 18.

Six bills were on the agenda for this afternoon's meeting of the Senate which was attended by 542 members. Mr. Ku Chai-yan presided.

The first three bills were similar in nature. They related to the organization of a special commission to adjudicate upon charges laid against Cabinet Ministers. After a brief discussion, all three were referred to a committee of investigation.

The fourth bill embodied a request to the Government to submit to the House the nomination for Chief Judge of the Supreme Court in accord with the new constitution.

That the Government be requested to order that all bills dealing with legal matters prepared by Government organizations be submitted to the House for approval, was the purpose of the fifth bill.

The sixth bill called upon the Government to take steps to have the dispute between China and Great Britain on the subject of Tibetan Boundaries quickly settled.

All three bills were passed.

Feb. 19.

There was a small attendance at the Cabinet meeting this morning. Gen. Lu Chin (Minister of War), Mr. Cheng Keh (Minister of Justice), and Mr. Wang Ko-ming (Minister of Finance) were absent, as were also Admiral Wu Yu-lin (Minister of Communications) and Mr. Chang Kuo-kan (Minister of Education), but they were represented by the Vice-Ministers. The official announcement of the meeting says that it was decided that Mr. Tso Pen-chang, acting Taoyin of Yuchang (Kiangsi), should be given substantive rank. It is understood that the gold franc question was again discussed.

Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan, Inspecting-General of Hunan and Hupeh, has telegraphed to the Government recommending the appointment of Gen. Chang Kou-yung, formerly in command of the 26th Division, as Chief of Staff to the Inspecting-General of Hunan and Hupeh.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 23.

All the Cabinet was represented at a meeting this morning, over which the Premier presided, the Vice-Ministers of Communications, Justice and Education attending. Mr. Wang Ko-ming had not fully recovered from his illness, but he was present. The gold franc question and the Government's financial policy were the principal subjects discussed.

The Cabinet referred to the Ministry of Education for consideration and report the request of the Academy of National Literature of Kiangsu Province for financial assistance.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Parliament's Vacation

Peking, Feb. 24.

A joint informal meeting of the Members of both Houses of Parliament took place yesterday afternoon at the House of Representatives under the chairmanship of Mr. Ku Chia-yin and was attended by 154 Members of both Houses. The supporters of Mr. Wu Ching-lien were in favour of Parliament going into recess for one week, while the Constitutional party advocated the adjournment of Parliament sine die, a proposition which was warmly opposed by the supporters of Mr. Wu. On the other hand, the neutrals urged that Parliament should be suspended for one month on the understanding that, if important business transpired, the Houses could be convened immediately and function, provided there was a one-third majority. None of the three propositions advanced was approved and the meeting was adjourned until Monday. In view of the prevailing apathy in Parliamentary circles, it is not anticipated that any result will be achieved.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Commission for Communications: Further Overtures to Gen. Chang Tso-lin

Peking, Feb. 25.

Following the example of the Waichiaopu, which appointed a commission to deal with foreign affairs in relation to the Constitution, the Chihtungpu has appointed a commission to deal with communications in respect to the Constitution, consisting of 15 members of the Ministry of Communications. It is believed that Mr. Sun To-yu, the Vice-Minister, will be appointed Chairman of the commission.

Mr. Chen Chieh, the retired Superintendent of Customs at Hankow and Provincial Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, is expected here in a day or two. It is understood that he will be placed on the waiting list of ministers abroad and may be given a post by the Waichiaopu in the near future.

Gen. Lu Chin, Minister of War, has despatched Major-General Chen Tao-sheng to Mukden to endeavour to induce Gen. Chang Tso-lin to fall into line with the plans for national reunification.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Commissions on Departmental Affairs: Soviet Commissioner and Japanese Minister

Peking, Feb. 25.

Mr. Yoshizawa, Japanese Minister, had an unofficial talk with Mr. Karakhan yesterday at which views were exchanged regarding recent questions between Russia and Japan.

The various Ministries are appointing special commissions to draw up the details of departmental affairs required for the enforcement of the Constitution. Following the lead of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Communications, the Ministry of Finance has appointed its Vice-Minister as Chairman of its commission. The members will be selected from the Counsellors, Chancellors and heads of departments.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Row in the Cabinet: The Naval Squabble: New Descent upon Kuangtung

Peking, Feb. 26.

The Cabinet this morning decided to appoint Mr. Tsao Jui Tupan of Government mining enterprises in Chihli province.

Vernacular newspapers indicate that friction has arisen between the Premier and the Minister of Finance.

Rumours of the impending resignation of both are circulating.

Mr. Wu Yu-lin telegraphed to the Government yesterday that Marshal Chi Hsueh-yuan has expressed readiness to carry out Presidential instructions in every way. Marshal Chi added that he would call on Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei to impress upon him the necessity for peaceful co-operation between the latter's men and those of Admiral Wen Shou-teh.

General Shen Hun-ying, the former influential military leader under General Lu Yung-ting at Canton, who has recently been assembling his former troops with the object of launching an attack on Canton in the interests of General Wu Pei-fu, has despatched a delegate to Loyang for funds to carry on his enterprise.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Claim to a Seat on the Council

London, Feb. 27.

In an article in the "Nineteenth Century" on Asia and the League of Nations, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Minister and China's delegate to the Assembly, urges China's claims to a seat on the Council of the League. He emphasizes the Chinese keenness for the principles of the League and points out that the failure to observe the geographical basis of Council representation may prejudice the future of the League.

If the League ever ceases to be a world-wide concern, the result will be that nations situated in the American continent will establish their own League and the nations of Asia will follow suit.—Reuter.

justice and of what would happen if extraterritoriality were to be abolished within the next twenty years or until, after a substantial period of time, the Chinese have shown that they have some conception of what the administration of justice means. In November, 1922, that is more than five months before the new Law was promulgated, a Russian subject was convicted under Clause 243 of the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code by a local Chinese Court in Manchuria of fraudulently imitating the goods of a well-known British firm (The instance is well known as the Harbin Case). This was a case of an ordinary criminal prosecution for imitation of a trademark—what is commonly known as a passing off case—and the question as to whether the mark was registered or not did not affect the case at all. As a matter of fact the mark at that time could not have been registered as there was no provision for trademark registration in China, because filing a mark with the Provisional Trademark Bureau established at the Customs, as is well-known and is stated on the receipt, affords no legal protection.

In October, 1923, the prisoner appealed against the conviction and the High Court of Manchuria held that although the appellant had been rightly convicted, yet as the new Chinese Trademark Law was now in force and the British firm in question had not registered under it. they had no exclusive rights under it and the conviction was quashed.

What can we expect if our rights and property are entrusted to Chinese officials in the face of such gross injustice and disregard of all principles of law and equity as is displayed in that case?

Although we mentioned that we did not intend to consider the Act in its host of imperfections of detail, we may be forgiven if we allude very briefly to two or three of the most oustanding of the minor points. In the first place there is no provision that the trademark register shall be open to the inspection of the public as is the case under English and Hongkong law, and the power of the Bureau to keep anything on the register secret is obviously liable to be abused. Again, under Article 16, British subjects whose marks are registered in the United Kingdom are at a distinct disadvantage in comparison with Chinese and possibly other nationals, for under that section a trademark already registered in a foreign country can only be registered for the period allowed in that country. In the United Kingdom that period is 14 years, so that such British subject could only register in China for fourteen years whereas Chinese can register for twenty. It is true that application may be made for renewal, but even here the Chinese Law only gives the registered proprietor the right to apply for renewal and not a definite right to renewal as should be the case.

Another important objection to the new law is the excessive rate of the fees charged by the Bureau. The fee for registration or renewal of a trademark under the new law is $40 which is roughly four times the fee chargeable in England or Hongkong, while the fee for transfer on sale of a registered trademark is $20 or roughly double the English or Hongkong fees. An applicant for registration of a single mark under the Chinese Law will have to pay at least $46 in fees alone, and as apparently there is no provision for foreign lawyers appearing before the Trademark Bureau or before any of the Tribunals, no one can possibly foretell how much in addition applicants may be obliged to expend upon Chinese legal assistance. Further in view of what must be the complete ignorance of practically all Chinese lawyers of trademarks or trademark law, it is impossible to say of what value this Chinese legal assistance will be.

The latter points are only a few among many imperfections. It has above all to be emphasized that the one fundamental and vital objection is that we dare not at the present time trust our interests to Chinese officialdom unless we have the safeguard of foreign supervision and representation.

At their last conference the British Chambers of Commerce passed the following resolution:—

3.—Trademarks. — "That this Conference earnestly requests His Majesty's Minister to use every possible endeavour to ensure that the rights and property of British subjects are not jeopardized by the recognition or acceptance of the New Trademark Law by His Majesty's Government, without such modifications as will provide for adequate foreign representation in the Trademarks Bureau, and on every Tribunal which may be called upon to give any decision affecting foreign interests in connexion with Trademarks."

It may be suggested that even that was not forcible enough. It is not merely our rights under the Mackay Treaty that we are seeking to protect and that we must protect at all costs, but our general extra-territorial right, and we suggest that if there is any fear whatever of the Act being passed in its present form, or without numerous amendments, to some of which only we have referred, a mass meeting of merchants should be called or a petition widely circulated to the effect that the foreign community of merchants view with the utmost alarm the proposal to allow any Chinese Trademark Law to come into operation unless and until foreigners have the protection of adequate foreign representation in the Trademark Bureau and on every Tribunal which may be called upon to give a decision affecting foreign interests in connexion with trademarks and until several minor amendments have been made (some of which have been indicated above).

MR. T. INUMARU, manager of the Imperial Hotel, has been decorated with a membership in the Order of the British Empire by King George in recognition of "valuable service rendered the British Embassy and British subjects during the earthquake in September." In addition to giving the staff of the British Embassy free quarters to replace the embassy building, which was severely shaken by the quake, Mr. Inumaru worked ceaselessly day and night in efforts to supply every possible comfort to foreigners who had sought refuge in the hotel.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

French Taxation

It is highly satisfactory to see that the passage of M. Poincaré's new scheme of taxation and other financial measures has been followed by recovery of the franc to below the 100 point. No better proof than that could be given of the restoration of confidence. In this connexion we regret that last Thursday's leader gave pain to one of our French readers, especially that part in which French peasants were said to be turning their cash into something tangible. Our correspondent says that the French peasant has no head for speculations in dollars and sterling. With all deference to our correspondent's naturally greater knowledge of his countrymen, it is not a question of speculation but of buying gold; and the French peasant, who is at all times remarkably shrewd, has learnt a good deal about foreign currencies during and since the war. Not, however, to add to our offence, we would say that Thursday's article was certainly not meant to hurt any feelings, but rather to find the best explanation of an unpleasant phenomenon. And it is surely preferable to be able to believe that peasants are momentarily frightened about their savings, than to have to say that the Ruhr occupation is not meeting its cost, that French factories are idle or that the French paper currency is being inflated—any of which is untrue. The recovery of the franc by six points in three days and the new taxation will, we trust, ensure still further improvement.

Mr. Widler Still a Prisoner

We are able to-day to publish a further account of Mr. Elly Widler's experiences as a prisoner in the hands of the Szechuan leader General Yang Sen, and the case is one to which attention should be given by all foreigners. The charge against Mr. Widler is that of smuggling arms—apparently to the Southern Generals in Szechuan because he has been arrested by one of the Northern ones—and the Chinese keep him in prison and take jurisdiction over him because of a legal technicality which prevents him proving Swiss citizenship. The position is that Mr. Widler was born in China long before there was any adequate Swiss representation here, and it will readily occur to readers that anybody so circumstanced might have equal difficulty in proving his nationality. Therefore, in such a case, he is at the mercy either of a Chinese civil court or a court martial. Mr. Widler protests his innocence of the offence charged and desires nothing better than an opportunity to clear himself before such a tribunal as the Mixed Court in Shanghai, but no such chance, has come his way and he remains at Wanhsien, six months after his arrest, still awaiting a proper trial. Neither at this nor any other stage of the case is it for us to express an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused man, but we can most strongly protest against a procedure which keeps a man in gaol six months without any reasonable effort to dispose of the case against him. Where the present matter will end nobody can say, but all must have a very good idea of what will happen if this sort of procedure is allowed to become more common than it is at present. It will not be the subjects of one or two nationalities only who are kept in prison with no proper chance to clear themselves, but it will extend to members of all the nations. That interesting section of the community which no longer desires the protection of extraterritoriality might well take note.

China Awakening

While most observers of China are taken up with her bandits and disruption, a contributor to the "Contemporary Review" for January, the Rev. A.M. Chirgwin, draws an arresting picture of the extent to which her people are awakening.

"No land (he writes) has been more deeply disturbed by the impact of modern civilization on an unprepared people than China. In less than one generation China has passed from the candle to the electric age, from the wheelbarrow to the motor-lorry, from the bullock-cart to the aeroplane."

For a sign of the times Mr. Chirgwin mentions that one of the towers of the Great Wall, built to keep out the barbarian, is now used as a receiving and broadcasting station. But most significant, he says, is the intellectual renascence; and he quotes the experience of a Western-trained Chinese returning to his home after 10 years.

The outward changes which he found were few as compared with those of an immaterial and spiritual character. Everywhere was a new kind of invisible power and atmosphere which found expression in the tone of public opinion, the attitude of ordinary citizens, and the topics discussed in the newspapers. Dr. Lew spent an evening roaming round bookshops and newspaper-stalls, and gathered some 50 different kinds of magazines and journals. He found on investigation that there were more up-to-date matters discussed and a wider range of opinions expressed in those magazines than any combination of 50 magazines picked up from American bookstalls would contain.

And the conclusion Mr. Chirgwin comes to is that

The twentieth century will be China's century, just as the outstanding feature of the nineteenth century was the unprecedented development of America.

It may indeed be so, though we do not care to prophesy. But in many respects Mr. Chirgwin is undoubtedly right. Only to-day we print an account of the opening of a law school for Chinese girls. All over the country there are similar examples of the new mental ferment which in turn is responsible for the new nationalistic spirit, spoken of in these columns yesterday. As yet the visible effects on China's political life are nil and Mr. Chirgwin does not give enough weight to the fact to prevent his article from being misleading to Western readers. But of the ultimate outcome of the struggle between new and old there appears no doubt.

Sovietism in Egypt

The attempt of the Egyptian textile-workers at Alexandria to bring into being a mild form of Sovietism has not so far proved highly successful. Whoever instigated it seems to have failed to take into account the fate which overcame the Italian workers who shortly after the Armistice flew the red flag over factories, barricaded themselves in and put up a fight for Communistic management and a Communist government. The troops had to be called out on that occasion, in fact artillery had to be used, and the Soviet followers were finally forced to capitulate. Their Egyptian imitators have not waited so long, but very wisely evacuated their positions when news arrived that soldiers were on their way to expel them They had, in any case, absolutely no occasion for risking an encounter with an armed force, for it is tolerably certain that although the quarrel with the employers was theirs, the Soviet method of going about work was not. It is only four years ago that it was found how schoolboys were leading the lower orders in the country in riot and revolt, and observers have noted that the inhabitants of Egypt, Arabs or whatever be their precise race, are among the most easily excited people in the world and thereafter, while the influence of the demagogue lasts, the most easily led. Taking this into consideration the reports of political intrigue at the back of the Alexandria movement are practically certain to be true. and the only way to deal with the case is a firm hand and force.

The Tea Duty

Mr. Snowden, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, is credited with the intention to lighten the duty on tea if his budgeting for the next financial year permits. With the Labour Party this is a matter of broad principle, that standard articles of consumption by the working classes should be as free from taxation as possible, and in the circumstances it can hardly be considered as certain that the Government will pay any special attention to the present preferential duty against non-British teas. It would, however, be a good stroke of business if they decided to sweep it away. This duty, an additional twopence on tea grown outside the Empire, was imposed as a sop to the Imperial Preferentialists who were led to believe that it was the beginning of a great scheme of Preference. Nothing of the kind happened, and this duty remains as the sole remnant, and a bad one, of that policy. It has been reduced to just over a penny-halfpenny, and of course brings in a small revenue, although nothing in comparison with the amount of irritation it has caused in the past to Chinese and others in the tea trade. This, of course, attained full measure when a couple of years after its imposition the tea trade fell temporarily on evil days. In view of the indication given in the Home Press regarding Mr. Snowden's policy we may be certain that the China tea interests at Home, as well as Java and Japan, will be hard at work just now in an endeavour to influence the Government for its abolition, and it would be a comparatively easy task. The Cabinet would have the full support of the Labour and Liberal Parties in such a measure and a majority would be assured.

Tuchuns and Traffic

There are people malicious enough to be highly delighted at the offence committed by General Feng Yu-hsiang against the Legation Quarter's traffic rules and the luckless police who so bravely enforced them. For so, they say, will the august residents of that Quarter have got a real idea at last of what Tuchunism means. What it does mean as applied to traffic, is shown in a characteristic article by Mr. Rodney Gilbert on page 349. The contrast between Peking in camel-and-wheelbarrow days and Peking flooded with motor-cars, is rather like China under a monarchy and under a Republic. There were rules which everyone understood and obeyed; now, if there are any rules, nobody understands them and certainly does not dream of obeying them. The only fixed rule, it seems, is that the official is always in the right and must on no account be interfered with. It was, apparently, quite beyond General Feng Yu-hsiang's comprehension that a common policeman should be entitled to question his procedure and the said policeman suffered accordingly. Now, of most Chinese generals one would expect nothing else. Of General Feng, by all one has heard of him, one had hoped something better. A policeman is in himself nobody particular: it is what he represents, law and order, the welfare of society at large, that counts; and that, General Feng, with his reputation for discipline and drill, might have been expected to appreciate. Apparently, however, his sense of discipline only works in one direction.

TWO contingents of Chinese, numbering respectively 16 and 111, have left Hongkong to represent the Colony at the Empire Exhibition, Wembley. The first group included Sir Robert Ho Tung (one of Hongkong's Associate Commissioners at the Exhibition), Lady Ho Tung, Mr. Ip Lan-chuen (Secretary of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce), Mr. Ma Wing-ching (Secretary of the Canton Nan-yang Brothers Tobacco Co.) and Miss Siu Wai-sheung. The latter, who has studied in England, will represent her father who is a prominent local merchant and an exhibitor at Wembley. Mr. Ip Lan-chuen is to act as a general helper at the exhibition to the Chinese representatives. The larger contingent, numbering 111, including women, embarked in the afternoon by the Blue Funnel str. Agapenor. They comprise skilled workmen to be used for the display of local processes of various branches of handicraft and industry.

The processes of all fermentation are naturally heady. The point to remember is that they are changing China, producing something within her as yet incalculable but which is bound to mould her future destinies.

Here then are the main ingredients of a most absorbing problem: great armies equipped and prepared as no Chinese army ever was before: and a great moral force of equal novelty, as yet incoherent, deprived of the means for its perfecting that it should have, but none the less alive and growing. On the face of it, that force should be antagonistic to the armies, at least when they display their strength in civil war. But as China is, it is quite possible that one of these military overlords might swallow up the other and then be clever enough to turn the intellectuals and the dawning sense of national patriotism that they represent to his own purpose. Which way is it to be? One can only guess. But as one surveys the signs of the times in China, the conviction grows that the much-looked-for new cycle is likely to bring startling changes.

EXPERIMENTS IN DEMOCRACY

Feb. 28.

IT will be a hopeful advance in China when her students and merchants take larger and more intelligent views of the history and politics of other countries. As indicating a step in this direction is the statement we published a few days ago, that the recent fall of the Conservative Government in Great Britain and the advent of a Labour Cabinet has aroused considerable interest in Shanghai, a leading silk merchant going so far as to express the opinion: "My look see. English Kung Boo (government) makee spoilum: just now all coolie take care:" We may not agree with this pessimistic conclusion but it is gratifying to know that the law-abiding, industrious classes are beginning to watch the course of events abroad, especially if it is done with the hopes of finding the solution of some of their own political difficulties.

For this purpose the Chinese can hardly do better than study the present course of English politics, for though the differences between the two countries are many and great, yet they have much in common. Each has a long past of which it is very proud, and the peoples are very conservative concerning their institutions and customs. Notwithstanding this conservatism in each there has been a revolution: in England in 1649, and in China in 1911, with the overthrow of the monarchy and the establishment of an entirely new system of government: in each the high hopes entertained by the revolutionists of a better and happier state ended in disappointment: each country is now making a great democratic experiment and has the same problems connected with poverty and unemployment

Of course in the political experiments that are being tried, England has great advantages. For her political history for centuries past, apart from the one sudden and sharp revolution, has been one of steady progress, broadening slowly down from precedent to precedent, the people gradually becoming accustomed to the necessary changes. Moreover, the Cromwellian revolution is now so far off that its aims and methods and the results which followed can be accurately appraised and judged impartially. There was much that was good in it but the country was divided and the Puritans had to win and maintain their power by the sword, and during the short period of the Commonwealth they never succeeded in winning the wholehearted support of a majority of the people. It was the genius of Cromwell alone which enabled the Commonwealth to last as long as it did, and when he died there was a quick return to the monarchy and apparently to the old ways. Yet the influence of the revolution lasted on and it was educative: In the words of T. H. Green, the radical philosopher of Oxford, the movement had to die in order that it might rise again and make more thoroughly its own the forces and interest which had conquered it. Since then other influences have wrought changes in the political system and have made it possible, as the result of this slow education, for a Labour Government to come into power. There should be little fear of sharp, radical changes. The latest experiment in democracy is being tried in very favourable circumstances as the Labour party is opposed by two parties each more conservative and almost as strong as itself, and these in combination can easily prevent changes being made which are inimical to the vital interests of the country.

In China the revolution of 1911 was too sudden and violent; the people were totally unprepared for it. And as the new form of government has little or no connexion with the old, it is utterly alien to all, high and low, and misgovernment on the part of the officials and lawlessness on the part of the people are inevitable. Hence the fundamental political need of China to-day is the establishment of a government—it is not for foreigners to decide what its form should be—which shall be in harmony with the spirit or ethos of the Chinese people and with all that is good in their customs and traditions, a living, active government. Until it is established there can be no restoration of law and order, no guarantee for the prosperity and progress of the nation. If the Chinese would abandon their paper schemes of government and in the light of the struggles of other peoples for good and stable government, carefully study the history of their own people and the present national needs, they would soon evolve a government that would command the respect and loyalty of all classes of the people and respond to their growing patriotism.

THE recent fall of the Conservative Government in Great Britain and the advent of a Labour Cabinet has created no small amount of interest in local Chinese circles. One of the leading silk merchants in the place has thus described the transition to a foreign friend:—"My look see English Kung Boo makee spoilum. Just now all coolie take care."

THE Nantao Cigarette Dealers' Association has decided that, in the event of Yu Ya-ching's attempt at mediation proving to be a failure, all the cigarette dealers' shops in Chinese territory shall be closed to business so that the special tax can not be enforced. A circular has been sent out, warning all cigarette dealers to reduce their orders.

THE CHINESE TRADE MARK LAW

Feb. 29.

AT a time when China has never given the least evidence of her ability to govern herself or her willingness to protect the interests of foreigners—as shown in the speech of the Chairman of the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank—we, or rather the foreign merchants and traders in China are, if the report appearing in the "North-China Daily News" of January 26 last is true, the agonized but impotent witnesses of what may easily prove one of the greatest tragedies in the history of foreign commerce in the Far East—the recognition of the new Chinese Trademark Law.

An air of mystery surrounds the parentage and birth of this Law. It was published in a Chinese newspaper on May 4, and the first intimation that any foreign, or at any rate any British, firm received even of its existence was when some members of the Chamber of Commerce received circular letters dated August 10 last from the office of the Trademark Registration Bureau of the Ministry of Agriculture & Commerce at Shanghai. Any foreigner who chooses to examine in detail this abortion which has been produced can well understand the desire of its parents or its sponsors to shun all publicity. Although it has been considered by certain Chambers of Commerce and of course by the Diplomatic Body, the general public have remained practically unconscious of its existence and absolutely ignorant of its details and of the menace which it presents to foreign commerce. With regard to the action which the Diplomatic Body has taken, we do not know the personnel of the committee (or other body) which presumably advised them or whether that committee was fully alive to the dangers of any form of recognition in the present form of this Law. With a view to preventing an irreparable disaster the fullest possible publicity must be given to the Act and its consequences in the hope of strengthening the hands of the Diplomatic Body and of arousing the whole community of foreign merchants to take concerted action, and if they can accomplish nothing in China at any rate to persuade others who are interested at Home to some form of Parliamentary action.

To turn now to the Act itself, what are the objects for which it was passed? We are forced to conclude that it is not a genuine attempt to devise a Trademark Law in the interests of those who up to the present time must have by far the largest vested interests in trademarks (we refer, of course, to the foreign merchants), but it is a subtle and insidious attempt on the part of the Ministry of Agriculture & Commerce to obtain by legislation what they cannot secure by treaty. It is, in effect, a partial abolition of extraterritoriality, or in other words an alteration of treaty obligations. Its chief objects may be summarized as follows:—

(1) To make the first breach into extraterritorial rights, and thereby to prepare the ground for future and larger breaches until total abolition is achieved.

(2) To provide probably lucrative posts for Chinese officials with unlimited opportunities for squeeze.

(3) To provide revenue for the State.

(4) To give Chinese in respect of trademarks many advantages over foreigners.

Certainly not the least serious is the first object, and it is difficult to think that this point has been fully realized by those in whose charge our interests are placed. It is idle to consider the details of this Law at the present time or indeed until the fundamental objections have been removed and the proper procedure has been followed, i.e. a proposed draft Law duly published and subjected to criticism and then subject to amendments approved by foreign countries. Every Bill in England affecting even the smallest rights is printed and the public have an opportunity of considering how it affects their interests and, if it does so adversely, of instituting an agitation in the Press, of exercising pressure on members of Parliament, of sending deputations to the Government or Department in custody of the Bill and of preparing if necessary monster petitions. Instead of that, we have in this case an act of spoliation which infringes treaty rights, which is ludicrously imperfect and incomplete, coming upon an unsuspecting foreign business community like a thief in the night.

Two Reuter telegrams must here be quoted in view of the arguments to be put forward:—

Peking, Jan. 29.

It is understood that the Diplomatic Body will shortly send a Note to the Waichiaopu containing the considerations on which they would be prepared to recommend their Governments to recognize the Chinese Trade Marks Law, the two main conditions being extension of the time limit for registration and employment of foreigners in the Registry Office so as to facilitate dealing with complicated questions which are bound to arise.

As already pointed out, the said law is a fait accompli except for foreign recognition. Some Japanese and German firms have already registered. The Diplomatic Body have recently been giving the matter their most careful attention and are doing their best in the interests of foreign merchants. It appears likely that the Chinese will agree to extension of the time limit, but employment of foreigners, who will be employees and not advisers, is more likely to meet with objection.

Peking, Feb. 1.

The Diplomatic Body sent a note to the Chinese Government on Wednesday afternoon containing three "considerations and one essential condition" on which the Powers are prepared to recognize the Chinese Trademarks law:—

Firstly, objecting to Article Ten of the Chinese Law giving the Trademarks Bureau the right to apply for change of the firm's representative applying for registration, which the notes characterizes as arbitrary and useless and should be abolished;

Secondly, suggests foreign expert assistance in the Bureau so as to facilitate dealing with complicated questions; and,

Thirdly, asking for assurance that the Trademarks Gazette will publish fully and expeditiously all registrations and details connected with them, adding that the value of this will be greatly enhanced if accompanied by an English translation.

The fourth article of the Note contains three essential conditions:—

Firstly, requests extension to six months for registration from the date on which the law is formally recognized by the Powers;

Secondly, asks a guarantee of priority in accordance with the Treaties of trademarks provisionally registered with the Customs; and,

Thirdly, that facilities for registration should be afforded to Shanghai and Tientsin in accordance with the Treaties as well as Peking where the Trademarks Bureau will be established.

This Note is receiving the attention of the Governments and if the latter accepts it, the Diplomatic Body is empowered to recognize the Chinese law.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Let us consider some of the results if the report of the action of the Diplomatic Body as stated above is correct and the Law is passed. As we mentioned above, the great fundamental objection is the one which strikes at our extraterritorial rights and underlies the whole principle of the Law. That is the fact that the Act provides for no foreign representation on or supervision of the Bureau of Trademarks or the various tribunals to which appeals can be made from the Bureau's decisions. If the Law were accepted in its present state, we should be putting our trademarks, the value of which it is impossible to estimate, but which must amount to several millions sterling, at the complete mercy of Chinese officials. The constitution of the Bureau is not mentioned in the law, but its personnel is purely and exclusively Chinese. This is a direct breach of the Mackay Treaty, which by providing that the office where foreign trademarks may be registered should be under the control of the Maritime Customs, protects the treaty rights of foreigners in China. Apart, however, from this direct breach of the Mackay Treaty, it must be plain that it also constitutes a direct breach of our general extraterritorial rights. If the Law as it now stands is accepted, questions as to whether a mark for which application for registration is made is an infringement of another mark already on the register will be decided by the Trademark Bureau or the Courts of Appeal to which we shall refer later, that is by Chinese alone. Under existing treaties such a question would be tried either in our Supreme or Consular Courts or in Chinese Courts, with foreign representatives, according as to whether the plaintiff or defendant was British or Chinese. In the event of dissatisfaction with a decision of the Bureau an appeal may be made to three Trademark Judges who are to be appointed by the Director of the Bureau. Of what value to foreigners is such a right which merely provides for an appeal to three nominees of the person whose decision has been questioned? If the appellant is dissatisfied he can appeal to the Ministry of Agriculture & Commerce and from there to the Administrative Court.

It will thus be seen that the whole system of registration and the whole jurisdiction with regard to trademarks is placed exclusively in the hands of Chinese. We can well imagine that if any foreigner were sufficiently adventurous and dogged to proceed with an appeal against Chinese interests through all these courses he would be a considerably older and very much poorer man by the time he received a final judgment.

The suggestion that foreign advice or that foreign expert assistants on the Bureau would be sufficient is farcical. We must have our existing treaty rights in their entirety. In 1922 we had a striking illustration of the Chinese conception of the administration of

ADMIRAL WEN'S NAVY TO QUIT TSINGTAO?

Presence Unpopular in Port: Opposition to Japanese Salt Monopoly

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 17.

Regarding the exportation of Tsingtao salt, Mr. Yoshizawa, the Japanese Minister, has persistently tried to carry to a successful end the negotiations with the Chinese Government, presenting the following demands for particular privileges for the Japanese.

(1) A free selection of salt fields from which the Japanese may obtain their requirements;
(2) Price should be quoted according to market conditions;
(3) The export duty to be not more than 2 cents a picul, with no other form of taxation;
(4) Five or six Japanese should be allowed to enter into the exportation side of the business.

The Chinese Government argued, and apparently not without reason, that the business of exploiting the salt fields should be in the hands of Chinese merchants. It is said that the Government has already granted a monopoly to a salt merchant trading under the style of the Ting Ching Chen Co. During the course of the Sino-Japanese negotiations, the Government agreed not to levy more than an ordinary export duty, of three cents instead of two cents a picul as wanted by the Japanese.

SALT MONOPOLY.

Over this question of the salt monopoly, there has been no end of agitation on the part of the smaller salt dealers who claim that the Government should not have granted a monopoly to any one particular party, but should have given the smaller merchants a chance to have a finger in the pie. And in order to coerce the Government into falling in line with this argument, they have deluged Marshal Wu Pei-fu with telegraphic despatches and voluminous correspondence, seeking his powerful assistance.

Marshal Wu consequently has assured the smaller salt merchants whose number is large that he will strongly advise the Government to abolish the monopoly system. Now, in regard to the price which the present holder of monopoly privileges has paid to the Government—namely, $200,000 per annum—the Marshal suggests its refund to the former.

In connexion with the proposed opening of towns on the Kiao-tsi Railway under the Washington Treaty, the people of this province have craved the assistance of the Marshal in getting the Government to postpone it, and have succeeded in obtaining his support.

In various other matters, he has encountered strong opposition from the very same people who do not hesitate to ask for his assistance. There has been such a strong agitation against the presence of the squadron here that it has been decided to move it to Lungkou. Then, too, the same people who have deluged him with telegraphic dispatches have likewise deluged Peking in opposing the Marshal's plan to raise money of to the Railway.

Of late, Marshal Wu Pei-fu has shown considerable anxiety over the conditions prevailing in Shantung Province. He has stated on several occasions his determination to improve the lot of the people here. Seeing the number of men without employment in Shantung, the worthy Marshal has decided to open recruiting offices at several places to raise an army for the protection of the province.

(1) Opening of mining districts along the Kiao-tsi Railway;
(2) Increasing of number of express trains between Tsingtao and Tsinan;
(3) Erection of a Railway Hotel in Tsingtao;
(4) Establishment of a Telegraph School;
(5) Encouragement of forestry development along the Railway.

For the last two months the Managing Director of the Kiao-tsi Railway has been travelling to and from Peking for the purpose of discussing the problem of supporting the squadron in port.

NAVY ASKS FOR MORE.

The Admiral of the squadron is now getting a bit bolder in his demands. He thinks the fleet could do very well with a monthly contribution of $150,000 from the Railway instead of the original $50,000 asked for. The same people who have not hesitated to seek the Marshal's assistance have bombarded Peking with protests against supplying funds to the squadron out of the earnings of the Railway, pointing out that should the Railway be made to support the squadron there will be no money left with which to purchase additional cars and locomotives to meet the growing traffic, to repair the bridges, Then, it is argued, the line would fall into the position of another Kin Han Railway.

CHAIRMAN'S VIGOROUS SPEECH AT THE H. & S. BANK MEETING

Piracy and Breakdown of Government: Uselessness of Customs Surtax Until China Achieves Unity: Withholding of Customs Surplus Recommended

Hongkong, Feb. 23.

In his address at the annual meeting of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank to-day the Chairman said:—

"There have been many cases of successful piratical attacks in neighbouring waters on vessels flying the British flag. The efforts of our Navy and of the local police seem powerless to put a stop to them without the co-operation of the Chinese authorities on the mainland, which, so far, has not been forthcoming in any efficient form. It is very humiliating to have to undergo this flouting of the British flag and I am sure that our Government must agree with me and will use its utmost endeavours to devise means for dealing properly with the situation, which is becoming intolerable.

ANARCHY AND INTRIGUE.

"The record of events in China during 1923 continues to be one of anarchy and political intrigue in which one searches in vain for any sign of the dawn of better things. On the contrary, the condition of the country politically, financially and economically has grown appreciably worse. With the exception of the provinces of Shansi and Chêkiang, brigandage has become firmly established throughout the country. The Tuchuns ruling the infested provinces, with more than ample military forces at their command, look on with indifference. Their one concern and preoccupation is to obtain funds with which to carry on the struggle for military supremacy. The railways have been robbed of all accessible revenues and, owing to the lack of funds for maintenance and to the wanton destruction by troops, have in several cases deteriorated to an extent which renders traffic dangerous at anything but the slowest speed. This gradual destruction of the country's greatest potential asset, created by foreign capital, is a symptom of the general process of disintegration that is going on.

SPOILATION ALL ROUND.

"While the spoliation of railways happens to be particularly conspicuous by the results, it is but a part of the wholesale appropriation by rival military leaders of national revenues such as the salt, wine and tobacco taxes, which should go to support the administration of the Central Government. The latter has, in fact, become little more than an expression and the groups of officials who function in Peking under the name of the Chinese Government maintain that position mainly by virtue of the recognition by foreign Powers, while their sole monetary resource is the precarious residue of the salt revenue after the demands of the militarists and of clamorous creditors have been satisfied.

"Amid such conditions of political chaos and the absence of a real central authority discussion of schemes for debt consolidation, industrial development and the like can have no concrete results. The first essential for giving effect to such schemes, namely, adequate security under the control of the Central Government, is wanting and must continue wanting until there is a stable Central Government able to assert its authority over the provinces. Such a stable Government cannot be created or maintained until there have been disbandment of independent military forces and a complete readjustment of national and provincial finances.

THE PROPOSED SURTAX.

"The policy of the Powers towards China conceived in the artificial atmosphere of Washington has ceased to have any relation to facts. The scope of the tariff conference, whenever it meets, cannot now be limited to the mere consideration of the 2½ per cent. Customs surtax, which is of minor importance beside the vast and complex problem now calling for solution. It would be a useless tax on trade unless accompanied by measures of fiscal and administrative reform. The financial problem, which is a direct outcome of the prevailing military tyranny, and which, in the minds of foreign creditors, overshadows everything else, cannot effectively be dealt with except in conjunction with other reforms, and a Customs surtax of 2½ per cent. is now utterly inadequate for that purpose. It is difficult to see how anything short of the full 7½ per cent. surtax proposed by the Mackay Treaty will meet the case, accompanied by provisions for a just apportionment of the revenue to the provinces in return for the abolition of all internal taxation on trade and their relinquishment to the Central Government of what may properly be classed as national revenues. The price to be paid may seem at first sight large, but it is insignificant compared with the gain in foreign trade resulting from a restoration of peaceful conditions and good government throughout the country, which must be the indispensable guarantee demanded.

"Amidst the prevailing internal dissension and civil strife the Maritime Customs still stands out as a symbol of honest and efficient administration, the bulwark of foreign trade relations with China and her hope of financial salvation in the future as it has been the foundation of her credit in the past.

WITHHOLD SURPLUS FROM ALL.

"Any measure which by recognizing the claims of seceding provinces to a division of the Customs revenue after international obligations secured upon it have been satisfied would be a retrograde step in the direction of further disunion.

"As long as the Peking Government continues to be recognized by the Treaty Powers as de facto Government of the country, it must be held to be entitled to receive the whole Customs revenue. But, if its claim to do so is challenged by provincial secessionists and pressed by them to a point endangering the present administration of the Customs service as defined by international agreements and the prescriptive sanction of 60 years, then the remedy would appear to lie in withholding the Customs surplus from all the contestants to accumulate in reserve until they had composed their differences and military operations in all parts of the country had ceased.

"Such a step would, I believe, have the approval of all who sincerely desire to see the end of the civil strife now disrupting and ruining a great country which, with no external enemies but almost limitless potential resources, should be one of the most prosperous countries in the world."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

M. OSTROUMOFF AND THE C. E. R.

General Manager Staying at Wish of Russ-Asiatic Bank: No Bed of Roses

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 12.

It appears that Mr. Ostroumoff, general manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway, whose contract expires in February, will continue his functions in response to the wish of the Russo-Asiatic Bank who made the appointment. It is generally understood that Mr. Ostroumoff has no particular wish to continue, principally on account of the opposition he receives from official Chinese circles. On the other hand the Russo-Asiatic Bank have apparently found no suitable successor for the post, which is no sinecure and demands the services of a first-class railway engineer, as undoubtedly Mr. Ostroumoff is. Owing to the political situation of the C.E.R. it is only natural that leading Russian engineers now living abroad should be unwilling to accept the position, though it is a lucrative one. From a Russian point of view it is an extremely risky post to accept at the present time owing to the political aspects. Mr. Rendre, the new general manager of the Russo-Asiatic Bank whose headquarters are in Peking, is at the present moment in Harbin, and it appears has told Mr. Ostroumoff that the Bank is perfectly satisfied with the manner in which he has carried out his work and wishes that he shall continue for a further term.

According to the railway programme for the current year there is to be a cut of the estimated expenditure during the year of over $1,000,000. This will mean that the staffs and employees of different departments will be reduced considerably, and that some of the projected new work will either not take place or the magnitude will be reduced considerably.

The economical Department of the C.E.R. are shortly to issue a book entitled "Northern Manchuria," which will be published in English and will contain the fullest information of all kinds about the resources and industries of this territory. It will be 600 pages in all and have numerous illustrations, diagrams, tables etc., so that it will be of special value for those who interest themselves in Northern Manchuria, much care having been taken in its compilation. It is stated that the first edition will consist of 6,000 copies and that the price is to be $6 American currency per volume.

The well-known local magnate Mr. S. Skidelsky has received the necessary permission from the Governor of Kirin Province to exploit coal mines at Nishan and Moulin on the eastern section of the railway. He has formed a new company for the special purpose of developing this region, which is stated to contain big resources of coal of an excellent quality. The company will be known as the Russian-Chinese Co., Ld., the shares being taken up by Russians and Chinese. The capital of the company is given as $6,000,000, of which sum already $1,000,000 has been allotted for the organization of the company and a further $300,000 placed in the Bank of Kirin for exploitation work. The term of the concession is for 30 years after which period it must be given over to the Chinese Government.

RESIGNATION DEMANDED BY CHINESE MOB.

Feb. 20.

A so-called "popular" demonstration against M. Basil Oustroumoff, General Manager of the Chinese Eastern Railway, who has just consented to renew his agreement with the company, took place here yesterday, outside the offices of the Railway Administration.

Learning of the leaders plans on the day previously the Railway Administration applied to the Chinese authorities for protection but were told by them that the demonstration was to be of a most peaceful nature. They nevertheless said they would accord to the railway officials full protection—a promise which was not carried out. The result was that work was interrupted at the Railway Administration offices and railway employees were obliged to seek shelter in their offices after working hours, the Chinese authorities remaining the whole time oblivious to the noisy gathering in the street outside.

Shortly after noon a procession formed up at Fuchiatien, consisting of 150 to 200 persons. It being the last day of the Chinese New Year holidays an ever-increasing crowd of loiterers followed in its wake. According to banners carried, the demonstration had been organized by the Chinese Labour Union. Small flags carried by the marchers bore inscriptions demanding the removal of Mr. Ostroumoff from office for insulting Chinese society by the production at the Railway Club of two pieces, "A Mandarin's Son" and "The Geisha."

Outside the building occupied by the board of directors, the Chinese demanded to see Dr. C. C. Wang, who was not there. After a short consultation it was decided to move on to the Railway Administration, where the demonstrators arrived shortly after 3 o'clock. The mob filled the square. Finding the doors of the building locked, the crowd surged to the side doors and round to the back of the building, but here again they were unable to obtain admission. At attempt to force open the front doors was also unavailing.

LEADERS' AMAZING EFFRONTERY.

The situation grew worse and eventually three spokesmen were allowed to enter the building. They were conducted to Gen. Afanasieff's office. Here they explained that the various organizations, including the "Patriotic Society for Saving China," complained of insults to the Chinese through the productions of "The Geisha" and "A Mandarin's son" at the Railway Theatre and demanded the resignation of the General Manager. Mr. Oustroumoff was to appear before the crowd, promise to resign and give the date of so doing. He naturally refused to do so and 40 minutes later, in response to telephone calls, the police arrived to disperse the crowd.

MANAGER'S WONDERFEL RECORD OF SERVICE.

Mr. Ostroumoff has shown untiring energy, and accomplished much for the fortunes of the railway, since his appointment as general manager in 1920.

When he arrived at Harbin he found the railway in a very bad way, for during the year 1920 the total expenditure amounted to 46 million roubles, whilst the total freight was only 102,286,613 poods.

His first step was to lower the freight rates and cut down expenditure.

Under Mr. Oustroumoff's direction of the company's affairs, the freight returns increased in 1921 to 126,149,536 and in 1922, 151,605 464 whilst expenses were reduced by 32 million Rbs. in 1921 and to 28,380,000 Rbs. in 1922.

Figures which are now to hand for the past year show that there is again a considerable increase in freight returns on the previous year, about 170 million poods in all, whilst expenses have been further reduced to Rls. 26 million. The nett profit for the past year, after deducting over five million roubles for the maintenance of the railway guards and monetary assistance to different Chinese official institutions, is somewhere round five million, according to the figures furnished by the accounting department of the railway. Those who knew the Chinese Eastern Railway in 1920 and the way it was run, would hardly recognize it to-day, since it now compares favourably not only with any railway in Asia, but also with many in Europe.

GEN. FENG'S FAUX PAS

Legation Police Commended

Peking, Feb. 23.

Mr. H. H. Fox, Chairman of the Administrative Commission of the Diplomatic Quarter at the request of the Diplomatic Body, to-day expressed to the policemen concerned the appreciation of the Diplomatic Body of their conduct last Friday epening, when they were suddenly confronted with a difficult situation, and informed the policemen that small rewards would be given to them in recognition of their devotion to duty.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

WU PEI-FU AND CIVIL POWER

Honan Completely Under Military Sway with Transference of Civil Power to Loyang

Kaifeng, Ho., Feb. 20.

Kaifeng official and business circles have gone into mourning. One great source of official prestige and business profit has passed from our local environment to swell the court dignity of the great Marshal at Loyang.

From all accounts that come from the present provincial capital in the west, Marshal Wu Pei-fu not has only his seemingly effective camp, but holds regular court as well.

The former Governor, Chang Feng-tai, had held office in Honan for a goodly number of years, not because he was preeminently fitted for office, but because he was one that was agreeable to the plans of the military overlord, whoever he might be at the time. He was here through most of the ex-Tuchun's reign. He was left in office during the short tuchunship of Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, and after the present Tuchun, Chang Fu-lai came, at Marshal Wu's command, Chang remained here for some time likewise.

Honan is a very good example of pure militarism. Civil functions must continue, for there are the people, who are not only to be kept in order, but must provide as far as possible the sinews of war.

But in Honan the Civil officers must take all orders from the military commanders, and if they happen to have very pronounced views of their own, why so much the worse for them, unless they are really anxious to return to private life. The ex-Civil Governor seemed to have been one that was ever willing to remain quietly in office, and permit his stronger co-Governor to do the dictating.

Unfortunately though, years pass on, and even the most pliant civil executive will grow old. The ex-Civil-Governor Chang is not young any longer. He has passed out of our local environment to the quiet of his home at Changtefu. Report has it however that to make the passing more easy for him the Marshal is recommended to the President for the post of Director-General of the Chinese interests in Honan's great anthracite coalfields at Chiaotsoa. Incidentally the present incumbent of that office, who has been doing as much as the office demanded, has not yet been advised that he must be retired, because the chief military power in the province says so.

THE NEW CIVIL GOVERNOR.

Well, the present military Tuli of the province, Chang Fu-lai, who seems to be a very good-natured man, and one who is really willing to be reasonable in the discharge of both military and civil duties, was perhaps too complaisant to the non-military interests, and perhaps too obdurate in the discharge of his more military duties. It was not very long after coming into office in the province that he was informed that he would be assisted in the discharge of these duties by a Tupan. This Tupan was Mr. Li Chi-chen, who came from the Marshal at Loyang to act also in the capacity of Chang Tuli's chief of staff.

The Tupan did his work very well indeed from the standpoint of the overlord. For example, the mistake that had been made when the railway engineers and the missionaries were released by granting Lao Yang-jen and his men their demand to be enrolled in the Honan army was not repeated in the case of Fan, who took Misses Darroch and Sharp into custody with similar hopes and ambitions. It was so in other cases as well—those who knew felt that the power was still at Loyang, as administered through the Tupan, and not through the Tuli.

Perhaps the Marshal felt that he himself had to have a somewhat closer hold on the civil authority than he was yet able to maintain, and thus it came about that the ageing Chang Feng-tai must be retired to a First-class Advisership and the Directorate of the Fu-Chung Corporation and the Honan Tupan, Li Chi-chen, made Civil Governor of Honan.

Those who know much more than your correspondent about these affairs say that this step was taken without consulting the Cabinet in Peking. If this is true that little mistake seems to have been rectified, for Li Chi-chen is now confirmed in his new position by mandate.

Li Chi-chen, however, is not Civil Governor in Kaifeng, perhaps because his old colleague, whose Yamên remains in Kaifeng, did not seem to be too happy at this change of relationship. It is rumoured that congratulatory messages failed to reach Loyang with sufficient speed, when it became known that the Tupan had become the Civil Governor. Not only was the Military Governor remiss in this but it seems that many of the chief officials of the province were likewise remiss. Be that as it may, what seems to be more likely is that Marshal Wu wants the civil power nearer himself. The Civil Governor's Yamên has been removed to Loyang, and with him has gone those departments that carry most weight in civil affairs, and—Kaifeng is left lamenting.

ATTACK ON BATANG

Naka Lama and Bandits on the Szechuan Border

Peking, Feb. 20.

An official despatch received in Peking reports that the Naka Lama, assisted by a number of bandits, made two attacks on Batang, but was on each occasion driven off by the local defenders. Tired of being left at the mercy of the bandit hordes, the people of Batang asked the Markham Teji of Chiance, Tibet, to annex Batang and protect them from further attacks. The Chinese authorities at Likiang then decided to send 500 troops to Batang for the protection of the township.

The Naka Lama showed a disposition to enter into peaceful relations with Batang, but the bandits with him declined to enter into any agreement and refused to withdraw until their attacks had been beaten off. The Naka Lama informed the Batang people that they had nothing to fear if he made another attack.

The American missionaries of Batang went to Talifu, where they intended to remain until the situation cleared up.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ITALIAN MUNITIONS

Large Consignment Moved From Tientsin to Near Peking

Tientsin, Feb. 23.

Italian arms, which were stored in a godown in the Italian Concession, are being moved out of Tientsin, it is reported, to a point on the Peking-Hankow line within 40 miles of Peking.

Visiting the railway-yard in the early hours of this morning, Reuter's correspondent saw a train of over 20 cars being loaded with cases of rifles, equipment and gun-limbers, no less than 80 of the gun-limbers being counted. Italian marines were supervising the work.

It is reported that the arms have been purchased by President Tsao Kun's representative for $5,500,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 24.

According to Chinese reports 13 car-loads of Italian ammunition were transported from Tangku to the Government depot at Sanchiatien on February 22.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Denmark and Norway have reached an agreement about Greenland's sovereignty. They are just in time to prevent the airship Shenandoah from claiming Greenland's icy mountains as a source for America's icecream.

YUNNAN'S MOST NOTORIOUS BRIGAND CHIEF EXECUTED

Trial and Death of Gen. Pu, First of Bandits, Kidnapper of Foreigners and Maker of Revolutions

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yunnanfu, Feb. 1.

After a great deal of speculation on the part of the people and a great deal of deliberation on the part of the government, it is a relief to realize that the latter has not lacked the courage to execute one of the most notorious of the brigand chiefs that ever disturbed the peace of Yunnan.

As I mentioned in a former article, rumour has been rife and many people have been speculating on the chances of Gen. Pu Siao-hung being eventually set at liberty. A great shock however, was in store for them for the Government had made up its mind as to its course of action, and in spite of the fact that many of the ex-brigand's friends busied themselves in his behalf, and that a few foreign missionaries—it is reported—tried to obtain a reprieve, the only concession the Government was willing to grant was that the trial should be as public and as impartial as possible.

As a matter of fact it was attended by most of the leading members of the gentry here while some who had been known as friends of the accused were also compulsorily requested to witness the impartiality of the court. The trial which lasted for several days resulted in a unanimous verdict of guilty on all the charges that were brought against the accused.

RECENT CRIMES ONLY.

It should be stated emphatically that the government did not rake up anything that the ex-brigand had been guilty of prior to his pardon in the beginning of 1922, when it will be remembered that he effectively brought the present règime back to power, it rested its case entirely on charges in relation to crimes committed very recently. Gen. Pu's life during the past two years has been a double one, and in spite of the fact that he was in government service and in receipt of government pay, it appears that he has been feathering his nest out of the proceeds of the depredations of his former associates whom he has secretly been encouraging. And again, although he never hesitated to enrich himself at the expense of his enemy, he seems to have been living an ostensible life of charity and benevolence, as many of the aged and the poor of Yunnanfu who have been the glad recipients of his bounty can bear witness.

It is not surprising, therefore, that he had attained a certain amount of popularity among the poorer classes of Yunnanfu, though it is claimed by his enemies that his motives were entirely selfish and that he was only preparing for a favourable opportunity for initiating a revolt against the present règime.

A POPULAR DRAMA.

It will be remembered that the crime that led to his arrest was the murder of a military officer who had been successful in capturing one of his former associates, and Pu's answer to that charge was that the officer had been guilty of murdering his nephew during his bandit days, and that he was not aware that the officer—who also had been a bandit—had been taken into government service. But the excuse was not sufficient to justify him either in the eyes of the law or the military government, hence the man in the street was not surprised when a proclamation was published giving a summary of the trial and announcing to all and sundry that Gen. Pu Siao-hung had been condemned to expiate his crime on the execution ground at two o'clock p.m. Saturday, January 12.

This proclamation was posted up in different parts of the city about two hours before the execution was timed to take place, making it evident that it had been decided to give the incident as much publicity as possible, the general rule in such cases being to post the proclamation after the criminal has been executed. The news of course spread like wildfire and long before the hour the streets were thronged with a multitude, while the execution ground was crowded with people anxious to secure a favourable position for viewing the ghastly proceeding, and along the route of death all traffic had to be suspended while armed guards were stationed as a warning to any of Pu's friends who might have the temerity to interfere with the course of justice. It should be stated here that the brother-in-law of the ex-brigand had been condemned with him, his crime being the receiving and storing some of the loot that had been aquired by Pu's associates.

THE RIDE TO TYBURN.

About half an hour before the time of the execution the two criminals were brought out of their cells and compelled to pose for their photographs, which show Gen. Pu standing nonchalantly and smiling as though he were about to set out on his honeymoon, though his companion looks rather gloomy and dyspeptic. These photos are now being sold and exhibited in the principal picture shops of the city. The men were then ordered to enter their sedan chairs, for these had been provided by the authorities, and their last journey was about to commence when Pu appealed to the military officer in charge of the escort and firing party not to take them the shortest route as was intended, but to make a wider détour to include several streets that he mentioned by name. He desired, he said, to apologize to the spirits and to the families of two generals whom he brutally murdered in 1922 and who had the misfortune to fall into his hands when he was fighting to restore the present règime. His appeal was granted and as the procession passed the residences of these two general Pu shouted that at last they had their revenge and would now be able to sleep peacefully in their graves while he was about to receive a just reward.

This change of route led many people to think that the authorities had developed cold feet and had decided either to postpone the execution or had accomplished it secretly, but after a delay of about half an hour the blast of the bugles and the beating of the drums announced the approach of the procession, and ere long Gen. Pu, smiling and nodding at all and sundry came into view borne aloft on the shoulders of two hapless coolies loudly bemoaning their ill-fated joss that had kept them in the coolie shop until the soldiers came along and commandeered them for the purpose.

THE RED MAT.

The ex-brigand seemed to have a good word for everybody and begged the soldiers not to be too hard on the people who were blocking the way, saying—"let them have a good look, it is not every day that such as I am executed, and it is worth dying to have so many people attend the funeral."

On arrival at the execution ground he was assisted out of his chair and told to sit down on the red mat that had been provided for him by the authorities as a mark of respect for his military rank, when he asked and obtained one minute's respite, and turning to the crowd he waved his hands wishing them good-bye and thanking them for their attendance. He assured them that he had repented of his crimes and declared that the sentence about to be carried out was perfectly just, then turning to his brother-in-law he held out his hand saying "Goodbye old chap, this is the last time we shall see each other in this life, let us hope that we shall have a better time in the next."

The two hapless creatures then sat down on the mats and the sentence of death was carried out with great precision and without any sign of brutality on the part of the soldiers or excessive hilarity on the part of the bystanders. Photographs were also taken of the two bodies lying side by side and are now being exhibited and sold side by side with those taken in the prison courtyard.

A KIDNAPPER OF FOREIGNERS.

Thus ends the career of one of the most notorious brigands Yunnan has ever been cursed with, and one who was responsible for many unnamable crimes, as well as for many offences committed against the person and property of many foreigners, for it is safe to say that he had kidnapped more foreigners than perhaps any other one brigand in China. His last escapade was the kidnapping of Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, and though the latter was released immediately, the former was held in durance vile for many weeks and not liberated until a change of government gave the pardon and recognition demanded and which Dr. Taylor's captivity was intended to purchase.

It is difficult to say what effect Pu's execution will have on the general situation, but there are plenty of pessimists who forecast a terrible time in the outlying districts for the hapless people who might have the misfortune to be living in the zone of the operations of his associates, who of course are vowing vengeance on the general who was responsible for the arrest and eventual execution of their late leader. But general Long seems determined to risk everything in his work of exterminating these bands who have terrorized Yunnan for many years now. He realizes that he is risking his life, his reputation, his property, and his family by carrying out his determination, but being one of the few military officers who think only of the well-being of his native soil, he seems determined that neither threat from the bandits nor the criticisms of the local authorities shall deter him from accomplishing his purpose.

SOLDIER'S REVENGE

Shocking Incident at Anking: Shopman Murdered: Another Seriously Wounded

From Our Own Correspondent.

Anking, An., Feb. 22.

The barbaric proclivities of local soldiery were displayed in a small riot which took place in the west suburb the night before last, which resulted in the death of one innocent shop keeper and the serious wounding of another, who is now lying in the mission hospital.

The day previously a soldier belonging to Tuli Ma's band of ruffians tried to buy a piece of roast duck for less than the price asked and was about to assert his 'superior rights" by carrying off the whole duck will-nilly, when a policeman turned up to settle the matter. The latter reported to his chief who in turn made the affair known to the military. As a result the soldier was severely reprimanded and by way of emphasis was given 40 strokes with the bamboo.

Bent upon revenge the soldier collected some 30 or 40 of his comrades. Returning to the shop at about eight in the evening he proceed systematically to carry out his designs. He stationed men at the head of all the streets leading to the shop, then approaching the place with a few picked assassins sought the keeper of the roast duck stall. This man not being visible they attacked others in the shop behind, stabbing indiscriminately with long knives which they had concealed under their uniforms. Apparently satisfied with their bloody work they made off just before the police arrived on the scene.

RIVALS IN FUKIEN

A RIVER JOURNEY THROUGH SZECHUAN

Rival Armies' Running Fights: Suiling Looted: Safe Conduct Through Bandit Territory

From our Mienchow correspondent.

Suiling to Tongchuan, Jan. 19-28.

At Suiling we had to remain from the 16th to the 19th. The official advised us to await his advice before going on. Meanwhile the 2nd Army came up and the official fled. We were therefore freed from waiting for his advice and judging the future from the past we went on hoping for the best.

The night before we left was very disturbed. We thought the firing was due to the entry of the 2nd Army, but in the morning discovered that it was due to the 1st Army looting the city before they finally left it! It is a city of troubled people. They are as sheep having no shepherds; and they that should be their shepherds flee at the first note of alarm.

The district between Sining and Taihochen, a distance of about 100 li by road, has the reputation of being infested with bandits. Each night we had the benefit of help from the local militia; and there is no doubt that the presence of so many soldiers has for the time put an end to banditry on the road and river.

On the first day we did about 50 li by road, to a place called Tangkiatien. The next day was difficult going and we only did 15 li. Abort midday we passed cinnamon garden, Kuei-hua-uen. At Renchuhee, where we spent the second night we heard that some big coal junks had been boarded by thieves in the rapids just below. From here onward for 35 li the river is continuously shallow. and full of rapids to Liushuitich.

TROUBLE WITH TRACKERS.

On the 22nd we reached the place most infested by bandits. Just as we were passing the spot a large body of soldiers passed on their way to Taihochen. We should have reached this place had we not been detained 10 li down by the soldiers. When the trackers heard that we were to wait, all except the permanent hands decided to leave the boat. They clamoured to the laopan to pay them their due and let them go. "We shall be pressed by soldiers! We shall perhaps be shot! Several trackers have been hit, and we want to leave!" The laopan was unwilling, but they would not be persuaded; and at last—"If you go, I'll dock your pay," said he; and proceeded to pay them all with a reduction that, of course, caused a lot of clamour. The coolies were throwing their bedding on to the bank when a soldier came and appropriated one of the bundles; the owner, however, clung to it, and there was a great struggle. The soldier beat his victim badly, but he would not relinquish his burden and at last our boat putting off the soldier who wanted to board it to cross the river hurried down without getting his booty. The fact that public opinion was all against him doubtless weakened his hand.

We spent the 23rd, 24th and 25th at Taihochen. There was a good deal of fighting on the morning of the 23rd and the balance was very even, but in the evening the 1st Army broke their way in again and there was a great stampede. For hours past midnight the night was resonant with the cries of pursuers and pursued. Stragglers came to the side of the river, and called for small boats to help them over. At a further distance rifles cracked, and in the moonlight banners and torches could be distinguished. The contrast between the upward march of the day before, and the backward flight seemed immense; but I have come since to believe that this was a feint attack on the part of the 2nd Army to attract attention from their movements further north.

The town was deserted, and here and there a dead soldier could be seen. It is said that many civilians were also killed.

We left Taihochen on the 26th but owing to bad weather made but little way. On the 27th, however, we made a splendid journey. At Siehong we were delayed by soldiers who detained our boat for two hours. This city looked even more stagnant than Taiho. Not even an egg can be bought; or a pewterer found to mend a kettle. The soldiers were appropriating much rice from the boats for which they were paying in the absurd paper dollar, which no one will honour.

GEN. YANG SEN'S MOVEMENT.

We reached Yangkiapa by night. This place is 35 li from Tongchuan. There was a large contingent of 1st Army men here: and we went to see the Brigadier-General commanding to avoid if possible being delayed the next day. He said he would let us know in the morning. When morning came he and his men were all well on their way to Siehong. The 2nd Army seem to have been playing a deep game. To our astonishment we discovered here that they had got as far north as Yenting. While part of them have been deploying at Taihochen a large body went north; and bore down upon Tongchuan; where Hsiong Keh-wu had a large force. A traveller from that city told us that all night of the 27th and 28th there was a great fight with the result that early in the morning the 1st Army evacuated in various directions: much of its heavy artillery being left behind. We passed many of them as we came up to Tongchuan yesterday, 28th. To our surprise we heard that Gen. Yang Seng is in Tongchuan. We were fortunate in getting permission for the pontoon to be opened so that we might pass up to Mienchow in the morning. But I must reserve that story.

WHAT WILL GEN. YANG SEN DO?

Sudden Halt near Chengtu after Victorious Advance: Looking for Southern Leader?

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chêngtu, Feb. 1.

To-day the four city gates were closed until 10 a.m. It was reported that Ten Chi-heo's Third Division was within 60 li of the city. He is Yang's advance guard. Orders had come through from Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu, who so narrowly escaped capture in Tungchuang, to sacrifice the capital if need be, but to hold the Arsenal at all costs.

Chang Tsung with the 2nd Mixed Brigade was put in charge of the arsenal. He has dug trenches in all directions, and strongly fortified the whole area.

Military critics point out that the danger to Yang Sen is the length and vulnerability of his line of communications, with Lai astride the main road, but the theory of attackers in Szechuan in the past has been—get into Chêngtu and capture the arsenal and you need no other communications.

Gen. Yang Sen, however, seems in no particular hurry to get into Chêngtu. He has swept to within 50 li with incredible force and speed and now seems to be casting about for Hsiong. If he can catch Hsiong that is his best guarantee for comparative safety in the Capital, but that wily genius is not caught and does not intend to be. His men and colleagues are extremely loyal to him. He has the brains for leadership and the money to keep going. Hsiong is about the only one of all the military leaders that does not change. He is consistently Southern and will have no dealings with the North.

On the other hand Gen. Yang Sen got within 50 li of the capital last year, on the Longchuannie Hills and was then turned back. He has left the hills severely alone this time and come in from the north without serious opposition. Even yet one cannot predict what will happen. It seems an easy thing for Yang Sen to break into the capital after his triumphant advance, but there is Chang Tsung who has been called the "Napoleon" of Szechuan; he is only a young man, but physically strong, a good leader, loyal to Hsiong, and knows no fear. His men are a hard, dangerous lot who have borne the brunt of the fighting at Chunking for a year and more. They are loyal to Chang. After resting for two weeks in Chêngtu, they are now back in the line at the Arsenal, determined to keep Yang out and give no quarter.

RICSHA COOLIES' LIGHTNING STRIKE

Soochow Ricsha Hongs' Inhuman Attempt to Extort More Money from Coolies

From Our Own Correspondent.

Soochow, Feb. 25.

Soochow seems to be in the hands of strikers. With the exception of carriages outside the city, and donkeys, chairs and boats inside the city, those who do not own private ricshas, must walk. The ricsha coolies went on a strike yesterday.

The strike continues to-day, and for how many more days, no one knows. When last year the licence for both outside and inside the city ricshas was made the same, the daily rent on ricshas was reduced to 45 cents (small money) or about 40 cents per day (big money). Last autumn this was raised by the ricsha hongs to 60 cents (small money). On Saturday the ricsha hongs tried to increase the charge to 85 cents per day (small money). This was more than the coolies would stand. For two coolies to pay out 44½ cents (small money) per day in ricsha rent means that they cannot make enough to keep soul and body together. Hence the strike. Something like three dozen ricshas have been smashed up by the striking coolies, and the few strike-breakers among them have had very rough handling.

The ricsha hong owners seem to be almost as high-handed robbers as the military and civil officials of the land, and as robbers that is rating them quite highly.

The best figures that I can get on the situation are as follows. Soochow's average public ricsha costs about $60. The vehicles last for about four years. We will call it three years, however, and place $20 as the sum for annual depreciation. The average upkeep calls for another $20. The licence cost $2 per month, or $24 per year. A grand total of $64 per year. Last year the ricsha hongs were charging 60 cents (small money) a day per ricsha. This totals about $190.80 (big money) per year. $190 interest on $64 is a rather large gain. With this increase to 85 cents (small money) the hongs would clear $270 on each ricsha, with an annual outlay of only $64.

Why does not everyone open a ricsha hong? Only 1,000 licences are issued. No more. Some say it costs a ricsha hong $100 as a small tip (to the powers-that-be) to secure a licence. Others estimate this little lubricating gift at $200. Still others say this gentle squeeze is $300 per licence, while some put it as high as $500. To operate one of these golden egg-laying geese, a Soochow public ricsha, however, costs one quite a little sum.

There is one other small item. The ricsha coolies can use at night only the lanterns furnished by the ricsha hongs, and the police (having had their eyesight financially improved) see to it that the coolies use no other lanterns. These small lanterns burn two coppers worth of oil a night. The nightly rent is seven coppers, a small gain of five coppers a night. A gain of almost $1 a month, and about $10 a year on a lantern which originally cost about 20 cents. This gain might also be placed under the head of highway robbery!

STRIKE SETTLED.

Feb. 26.

Yesterday afternoon the ricshas strike outside the city on the "Horse Road" came to an end, the ricsha hongs meeting the coolies demands, and reducing their price to the original daily rent.

The ricsha hongs within the walls reduced their prices from 80 cents (small money) to 60 cents (small money), the price under which the ricshas operated last autumn; but the coolies still continue their strike demanding that the price be reduced to 40 cents and five coppers, the daily rent of a year ago. This afternoon the representative of the coolies went before the Commissioner of Police, and the coolies made an offer of 40 cents and 10 coppers as a compromise. Some think the settlement will be reached to-morrow.

The strike of the cigarette and cigar dealers was rather half-hearted, and it is reported that they are yieding to the tax.

The Shanghai-Nanking Railway is widening the roadway in front of the station's main entrance. The filling in is now complete, the new fence is being erected, and the paving will soon be finished. This will double the width of this roadway, relieving the congestion of carriages, ricshas, chairs, donkeys, baggage coolies, and passengers. The future passengers will find this a great improvement.

LABOUR CONFERENCE AND JAPAN

Japanese Labour's Claims to Representation: Unions Now Recognized

Tokio, Feb. 19.

Japanese Labour may at last be represented at the International Labour Conference this year by one of its own specially elected delegates, if the plan set forth by the Cabinet within the last day or two is put into effect.

Hitherto in the selection of the Labour delegates from this country the Government has played a prominent part, so much so that time after time the Japanese Labour organizations have lodged complaints that they were not properly represented, have boyotted the Conference itself, and have even attempted to interfere with the departure of the delegates chosen to go and speak on their behalf.

One of the obstacles so far to the adequate representation of Japanese labour at such conferences has been the absence of any recognition of labour unions here and of any right to vote.

These unions, having complied with certain preliminary conditions dealing with the information about themselves that must be submitted to the authorities before the polling day, March 25, are empowered to recommend one delegate and two advisors to that delegate as representatives at the International Conference.

SELECTION OF CANDIDATES.

The Government will select three candidates and six advisors from among those recommended by the different unions, by counting the number of votes recorded for each at the rate of one vote for every thousand members of the union entitled to vote. And from these three the final choice of delegate and advisors will be made in accordance with the agenda prepared for the Conference.

The method of selecting representatives of the employers to attend the Geneva Conference will be that previously adopted, namely, that the six leading Chambers of Commerce should, after conferring with all the Chambers of Commerce throughout the country, recommend three candidates with the requisite number of advisors, and that the Government should make the final selection.

There are said to be 15 labour unions that under the new proposal will have the power to vote, and these unions represent a total of about 100,000 workers. The largest of these is the Japanese Federation of Labour, which under the Presidency of Mr. Bunji Suzuki wields the greatest influence.

It is considered likely that Mr. Suzuki himself will be the first Labour deputy from Japan at the International Conference.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

It is reported that the body of a Mr. McCarron was found in his room in a Shantung village, where he had formerly been district manager for the B.A.T. Co. Members of that firm in Shanghai state that deceased was a man of pleasant appearance and approach and had proved an excellent tobacco salesman. It is understood that deceased was buried in the vicinity.

THE NEW YEAR IN CHANGSHA

The Moon's Eclipse and the Heavenly Dog

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changsha, Feb. 21.

The New Year seems to have been observed with considerable zest. Of course all shops were shut for some days. Dragon lanterns parading the streets and toy lanterns for the use of children were even more prominent than they have been for the past few years.

The total eclipse of the moon came as a grand finale to the "rehlao" (as we pronounce Giles's "jo-nao") which means something different from the mere "bustle" of the dictionary—it is the phrase for such a festivity as we have just been reading in the latest papers that have reached us about the opening ceremonies of last Friday at "No. 17 the Bund." It was a cloudless night and the phenomenon was watched by crowds of Chinese. By ten o'clock, the "reh-lao" began. Gongs, tin trays, wooden boards and I know not what else were being banged incessantly; almost as incessantly, fire crackers were exploding in all directions. At long intervals there would be a short pause in the hammering at some particular gong, when either the beater was refreshing himself with a drink of tea or was handing over his stick to another. From the flat roof of my house, the din was enough to appal any "heavenly dog." I left my neighbours at it some time after the totality had happened, i.e., about midnight—and being a good sleeper, I know not when the noise ceased. But certainly for two hours, I detected nothing that could be called an abatement of the urgency of the "straffing" of the "heavenly dog"—which, I suppose, not one of the "straffers" feared any more than we boys, who used to swarm in the streets on the night of November 5, feared the Pope of Rome with whom our "reh-lao" had some historic connexion.

JAPAN'S PLANS FOR OLYMPIC GAMES

Shortage of Money Overcome by Subsidy and Subscriptions: Interest in Athletics

Tokio, Feb. 22.

Whether Japan will be represented at the Olympic Games in Paris this spring or not is largely a question of money. Moreover, the question of money would not have arisen, had it not been for the disaster of last September.

The Home Department had agreed to make a substantial subsidy towards the cost of sending Japanese athletic representatives to Europe to participate in the games, but the curtailments imposed upon it by the demand for reconstruction costs have compelled it to reconsider its offer.

The Japanese Amateur athletic Association, with which rests the selection of the representatives and all other matters connected with the games, has determined, however, not to abandon hope, and is organizing a campaign to collect funds from those who are interested in sports.

In view of the growing interest of all classes of people in every form of athletics, the raising of the necessary fund is not considered a matter of serious difficulty. It is reported, that the Navy Department has already pledged a contribution of Y.20,000.

Meantime the Association is proceeding with its plans, and will hold its concluding trials in the early part of April, after which the representatives for Paris will be chosen.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Another valuable piece of Hongkong property has passed into Chinese hands. Section D of Inland Lot 339, 5,486 sq. ft., which was formerly occupied by the China Specie Bank, was sold last week to Mr. Wong Kwong-tin, the price being $225,000.

THE WAR IN SZECHUAN

Further Details of Capture of Chengtu: Escape of Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu

We are privileged to publish the following message to Shanghai from Mr. G. M. Franch, sub-agent of the British & Foreign Bible Society, at Chêngtu:—

Chêngtu, Sze., Feb. 7.

The war is at our gates now, and all the city gates have been shut up since the 3rd (Sunday).

Yang Sen's advance guard is outside the north gate and we hear that the main army is not far off. This advance has followed on a severe defeat suffered by Hsiong Keh-wu at Tungchuan, where he himself had a very narrow escape from being captured.

The firing on the north side of the city is at times quite brisk and again dies down to almost nothing. I hope that this state of affairs may not last very long. Margaret (Mr. Franck's daughter) has not been able to get out of the city to school this week, and the other city children must likewise remain within the walls."

Peking, Feb. 19.

Further foreign telegrams from Chêngtu report that Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu escaped on the 9th instant and fled in the direction of Sintsinghsien. One of the northern columns very quickly started after him and his men.

Some shells fell in the Japanese Consulate-General, but did no harm. In the city, however, many injuries were inflicted upon the people. The Northern troops at Chêngtu, as at Chungking, seem to have behaved in an orderly manner after the fall of the city.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Wu Pei-fu Ready to Apportion the Spoils of Victory

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Feb. 21.

According to the local Chinese papers, Wu Pei-fu is now sufficiently sure that his subordinates can hold Szechuan to consider apportioning the spoils of the campaign. It is said that he has already telegraphed his list of candidates to high offices and that mandates complying with his suggestions will shortly be issued.

Liu Tsen-hou is to be the military ruler and Teng Hsi-hou civil governor. Tien Sung-yao will be assistant to the military governor, Liu Hsiang commander in chief on the Tibetan border, Yang Sen Ch'uantung defence commissioner and Yuan Tsu-ming commander in chief on the Kueichow border.

A PEKING SURPRISE

From a Correspondent.

Visitors to Peking meet with many thrills and surprises. This was mine last month.

It was a dark, bleak night and the snow had just stopped falling. In a busy, dimly lighted thoroughfare the ricsha pullers with freezing hands struggled through frozen slush, and everybody but the street hawkers seemed to be hurrying to some warmer corner. Above the roll of the traffic and the peanut seller's calls, came with the wintry gusts more rhythmic sounds that as we drew nearer seemed familiar and decidedly strange in the environment of the celestial din. There was a drum—two perhaps—a cornet and something else, and the melody took one back to Old England a generation ago.

We had heard it in the Mile End road among the Coster's barrows,

"Owh yer must be a lover of the Lord
Or yer won't go to 'eaven when ye die.
No ye'r won't, no ye'r won't!!!
No yer won't!

It brought back memories of Ilfracombe beach, when the song was sung in better English. And a visit to that unique edifice the Clapton Congress Hall when a Hallelujah lassie in a poke bonnet demanded a silver coin for admittance on a Sunday night and the great brass band thrilled the thousands present with similar strains.

And here bound by the same magic spell under the same coloured flag stood on this inclement night round a lantern, half a dozen or more happy looking Chinese men, uniformed and tightly buttoned up, reproducing in tone, action and manner, in everything except the language, the wooing Evangel of General William Booth. And there around them the dirty faced, smelly crowd eagerly listening just as crowds listen to Salvationists the wide world over. And passing up Mission Street the magnificent Headquarters of the Army indicate that in many parts of China the crowds are gathering round the drum and flag and "penitent form" proving the universality of the Salvation Army methods.

DEATH SENTENCE ON KORNILOFF UPHELD

Appeal Fails in High Court, Harbin: Must Be Carried to Peking Senate

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 20.

The High Court on Monday was a scene of bustling activity, with police armed with carbines on hand everywhere. Korniloff's appeal against the sentence of death recently passed upon him was down for hearing.

The notorious bandit's lawyer, Mr. A. A. Widder, was an early arrival and awaited his client in the court-room, which would have been crowded had it not been previously ordained that the public would be refused admission.

An immense crowd awaited the arrival of the prison van, a Black Maria drawn by two black horses, which was escorted by a troop of mounted police. When the door of the vehicle was opened, a couple of armed warders descended, followed by the prisoner, chained and manacled, other warders behind. He was hurried as fast as his fetters would permit him into the Court where he was placed in the dock.

Examined by the presiding judge, Korniloff was asked a number of questions which he answered in a quiet, calm voice, as if he considered carefully what he said. He related the story of his escape and how he lived whilst at liberty. It was exactly the same story as he told the lower court. He still insisted that he had killed no one, and that his accomplice, Lomkovsy, was responsible for the murders.

In an impassioned speech on behalf of the prisoner, Mr. Widder pointed out that although the death sentence could not be imposed on foreigners not enjoying extraterritorial rights it nevertheless could not apply in Korniloff's case. Even in Soviet Russia the death sentence was not imposed save in case of high treason. According to the new Chinese ordinance also, the death penalty could not be imposed on foreigners not enjoying extraterritorial rights in whose countries the extreme penalty had been abolished.

Mr. Widder went on to say that there were no witnesses who could prove that Korniloff had murdered any of the persons who met their death after his escape. The Court could not regard crimes committed by the prisoner before his escape, he having already been sentenced to life imprisonment with hard labour for these offences.

The Judges retired to consider their verdict. On resuming their seat 15 minutes later they announced that they had dismissed the appeal, at the same time informing the prisoner's advocate that he was at liberty to lodge a further appeal to the Peking Senate within 10 days.

Korniloff remained unmoved on hearing that the appeal had been dismissed. He was hurried back by his guards to the prison van, where a large crowd had been waiting to hear the verdict.

The Cabinet Office at Peking was a hungry place at noon on Monday when the threats of the cook that unless he be paid, there would be no food, were carried out. Because of this state, quietness reigned throughout the morning.

SOVIET AND JAPAN IN DISPUTE

Russian Journalist Declines to Promise Not to Practise Propaganda in Japan

Peking, Feb. 21.

Interviewed this morning with regard to the report that the Japanese correspondents at Moscow had been given notice by the Bolshevik authorities to leave Russia, the Japanese Legation stated that as the result of the Dairen Conference in May, 1921, it was agreed between the Japanese and the Russians that a Rosta correspondent should be allowed to proceed to Tokio and remain there as the representative of his agency on condition that he gave an assurance that he would abstain from propaganda, while Japanese correspondents should be permitted to proceed to Moscow. Mr. Osnedenski, the correspondent nominated by the Rosta Agency, gave the required assurances and went to Tokio, and Japanese correspondents went to Moscow.

Some three weeks ago Mr. Slepak, Rosta correspondent at Peking, applied at the Japanese Legation for a visé to go to Tokio to succeed Mr. Osnedenski. This application was supported by Mr. Karakhan. The Japanese Government made no objection then or since, but drew attention to the necessity for Mr. Slepak to give similar assurance regarding propaganda.

The Japanese Legation last night received a communication from Mr. Slepak saying that he was unable to comply as regards the assurance because the Japanese Government did not exact similar assurances from correspondents of other nationalities. It was intimated that this reply was in accordance with instructions from the headquarters of the Rosta Agency at Moscow.

THE VLADIVOSTOK CONSULATE.

The Japanese Legation has had no notice of the action reported to have been taken towards the Japanese correspondents by the Moscow Foreign Office, which has thus seen fit to deal arbitrarily with a question and cause the facts to be misrepresented. Mr. Slepak was not denied permission to enter Japan any more than Mr. Osnedenski, who has been there for some years.

Recently the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok was given notice by the Bolshevik authorities there that he could not continue to exercise the functions of Consul, as Russia had attempted to open negotiations with Japan on several subjects, such as recognition and fishing rights, but Japan had given no response. In this respect pecular misapprehension was also displayed, for Japan had suggested the appointment of a Soviet representative in Japan who would carry on the duties of consul. To this communication the Soviet Government did not reply.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MAIL CONTROVERSY SETTLED.

The "Asahi" learns that the mail controversy has been settled, the Vladivostok Post Office accepting Japanese commercial mail after censorship by the Russian Trade Bureau.

Note: The Japanese Post Office was informed a few days ago that transportation of mails to Siberia would not be continued.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Threat of Suspension of Mail Matter at Vladivostok

Tokio, Feb. 19.

The unofficial notice sent by the Postmaster in Vladivostok to the Postmaster in Tsuruga that the former would no longer accept mail matter from Japan, alleging instructions given him to that effect by his superior officials, has created considerable stir both here and in Vladivostok.

Officials here state that until official notification of the suspension of mail reaches them, letters and other communications will go forward as usual.

Should the bags be held up by the Russian authorities, an attempt will be made to maintain connexions with Japanese residents in Siberia through the Chinese post office. Meantime the various Departments concerned are discussing what steps should be taken to preserve their communications.

In Vladivostok, on the other hand, Japanese have jointly resolved to appeal to the Russian authorities for the maintenance of the postal service to and from Japan, stating that it is in their opinion one of the best methods of facilitating the resumption of full relations between the two countries.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE OFFICIAL ARRESTED IN VLADIVOSTOK.

Tokio, Feb. 27.

Semi-official Foreign Office advices confirm a news despatch from Vladivostok reporting the arrest of Captain Matsui, a member of the General Staff. The Russian authorities are reported to, have searched Captain Matsui's residence yesterday and to have arrested him without explanation. They are also stated to have arrested two interpreters, Messrs. Hirai and Mita.

The War Office reports that it has not been advised of the incident.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BABY-STEALERS NOW EXECUTED

Leader Whose Refusal to Part with $1 Cost Him His Life

From Our Own Correspondent.

Haichow, Ku., Feb. 13.

An interesting sequel can now be written to the statement published in your issue of January 16, regarding the arrest of a Custom House official on the charge of kidnapping children. This sequel might well be headed "Six Lives for a Dollar" and brings into prominence the characteristic of Chinese criminals to blurt out suddenly and unexpectedly the whole truth.

A man was arrested on suspicion and thinking he could easily secure his liberty wrote a letter to the small official above alluded to, stating his difficulty and asking the latter's aid in effecting his release. He also hired a special messenger to carry the letter, promising the carrier that the official would give him a dollar for the trip.

The letter was duly delivered to the official who tore it into bits, dismissed the bearer curtly with the remark that he would have nothing to do with thieves and refused to pay the dollar. Whether he was afraid that action on behalf of the prisoner might incriminate him or whether he was glad to see a possible witness against him put out of the way, he made the greatest mistake of his life is not paying the dollar.

The bearer returned to the prisoner reviling the meanness of the official and faithfully reporting to the prisoner the accusation of thief. The prisoner's anger flamed and he declared with fury that he had appealed to this official as head of his band, and he went further and implicated others. On this evidence proceedings were instituted and events moved speedily: a merchant in the neighbouring city and this custom official were found guilty of the charge of directing the movements of a band of kidnappers, four of whom were caught. All six were executed a few days ago. Many efforts were made by powerful gentry to get them out on bail but in the face of their established guilt Gen. Bei Bao-san was inexorable. The only comment heard is on the stinginess of the man who for the sake of a dollar lost his own life and that of five others.

We have just heard of the death of "Big Nosed Hsu," the chief of the robbers that have made life miserable for the officials along the border of Shantung and Kiangsu. He was reported as wounded in the leg in a fight with Gen. Bei's men in December and was supposed to have gone south to nurse his wounds. We hear that he was captured in southern Shantung and beheaded. Gen. Bei said that Hsu had 700 men in his band when the December fight occurred. An important factor for disorder is thus eliminated.

A TSINGTAO DISGRACE

Incoming Ships Invaded by Advertising Touts of Disorderly Houses

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 20.

One of the abuses which the foreign community here considers the inmates of foreign brothels do away with is the practice of the inmates of foreign brothels in boarding incoming ships for the purpose of distributing the cards of their establishments. It is considered here that this practice is degrading to the prestige of the white race.

The community considers it necessary that the various steamship companies should request their captains to forbid their ships being boarded by this class of people. It is felt that if brothels run by foreigners must exist, then they should be conducted in an unostentatious manner.

One unpleasant side of this brothel business is that girls are lured away from their homes in Harbin and brought here for the alleged purpose of serving in cafés as "dancing partners." Upon their arrival, they receive a rude awakening. They invariably discover that dancing is not the only thing demanded of them. They then assuage their sorrows in cocaine.

If any should want to quit, a bill for travelling expenses is forthwith presented, together with a demand for compensation for breach of contract.

The position of the girls is hopeless. They can get no satisfaction from the Chinese authorities. The brothel keepers seem to have quite a pull. Some official somewhere must be making money out of the whole business.

AN EARTHQUAKE AT TSINGTAO

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 20.

Guests at the Grand Hotel and residents throughout the city were chased out of their beds last night by an earthquake that was felt with varying intensity throughout Tsingtao. According to Mr. T. Irumata, the chief of the observatory here, the shock began at 11.07 o'clock and lasted for three minutes and two seconds according to the seismograph, but the average person felt is for only 40 seconds. Chandeliers shook and light-weight goods fell off the shelves in several shops. The centre of the earthquake is not yet ascertainable but according to Mr. Irumata it was not in Japan. It is reported that the shock was particularly severe in the Laoshan district.

It is seldom that Tsingtao is visited by an earthquake, the last one occurring some three years ago.

Superstitious Chinese attach considerable importance to it.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE BISHOP POZZONI

An Imposing Ceremony and a Striking Tribute

Hongkong, Feb. 22.

The funeral of Bishop Pozzoni was a very striking tribute and was attended by large numbers of people, including representatives of the Governor, Sir Reginald Stubbs, the General Officer Commanding, Major-General Sir John Fowler, and the Commodore, Captain Henry E. Grace, the Anglican Bishop of Victoria, the Anglican Cathedral Chaplain, the Colonial Secretary, Executive and Legislative Councillors, Members of the Consular Corps, naval and military officers, and other notabilities and members of the Irish, French, American, Spanish and Portuguese missions. The hearse was drawn by a detachment from the Italian gunboat Calabria.

Thousands of students from the Catholic schools and convents and boy-scouts were present and the Chinese congregation were strongly represented. The service at the grave-side, at which the Bishop of Macao officiated, was a most impressive ceremony.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE LOAN A "NATIONAL SHAME"

Flotation Another Excuse to Attack Govt.: Storm of Protest throughout Japan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Feb. 14.

The storm that has burst from financial and commercial circles throughout the country and from the Press, with regard to the loan for Yen 550,000,000 just negotiated by Japan's financial commissioners in London and New York, has been of an unprecedented nature. No pains are being taken by those dissatisfied with the terms of the flotation to censure the authorities or to disguise their disgust with the manner in which the Japanese Government pitted the financial strength of this Empire against the capitalists of Lombard Street and Wall Street.

The purposes for which the loan were floated were two-fold. One was to obtain funds for reconstruction and the other was to redeem the pound sterling loan which matures next year and at the same time to regulate the exchange rate. Although the sum raised is Yen 550,000,000—namely Gold $150,000,000 in America and £25,000,000 in London—no less than Yen 350,000,000 must be set aside for the conversion of loans in pounds sterling which matures in 1925. The rate of interest of this pound sterling loan is 4 per cent. and financiers here are naturally asking why the authorities floated a loan bearing interest of from 6 to 7 per cent. for the purpose.

UNITED IN CONDEMNATION.

The Press is unanimous in condemning the loan, declaring that the conditions attached are such that Japan's financial prestige has been gravely affected and she is now regarded in the world's money markets as a third-rate country.

The first loan Japan ever made, after she emerged from her almost hermetically-sealed isolation, it is interesting to recall, was 55 years ago, Great Britain accommodating the new fledgling into the comity of nations with the necessary money. The rate of interest was 9 per cent. and this was gradually brought down to 4 per cent. at the time of the Japan-China war. When Japan and Russia came to grips, the rate rose to 6 per cent. but went down again to between 4 and 4½ per cent.

When the interest that Japan will have to pay British and American financiers is totalled, it will be seen that this country is paying so much as 13 per cent., a rate that evokes no surprise when the Japanese papers call it a "national shame."

REASONS FOR HIGH RATES.

What was the cause of the exorbitant rates of interest that Japan was forced to concede? Mr. Shoda, Minister of Finance, attributes the disadvantages in the conditions to the drop in the quotation of Japanese bonds which resulted after the September disaster, to the apprehension caused by the severe seismic shocks that rocked the main island again on January 15 (during which time informal conversations were proceeding between the Japanese commercial commissioners in New York and London and the financiers of Wall Street and Lombard Street), and to the report that another destructive earthquake would paralyze the land again. The Press refuses to accept this explanation, citing the fact that the stability of Japan's national finance and the financial footing she retains in the international money market would more than counter-effect the rumours that are said to have terrified foreign investors. The unpopularity of the present Cabinet, and the growing bitterness that has been recently manifested by the rank and file of the nation towards the privileged classes, they maintain, are the real cause that have made fatal the flotation of the loans, thereby injecting domestic political wranglings into the question, and coupling this with a request that the Cabinet shall resign.

The total amount necessary for reconstruction and rehabilitation of the devastated regions has been fixed at Yen 1,300,000,000, to be floated over a period of six years. Japan's outstanding foreign debts total Yen 1,320,000,000, all of which bear interest rates ranging from 4 to 4½ per cent., none bearing interest higher than this.

Just after the Russo-Japanese war, when Japan was less prosperous than she is to-day, foreign loans were raised at a much lower rate of interest. The Bank of Japan now has reserve funds to the amount of Yen 1,050,000,000, besides Yen 445,000,000 reserved abroad. If the specie owned by the Government is added to this amount, the total comes to Yen 1,650,000,000. Such being the financial standing of the country, the papers conclude that the loan business has been badly bungled.

FALSE NATIONAL PRIDE.

The fact that the Netherlands Government was able to float an East India loan last November, in the New York market, with interest at 6½ per cent., and the Argentine a loan this year with interest of 6.3/10 per cent., both more favourable than the terms accorded Japan, is the reason why the Press and financiers in this country declare that Japan is "being disdained by foreign investors" and that "she is regarded now as a third-class power so far as her financial standing is concerned."

It is admitted on all hands that Japan might have floated loans to the extent she has already done, or even to a larger figure, at much more advantageous rates if she had offered some form of security, for instance, the profits arising from the tobacco monopoly. That false national pride, a sentiment that has to be reckoned with very much in Japan, that will not admit a wound although it is patent, prevented the authorities from offering security. In avoiding this "shame," the country has had to pay the high interest rates that foreign capitalists have demanded.

"PREFERRED FLOWER TO FOOD."

How the capitalists of Japan view the loans is best illustrated by a conversation which I had with Mr. K. Seshita, manager of the Mitsubishi Bank, one of the largest financial organizations in the Empire, and with Mr. Y. Ono, Governor of the Hypothec Bank of Japan, the latter a semi-official institution.

"Burdens akin to those that result from usury have been heaped on the nation through the blundering tactics of the Government," he said as he paced his magnificently furnished office, puffing viciously at a cigarette. "I feel like hauling down the flag of my firm and retiring. The terms are absolutely disgraceful. A second-rate power could have done far better. The Government refused to give securities and is now paying heavily for it. What they have done is to prefer a flower to food when in hunger."

THE REAL PROBLEM.

Mr. Ono, being head of a semi-official institution, was more discreet, but it was evident that his private financial conscience was warring with his official loyalty "Of course," he said, "one must realize the difficulty the Government has had in floating the loans owing to the unstable financial conditions throughout the world as the result of the war, but, yet, 7 per cent. is a terrible burden to saddle the nation with at this time. The loans will, directly and indirectly, increase Japan's financial status and alleviate the domestic money market for a time, but the real problem confronting us to-day is to get rid of the large influx of foreign imports. I do not see how the loan can effectively aid in solving this aspect of our financial ills."

The foreign investor in Japanese bonds has really secured an excellent investment. Japan's credit is unquestioned, and her bonds are secure as those of any other nation. The security is splendid and the interest rates more than the most sanguine perhaps expected. This is proved by the rapid manner in which the loans were accorded a ready reception both in London and in New York.

How Japan will use the present loan will make all the difference to her future financial prospects. If the money is "spent" those in the know point out, then her condition afterwards, perhaps before the close of the year, will be worse than it is to-day. If it is directed into channels of productivity, the loan, despite the admitted flaws in the terms, will yet prove to be a blessing to the Empire struggling to retrieve itself from the ashes of ruin.

CUPID IN NINGPO

Famous Beauty to Wed Warrior's Son

From a Correspondent.

Ningpo, Feb. 20.

The announcement which it is my pleasant duty to make has already afforded the keenest delight to the foreign community of Ningpo, and will come, I can confidently predict, as a most welcome surprise to many in all parts of China. I have to proclaim the forthcoming wedlock of Mr. Algernon Reginald Worples, fifth son of Colonel Worples, who recently commanded the West River Cycle Corps, and now resides at The Myrtles, Streatham, and Miss Janet Chete, of Bison, Ill. Mr. Chete is, of course, famous to all as the senior partner in the great Commission Agency, Chete, Chete, Chete, and Welsh, while Mrs. Chete is the genial Chairman of the Chekiang Needlework Guild. The exact date of the ceremony has not as yet been published, but there is a rumour abroad that the Twenty-ninth of this month will be ultimately selected, it being hinted indeed that perhaps Miss Janet has been slightly more instrumental in the engineering of this happy event than her future spouse. However this may be, the affair has aroused keenest interest as the young couple are universally known and esteemed, and for over 30 years have done much to enliven the various social and athletic activities, by means of which we seek from time to time to chase away dull care. Anyhow, bully for them and the best of good luck. (Bosnian papers please copy).

WHO SAID ARMADILLO?

Writing as I am from Ningpo, let me also take this opportunity of exploding once and for all a fallacy which a correspondent has recently sought to promulgate through the medium of these columns. I refer to the foolish, in fact puerile, controversy on the subject of armadilloes. I was myself a near witness of the incident described, and was able without difficulty and beyond all question of doubt to identify the animal as a White-tufted Terrapin, (turtur albuminoid), more common perhaps in the Tahu Lake district, but a sufficiently frequent visitor to these parts as to render "Nature Lover's" mistake inexcusable. I think and hope that this will terminate the whole discussion, as with my long experience of zoology, I may without boasting claim for my testimony on such subjects an indisputable authenticity. With regard to "Nature Lover," it will, I think, be more charitable to suspect him of a facetious insincerity than to credit him with such crass ignorance.

A QUIET CORNER IN HONAN

Lao Yang-jen's Former Stronghold Brigand-free

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueichow, Ho., Feb. 21.

Whilst most parts of China seem to be in such shocking state of unrest, it is a pleasure to be able to write from one place where the prospects for a quiet year are better than they were a year ago. Twelve months ago Gen. Wang's troops had not been long in the district and they were taking some time in settling down. Robbers were very active in the country and burnings and kidnappings near the city were of nightly occurrence. To crown all Lao Yang-jen and his scoundrels had just been appointed to this section and people's hearts were full of fear. Now he has come and gone the robber bands have been dispersed or have given up their arms and we can sleep at nights without the constant firing of guns in the neighbouring villages to disturb our rest. The troops, moreover, seem to be better behaved, so people are able to take fresh heart again.

The chief brigand left in this district after the departure of Lao Yang-jen was a worthy of the name of Wang Mao. After several engagements with the troops in the neighbourhood of Chechang, he decided that he had had enough for the time being so he accepted terms and gave up his arms. If only the ability and nerve he showed as a brigand can be turned to good use he might become an asset to the country yet.

We had a good rain two weeks ago which was badly needed. It was enough to save the winter crops, but more is still needed. The dollar now changes for 202 coppers which is not making it easy for workers who are paid in coppers. The ricsha fare from the railway station to the city, for instance, is still 50 coppers, as it was when the dollar changed for 170 coppers.

We are glad to say, by the way, that this fine road of three miles in length, built by the Famine Committee, is being kept in very good shape entirely by the Chinese themselves. When so many things are not very satisfactory it is certainly encouraging to see them using their time and money to this good purpose and we are informed that Gen. Wang Wu-wei, our present military commander, subscribed $°,000 to this work and has taken interest in having it carried on. We must confess that when we were helping in the building of this good metal road we had considerable misgivings as to how it would fare in a short time. It is very pleasing to be able to report that, owing to the care expended on it, it is as good to-day as when it was built two years ago in spite of no small amount of heavy traffic.

FREEBOOTERS ON KIANGSI BORDER

Prospects of Further Spoliation and Then Fighting Again

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kanchow, Ki., Feb., 15.

The new year has come and gone. It was a rather sad one for many, as, for some unexplained reason, the Northern soldiers were impressing coolies right up to the last day of the festival. It is difficult to understand why.

Two kinds of press gangs were at work, one accompanied by a policeman was the real one; when they put their hand on you there was no way out, you had to go. The other was an unwarranted gang impressing all and sundry, especially those who looked not at all like carriers. This gang were after money, and a few dollars ever sufficient to obtain a man's release.

Since the New year troops have been sent to the border, where there are now quite a number of "scrap" units, though nothing worthy of repelling an attack if made in earnest by the South.

The "Robin Hood" of the border, to wit Brig.-Gen. Kao, late of the 3rd. Brigade, is now engaged in harassing the towns and villages near the border. A few days ago he made a raid on a market called Peitou and collected as much money as could be found.

News from Lungnanhsien says that they are expecting a visit from the Brigadier. Thus the people near the border live in hourly dread of a visit from these unwelcome friends, though they are daily being bled by their protectors.

Numerous of merchants are looking to this year's trade to put them on their feet again, as many have not recovered from the losses caused by the Southerners' visit two years ago, but if they will refrain from again visiting this city for during 1924 many will feel obliged. But the amount of warlike preparation going on lately almost forbids anticipation of a peaceful year. Boats are still kept in readiness for any emergency, and the boat population as well as the merchants feel this very much. On the whole the outlook is not favourable.

PRESIDENT Tsao Kun and his present Cabinet are understood to be proposing the establishment of an office in Shanghai, the main work of which will be to endeavour to bring about internal peace in China.

YANG SEN VICTOR OF SZECHUAN

Personal Impressions of a New Force: Athlete Pianist and Humourist

By a Chungking Correspondent.

Gen. Yang Sen, the lieutenant in Szechuan of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, is again reported to have captured the provincial capital, Chêngtu, which, if true, means that practically the whole of Szechuan comes once more under the control of the North. It is reported also that Yang Sen has received the personal surrender of Hsiong Keh-wu and his henchman Tan Mow-hsing. This seems too good to be true. Hsiong and Tan are the stormy petrels of Szechuan. Their movements have always presaged the coming storm. If they have surrendered unconditionally their plight must have been a bad one indeed and the backbone of Szechuanese independence is broken. It seems probable, however, that behind their surrender lies another dark brood of plots and intrigue which will be reared all too soon to wreck again the hopes of the peace party in China's richest and most distressful province. How is the observer of Yang's victory to say what are the chances of the future, knowing the possibility that Hsiong and Tan did not surrender at discretion? He is likely to go far astray unless he is acquainted with the personality of Yang Sen himself and it will be interesting to recall some of the traits which foreigners have observed in this rising protégé of Wu Pei-fu.

IN CORPORE SANO.

Yang Sen has the aspect and bearing of a dapper Japanese Colonel of Infantry. He has the poise of a proved leader of men and his manners are good without being in any way effusive. His glance can be direct and even piercing at times but in general it suffers from that suspicion of shiftiness which seems inevitable in all China's leading men of action. His age is about 35 and he looks even younger. He usually affects a kind of Norfolk jacket, undress uniform of dark brown which matches his dark eyes. He keeps himself in the pink of condition and possesses that quality which is indispensable in a successful leader of men, physical courage. He neither smokes nor drinks and his private morals are unexceptional. He once remarked to the writer on the deterioration of the fibre and driving power of his rival, Hsiong, a heavy drinker and bon viveur, and referred with pride and I may add an unusual lapse of his usual modesty to his own personal habits.

HUMOUR AND THE PIANO.

Up to two years ago Yang Sen was living in comparative obscurity at Luchow and came under the influence of local missionaries who made some impression on his character. He seems to be at ease in the company of foreigners and to enjoy any opportunity of mental activity. He loves to spend hours in the International Institute's museum at Chungking playing like a boy with mechanical toys and models of modern engineering works. One of his accomplishments is playing hymn tunes on the piano, with childlike absorption and ingenuousness. "Nearer my God to Thee!" is his favourite—it appeals to his soldier heart and reminds him of the perils of his calling. At a Committee meeting of a public institution in Chungking some time ago, he suddenly got bored with the length of the proceedings and betook himself to his missionary host's piano and broke into "A few more years shall roll." The Committee took the hint and cut their business short. Encouraged by this success Yang Sen rubbed it in with the unsolicited encore "Days and moments quickly flying." There was no flicker of humour on his face, but who shall say his subtle oriental mind did not intend the hint. There is hope for China if her leaders are really not devoid of humour.

GEN. FENG YU-HSIANG'S IRONSIDES

A Visit to Tunghsien and Nanyuan: Soldiers Whom the People Welcome: Military Efficiency and Religious Zeal

From a Correspondent in Chihli

A recent trip to the Capital afforded a long anticipated opportunity for seeing at close quarters the troops of the famous Christian General, Feng Yu-hsiang. One finds in certain quarters, and among superficial observers of the kaleidoscopic changes and regroupings of Chinese political factions at the present time, a tendency to doubt the sincerity of this powerful military chief, who after a short tenure of the Tuchunate of Honan, was transferred a little over a year ago to the important post which he now occupies. His drastic treatment of a notorious bandit leader and enemy, following the victorious campaign of Wu Pei-fu in 1922, caused an estrangement between him and his superior, which, according to popular report, has only been healed within the past few months. Fierce, and in the opinion of many, justifiable criticism was aroused by his share last June in the political coup which resulted in the expulsion of Li Yuan-hung from the Presidential Palace. It will be remembered that on this occasion vigorous protests against his conduct were despatched to General Feng from the Christians of his native province, Anhui, and from prominent Christian leaders in other centres. These are said to have been much taken to heart by the General, whose strongest line of defence was that as a soldier he had been acting under the orders of his chief, and obviously was not in a position to play a lone hand. But whatever be the facts of the case, it will doubtless be of interest to some readers to hear a first-hand report of things seen in the two big military camps near Peking, where Feng's men have for the past year, been training with extraordinary keenness for the next trial of strength with the Manchurian warlord.

By appointment, the writer travelled down to Tunghsien by rail to visit an old friend, Brigadier General Chang Tzu-chiang, Commander of the 7th Mixed Brigade, encamped in the barracks within the city walls. The camp is built upon the site of the old Imperial Granaries, which fell into decay after the rice tribute fleet from the south discontinued their tortuous journeys north by the Grand Canal, and the grain was conveyed to Tientsin by steamer. As I drove up to the General's quarters we passed a long stretch of "playing fields," where several keenly contested games of football were in progress. The soldiers were clearly in excellent physical condition, with their hearts in the game. There was no aimless kicking of the ball about by mobs of players ignorant of the rules, but the teams were intelligent and efficient. In contrast to the average military camp in China to-day, there was a complete absence of loafers, the sentries were smart, well set-up soldiers, and the buildings were in excellent repair. One striking feature which immediately caught the eye was the profusion of moral maxims, and scriptural quotations, inscribed in large black characters upon every whitewashed wall within the barracks.

PHYSICAL VIGOUR.

General Chang had been out all day at a conference with his chief at Nanyuan, 70 li away, and did not arrive in camp until 8 p.m., but in the interval one was entertained by a staff officer, Col. Sung and one of the chaplains of the establishment, who had graduated in theology at Yen Ching University, Peking, last year. It was a bitterly cold night, and one wondered what the condition of the General would be after his ride of nearly 50 miles, and a long day's conference. If he was exhausted by this exposure he did not show any signs of it, in fact he appeared as fresh as paint, and ready for a long evening's talk. We had much to discuss as it was three years since our last interview at the funeral of his father in a village on the Chihli plain. He was then a Colonel, but in the intervening years hard service on many a battlefield and in all kinds of tight corners had left their mark on him, though still a young man in the early forties.

The General was obviously proud of his Brigade, and spoke of the hard training which they were undergoing in long arduous route marches of a hundred li, two or three times a week. This is an amazing feat at any time for Chinese soldiers, whose straggling propensities are much in evidence even on the shortest march. But here were men in the depth of a North China winter, exposed to piercing blasts, prepared to face bitter cold and fatigue on iron rations at the call of their trusted leader, so as to keep fit for all emergencies. Similar tests of endurance are the order of the day for the whole of Gen. Feng's Division stationed at Nanyuan, and the discipline among these troops is surely something unique in the military annals of the country. Officers share the hardships and rigorous training of their men, which undoubtedly accounts for the esprit de corps which strikes every observer.

SUNDAY SERVICE.

After a shake-down in Gen. Chang's private quarters, where I occupied a room stacked high with enormous quantities of educational literature for the troops, I was awakened soon after six on Sunday morning, and found that the camp was astir with unmistakeable signs of soldiers in neighbouring buildings at their devotional exercises. Subsequently I learned that groups of men were meeting for Bible study all over the camp, a strange phenomenon in any country of the world. Soon after the General led the way to a large hall at the east end of the camp, where a Christian service was to be held. On arrival there we found a packed audience of some 600 officers and N. C. O.s all seated on serried ranks of benches. They sprang to attention as the General entered.

He accompanied the speaker and the chaplain on the platform, and with military promptness gave out the opening hymn. It was "Onward Christian Soldiers," and though one has heard the famous hymn sung by crowded congregations in Christian lands far away, it had surely never been sung with such sincerity and thrilling effect as by those Chinese soldiers. One thought instinctively of the great Protector's doughty heroes singing their psalms in the early dawn and striking terror into the hearts of their Cavalier foes at the outset of many desperate battles.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CONTRAST.

It was an extraordinary experience to look into the faces of those hundreds of clean, alert, well set-up Chinese officers. Hard things have been said of recent years in the foreign Press of China and, in most cases, deservedly, of the make-believe soldiers, "uniformed coolies," who swagger and slouch in the public eye, bully their fellow-countrymen, and who have made their profession a by-word of contempt and loathing to all observers. But here was a miraculous transformation, a veritable apotheosis of the despised grey uniform, disciplined Chinese soldiers, and withal men of real soldierly bearing. They listened with eager attention to half-an-hour's address, and indeed took up the points of the speaker in a fashion that was somewhat disconcerting. After a passage dealing with the depressing condition of China to-day, and the need for strong men of moral courage to stem the tide of corruption which threatens to engulf the whole nation, the speaker asked if it were not the case that what China needed most was men of absolute faith in and allegiance to Jesus Christ as the Saviour of individuals and of society. A spontaneous and shattering response of "Yes" came instantly from the packed congregation with such a volume of sound as to rattle the windows. This happened three times during the address.

After a return to the camp for breakfast I was privileged two hours later to attend another service in the same hall, this time crammed to the doors with over 700 men, all of whom were to be baptized on the following Sunday. Nearly a thousand men, I was told, have been under instruction with a view to baptism during the past year, and the hall was too small to admit all those who wished to be present. Like their officers the men were fine specimens of the Northern type of Chinese, tall, wiry, and obviously as fit as fiddles. Though 90 per cent. of them hailed from village homes in Chihli and Honan, there was nothing of the clumsy vacant-looking yokel about these fellows, who had been transformed by regular habits and a strict military regimen into keen intelligent soldiers.

LIVES OF INDUSTRY.

While wearers of the familiar grey uniform in every other part of China are battening upon the resources of the locality, and making the lives of the people a burden with their cruel exactions and high-handed roguery, the model camps in Nanyuan and Tunghsien present an extraordinary contrast. Here there are no drones, no opium-smoking, commanding officers who regale you with apochryphal stories of their military exploits, no swash-buckling bullies, clothed in a little brief authority, determined to exact the utmost from the subservient and stupid people.

The average Chinese military camp has a depressing effect upon the visitor, but these which guard the ancient capital are hives of industry in which the slacker must have a very uncomfortable time. There are workshops in which the men are taught weaving, carpentry and other useful trades against the day of their discharge from the Army. All the towels used in the camp are made on their own looms, and there is strict economy in all expenditure. There is a thorough education scheme in operation and all are expected to learn to read. It was amusing to hear that education is not only compulsory for the soldiers, but those wives and families, resident in the vicinity of the camps, are all registered and facilities provided for the enlightenment of young and old alike. If an officer's wife and family propose to take up their abode in Tunghsien or Nanyuan, they are given a week in which to settle down in the new quarters, after which every member of the family is supposed to enter upon a course of instruction during each day. If the General's orders are not carried out, the families are packed off home without ceremony.

THE NANYUAN CAMP.

Two days after the visit to Tunghsien I was fortunate in seeing over the great camp at Nanyuan, where Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang and his 30,000 men are lodged. It was, to my great regret, not possible to see the famous Christian leader, who was out of camp, but I was received by the senior chaplain—there are five Chinese chaplains on the establishment—and courteously shown all the interesting features of this model military depôt.

A cold 30 li motor drive along a very indifferent earth road brought one to the village of Nanyuan, a prosperous-looking market centre. There were few soldiers in evidence until one approached the exit on the south, where a strong guard of sentries blocked the way to the aviation ground, and a long low line of buildings to the southeast. The Nanyuan camp is on a very big scale, and appeals to the imagination. Crossing the wide stretch of plain to the east of the hangars one saw in the distance on the left the simple white monument presented to Gen. Feng by his troops in memory of his father, who died many years ago before the son became a power in the land. The General demurred to accepting the gift as a tribute to his father, but declared that he would set it up in their camp in memory of their fallen comrades who perished in the Civil War in 1922. Upon the monument are inscribed their names in clear lettering. The simplicity of the memorial is very striking, and the pure white marble stands out vividly from the dull monotonous drab of the plain, at once an inspiration and a challenge to the loyalty of the soldiers.

THE SOLDIERS' BANK.

Gen. Feng's headquarters are about a mile to the south of Nanyuan village. They lie in the centre of a long line of barracks, commodious, solidly built, and extending for quite half a mile both east and west. Immediately opposite the headquarters stands a familiar looking Y.M.C.A. hut that might have been transferred bodily from Picardy. This was my destination, and it did not take long to discover my friend, the chaplain, who started me off at once on a tour of inspection. After meeting several members of the staff, we visited in turn the military prison and the Camp Bank. As was to be expected there were few men undergoing incarceration. They are kept so busily employed in every hour of the day that there is little or no time for mischief, and they can work off their superfluous spirits on the football field or in the fine open-air gymnasium. It was interesting to hear the chaplain contrast the conditions of life for the villagers of Nanyuan under the benevolent rule of Feng Yu-hsiang, and that of his predecessor Chang Tso-lin, whose Manchurian braves had given the natives of the country-side a bitter taste of military despotism and arrogant power. A critic may suggest that this was a bit of subtle propaganda for the foreigner, but the record of Feng's troops, and their unfailing consideration for the welfare of the people in Hunan and Honan before their arrival in the Capital heightened the effect of a statement that whereas the people in other days were harassed and oppressed by all kinds of petty exactions—"stealing the shoes from the peasants" was the expression used—they can now pass their days and nights in peace and contentment. Formerly doors had to be kept securely barred against foraging intruders, and even then nothing was safe, whereas now the population can sleep o'nights with open doors—a phrase reminiscent of the golden age in Chinese history. Needless to say all brothels and gambling dens have been swept clean from the environs of the camp, and the strictest discipline is enforced after dark.

The military bank is a striking feature of Gen. Feng's domain. Every soldier has an account and is expected to deposit therein his monthly pay retaining only $1 per month for personal expenses. There are facilities for despatching savings as desired to home addresses in all the northern provinces, and the regular arrival of such proofs of filial piety and consideration for the old folks evokes grateful astonishment in villages all over the plain. That a soldier should be able to forward remittances with unfailing regularity to his native village is a phenomenon that gives rise to universal praise among the thrifty farming population who have been accustomed to regard themselves as the natural prey of the devastating hordes in grey uniform.

PREPARING FOR CIVIL LIFE.

But perhaps the most impressive sight to the visitor at Nanyuan is the enormous area under cultivation by the industrious troops under Gen. Feng's wise and far-seeing rule. No one knows better than he, who has himself risen from the ranks, the tremendous problem of China's disbanded soldiery. Bandits or useful respectable citizens are the twin alternatives and the splendid achievements of the General in establishing workshops and industrial schools, as well as the wide stretches of neat allotments bordering the camp at Nanyuan are a remarkable testimony to a keen, constructive, patriotic mind brought to bear upon one of the desperate diseases of the social fabric to-day. In conclusion, at Nanyuan as in Tunghsien, but perhaps to a greater degree, the eye is rivetted by the stirring exhortations in gigantic characters fully six feet high which are emblazoned upon the long whitewashed walls of the camp. These reveal with irresistible force the spirit of the distinguished leader, whose rise to power is a significant portent amid the welter of Chinese political life since the establishment of the republic.

With military brevity, like the pistol shots of clear ringing words of command on parade, the soldiers are ceaselessly reminded as they march in and out of barracks of the need to "be watchful," "Be prepared," "Rouse yourselves," "Exert your strength to the utmost," and "Fight for the Republic."

NO WORK NO FOOD.

But the motto that will live longest in the memory is the warning significantly inscribed on a wall to the left of the road soon after one enters the camp. "Pu Kung, pu shih." (No work, no food). Here is the panacea for China's hordes of parasitic braves, who from Tuchun to private are sucking the life blood of the nation. And may it not be that we have in Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang the man of destiny, the incorruptible leader, for whom the nation waits with wistful expectation?

LADY MISSIONARY WOUNDED

Bayonet Thrust from Szechuan Soldier-Bandit: Second Outrage on River

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chengtu, Feb. 1.

Local newspapers report that during the looting of Chuhsien by Gen. Chen Fu-min's troops Miss Allibone, of the China Inland Mission, received a bayonet wound in the leg from a soldier. Some days previously several lady members of the Canadian Methodist Mission, proceeding by steamer from Luchow to Chungking, were carried off by bandits. They paid $400 to their captives and were released.

The troops at Chuhsien attacked the C.I.M. church and ladies' residence, looking for silver and other valuables. Miss Allibone the lady missionary in charge was attacked by a soldier with a bayonet and wounded in the leg because she seemed to the brigands a little tardy in revealing the hiding place of the valuables.

Thus the situation in the province is daily becoming more serious, and increasing evidence is revealing that the Lincheng incident shows the fall in foreign prestige, and that it is going to be repeated many times again in various forms. This province was never worse for brigandage than at the present time. The secret societies are stronger than ever, and are in such power that they control the magistrates and law courts in most places.

The Canadian Methodist Mission ladies were journeying by steamer to Luchow from Chungking for conference when they were attacked by bandits. The Captain was compelled to pay $200 to effect their release. Nearing a rapid, the Captain found the vessel so heavily loaded (rumour says with ammunition) that he was forced to ask the passengers, foreign and Chinese, to get out and walk round the rapid. While doing this they were accosted by a second band of armed ruffians who decided to march the whole party into the hills and hold them for ransom. Fortunately for the ladies they shortly encountered the first party that held them up, and being larger than the second gang, attacked and drove them off and released the ladies for a further consideration of $400, which they were glad to pay.

Still the preparations go on apace for Chinese New Year, and the poor distracted people still hope for a quiet time to celebrate. The business men are in dire straits. The paper dollar issued by Hsiong Keh-wu has gone down to 20 cents on the dollar.

ROUND-THE-WORLD FLIGHT

Peking, Feb. 25.

In connexion with the projected round the world flight, which is being organized by the U. S. War Department, Lieutenant Lawton is being expected to arrive in Peking from Manila on March 15 to make such arrangements as are necessary in connexion with the flight.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JUDGE LOBINGIER'S DEPARTURE

10 Years of the U. S. Court for China: First Judge to Complete Full Term

The approaching departure of his Honour Judge Lobingier is an event which the American community in Shanghai will regret as well as mark as being important, in view of the admirable service he has rendered during his 10 years' service in the U.S. Court for China. For the time being, the business of the court practically remains in abeyance, his Honour's judicial period expiring strictly according to the date of the Presidential Commission—a position which most observers may describe as unsatisfactory, in view of the possibility of cases piling up until the arrival of the new Judge. In point of fact, Judge Lobingier's work is all "up-to-date," and there are few outstanding cases of any importance waiting to be dealt with. We understand Judge Lobinier, upon handing over office to his successor, proposes first to visit the United States and give some attention to his estate in Missouri, and when these and various other private matters have been dealt with, possibly he may return to Shanghai. For the moment, however, his plans in this respect are indefinite.

BLAZING A TRAIL.

An interesting point about his Honour's work in China is that he is the first judge of the U.S. Court to complete the appointed term of 10 years, the first two Judges here resigning before their terms were half over. From the first, he recognized the difficulty of the task before him, and this perhaps more than anything else determined him upon setting a useful precedent. He has succeeded, but this we may look upon as the least of his successes, his Honour having accomplished much extremely valuable work in building up the court. In an interesting account of Judge Lobingier's work here, Mr. W.W. Blume, Dean of the Comparative Law School, pays tribute to his Honour for having blazed a trail through the entanglement of cases and statutes which make up the laws of the United States, making a pathway to be followed by Americans in China and setting up sign posts which all his successors must follow.

The first 10 years of Judge Lobingier's legal career were spent in the practice of law at Omaha, he then being appointed Supreme Court Commissioner of Nebraska, writing many important opinions which still stand. Under the Administration of President Roosevelt, he was appointed a member of the Philippine judiciary, taking a very prominent part in the extremely difficult work of the early American judges in the islands. It was during this period that he gained the experience used to such excellent advantage in China. Example of this is shown in his two volumes of Extraterritorial Cases, these containing full reports of the decisions of the court from its beginning, and their preparation involving immense labour. The volumes are now an indispensable guide to the American Bar, and to American business men in China. Another important piece of constructive work, in part completed, is the Extraterritorial Remedial Code, designed for use by lawyers practising before the U.S. Court for China, in which the latest methods of procedure have been incorporated.

THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

Another of Judge Lobingier's achievements was the organization of the Far Eastern American Bar Association which has published a number of valuable bulletins, chief among them two entitled "American Courts in China," and "Extraterritorial Corporation Manual," prepared by Judge Lobingier himself. Another achievement greatly appreciated by members of the Bar has been Judge Lobingier's success in building up the Court library. Upon his arrival it consisted of a few text books, the Federal Decisions (in part) and reports of a very few cases. By careful use of a limited appropriation, Judge Lobingier secured the full reports of each of the 50 courts of last resort in the United States and of some of the lower courts, so that it is now possible for members of the Bar using the library to prepare briefs on almost any subject in American law.

All this has been accomplished in the small leisure available from the increasingly arduous demands of the court. It was a small institution when the Judge assumed his post, only 375 cases, most of them of minor character, having been filed in the preceding eight years of its existence. The number has been increased by more than 2,000 during the past 10 years, and many have involved enormous sums of money and legal questions of far reaching importance.

OVER 100 LAW TREATIES.

How completely Judge Lobingier has applied himself to his judicial work may be gathered from the fact that a bibliography of his legal literature would include over one hundred treatises on a wide range of legal subjects. Of the longer works, perhaps the best known are "The People's Law," and "The Evolution of Roman Law" (a new edition of which was recently published), "Philippine Practice," and "Extraterritorial Cases," while all of the shorter treatises have appeared in the leading law magazines and encyclopædias. This is a record of achievement and service of which his Honour's fellow-countrymen no less than himself may well be proud. It is quite certain that his name must ever hold a prominent place in the annals of the U.S. Court for China.

A HONGKEW MYSTERY

Corpse Found in Suspicious Circumstances

About 8 p.m. on Sunday a startling discovery was made by detectives on patrol in the neighbourhood of Tiendong and Wuchang Roads. In an unfrequented alleyway—one of a network in the vicinity—they found the dead body of a well dressed Chinese, and examination revealed two wounds—probably caused by a revolver—one just above the right eye and one in the side. Death appeared to have but recently taken place. Upon inquiries being made, it was found that the deceased—a young man named Lin—was an employee at the Isis Theatre. He had lately been absent from business and was believed to be sick and confined to his room, and at present very little is known of his recent movements.

Up to the present no light has been thrown on the matter. The deceased was found to have received a bullet wound in the left cheek, and by his side were three empty cartridge cases fitting a .32 calibre automatic pistol. People in the neighbourhood say they heard a report shortly before the body was discovered, but thought that crackers were being discharged and so took no particular notice. The deceased, who lives with his wife and children in Jukong Road, Chapei, left home only some 20 minutes before his death took place.

Dr. and Mrs. George L. Davis of Peking are in Shanghai this week on their way to America viâ Suez and Europe. Dr. Davis is a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is the son of Dr. George Davis, one of the pioneers of mission work in North China, and has long been one of the leaders of mission work in the capital city. He is also well-known as a member of the International Famine Relief Committee.

THE RITZ AS ARRANGED FOR THE WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY BALL: THE CEILING IS PAINTED BY RIBEIRA, THE NOTED SPANISH PORTRAIT PAINTER.

RECORD ATTENDANCE AT WASHINGTON BALL IN NOVEL SURROUNDINGS

Last Friday's Brilliant Spectacle at the Ritz: Over 1,500 Guests: Beauty of Building's Decorations

The Washington Ball last Friday at the Ritz was the biggest and best in the history of the American community of Shanghai. Following the reception of official guests at 9.30, the revelries continued far into the night. At the time of going to press during the small hours it appeared that sunrise would still find guests disporting themselves to the strains of the two orchestras.

The building was packed from top to bottom. Over 1,500 ate, drank, danced and made merry throughout a programme of 24 dances and numerous extras which were generously supplied by the hard working musicians.

As the first guests arrived they were greeted by a bower of potted palms which flanked the walls of the temporary matshed, built with an imitation brick facing. Strung overhead were chains of red, white and blue incandescent lamps, which extended through the main corridor to the inner entrance. Here the glance fell upon the American flag draped over the door. Still further along above was a marine emblem, and near by the seal of the State of Washington, on which was painted a portrait of the Father of the Country.

The general scheme of decorations by the Committee was simple in itself, though the Ritz interior of course is elaborately decorated. In several of the rooms judicious use of flags and drapery added a national tinge to the ensemble which appealed to citizens and visitors alike.

The single decoration in the lower ball-room was an immense American flag hung behind the musicians, while in the upper dancing area two smaller flags combined to form the background.

In the official visitors' room photographs of Washington and Coolidge fronted each other draped in red, white and blue.

With the exception of an immense woven rug in this room there were no floor coverings anywhere, the hardwood itself being of a sufficiently decorative description. The broken outlines of squares forming the motive of the upper ball-room floor is indeed a pleasing bit of work. The star, too, in the centre of the finely polished floor below created much favourable comment.

The reception line was ready for the first guests and as they began to arrive at about 9.30 the committee were kept busy for the prescribed period. The following received the visitors:—Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U.S. Consul-General, and Mrs. Cunningham, Judge and Mrs. Charles S. Lobingier, Major S. A. Ransom, S.V.C., Captain V. Olsen, S.V.C. and Lt. and Mrs. E. L. McCloskey.

The earliest arrivals, upon meeting the reception committee were conducted to the upper ball-room, where one orchestra dispensed music while the reception was still in progress. On the conclusion of the usual formalities both rooms presented a brilliant spectacle.

Even though the major portion of the night was spent in one of the two main rooms, there were still two others that had a worthy patronage—the dining buffet and the buffet just above the former where liquid refreshments were frequently inquired after.

As early as 11.30 supper was ready. Caterers of the American Club, assisted by 120 boys, produced prodigious quantities of cold meats—York ham, roast beef, corned beef, corned tongue, roast capon, and roast side saddle—salads, potato, beet, Russia and many pies—apple, lemon and pumpkin and a generous helping of coffee and tea.

The cocktail tree with its countless maraschino cherries also helped to divert the company. The plucking process, each taking his or her own cherry for the drink, was novel indeed.

The large committee which has worked so hard for the past week in preparing the building deserves every commendation, while the sailors from the American naval ships in port who attended to the decorations must feel that their labours have been much appreciated.

Some statistics compiled by Vong Yui-ziang (Jumbo), caterer to the American Club, who furnished the food at the Washington Ball are extremely interesting. Over a ton of food was eaten—850 lb. of turkey, 400 lb. of silver dish ham, 150 lb. roast beef, 70 lb. mutton, 50 lb. beef, 30 pieces of corned tongue, 120 apple pies, 60 lemon pies, 70 pumpkin pies, 200 lb. potato salad, 150 lb. beet salad, 50 lb. Russian salad and 500 "Hot dogs," and 190 loaves of Bake Rite bread. In addition 40 gallons of Washington cocktails, 60 of Hock cup, 30 of lemon squash and 50 of loganberry punch. Authentic reports indicate that the party was still in progress at 5.55 a.m. No one seems to know when the last guest departed.

MILITARY ACTIVITY AT CANTON

Transfer of Troops On East and North Rivers: People Suffer Always

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, Feb. 19.

There has been much activity amongst the military in and around Canton recently. It is expected that shortly another attempt will be made to clear up the East River situation. With this in view the Hunanese troops under Gen. T'am Yan-hoi are all being transferred from the North River districts to the East where they are relieving the Yunnanese who will be transferred to the North. There are estimated to be about 30,000 of the Hunanese in all, in five armies. The 5th and 4th and part of the 3rd have already been transferred and the 1st and 2nd are expected shortly.

The transfer of this large body of troops has not been without incidents. Early last week about 5,000 men arrived at the village of Saichuen, and after detraining they entered the village to find quarters, and turned the inhabitants out of their houses and took their places. The losses of the villager were considerable. There has since then been considerable difficulty in finding accommodation in Canton for all the troops passing through and considerable inconvenience has been suffered by the inhabitants, whose houses have been commandeered indiscriminately by the soldiers. Gen. T'am Yan-hoi has issued orders to try and prevent this state of affairs, but so far without much effect. It is hoped, however, that the transfer of troops will have been completed within the next few weeks.

WAR A HEAVY DRAIN.

It is impossible to forecast the result of the coming operations in the East River districts, but it is to be hoped that this will prove to be the decisive campaign, as the province is suffering considerably from this continued strife. Prices are very high and the continuous exactions of the military are causing a very serious drain on the resources of the people.

The issue of short term notes with which the troops were paid at the Chinese New Year and which caused a good deal of trouble in the city was withdrawn from the troops and handed over to the Police and Merchants Volunteers for collection. They go round from shop to shop and collect various sums of money according to the size of the firm in return for notes. The sums to be taken up by each firm vary from $500 to $5. Since this system was started it is said that $40,000 have been collected.

MEMORIAL SERVICE TO LENIN.

The formation of the new Reconstruction Government which was decided on at the National Conference of the Kuomintang, held here recently is held up for the East River situation to be settled and for the finances of the province to be centralized, a process which is likely to take some time yet. The new Commissioner of Finance is Mr. Chang Hung-nien. The Kuomintang are to hold a memorial service for Lenin on the 24th. of this month at the First Public Garden.

The successor of Mr. Liu Chung-oi as Civil Governor of Kuangtung, Mr. Yang Shiu-kam, has not yet taken up his appointment, as the Civil Governor's yamên was occupied by some units of the Yunanese troops. They have now been persuaded to move and the Yamen is being put into order again and it is expected that Mr. Yang will take up his post shortly.

RAILWAY CHIEF IN TROUBLE.

The managing director of the Canton-Kowloon Railway, Mr. Wen Teh-chang, was dismissed from his post by the Generalissimo, Dr. Sun [illegible] and Mr. Chen Hing-hai the managing director of the Canton-Samshui Railway was appointed to his place. Mr. Wen was taken to Police Headquarters and questioned as to his reasons for doing several things which were considered as being inimical to the present Government, but he was able to explain [illegible] of Mr. Boothby, the British Chief Engineer, and he was afterwards released and has left for Hongkong.

DEATH OF MRS. WHITEWRIGHT OF TSINAN

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Feb. 20.

News of the death in England on January 11 of Mrs. Whitewright has saddened the foreign community here.

Mrs. Whitewright came to China over 40 years ago, and during that period had ably seconded her husband, the Rev. J. S. Whitewright, in his great work at the Tsinan Institute and Museum.

Mrs. Whitewright was the senior lady member of the English Baptist Mission and will be much missed in Tsinan, where she was a splendid hostess and a busy worker among the wives of the Chinese gentry.

JAPAN'S EARTHQUAKE RELIEF FUNDS

Public Charity Hospital to be Erected from Surplus U. S. Red Cross Subscriptions

Tokio, Feb. 19.

In order to perpetuate the goodwill and sympathy extended to Japan by America at the time of the great earthquake last September, a decision has been reached to devote a portion of the surplus funds received from the American Red Cross to the establishment of a public charity hospital.

A strong administrative body will be named, which will, it is proposed, include one of the Imperial Princes as President, and a prominent businessman (the name of Viscount Shibusawa is suggested) as Vice-President. It is further understood that on the directorate will be included a representative of American interests here.

The amount of money to be spent on this project is estimated at Y.6,000,000, half of which sum represents the cost of erection, while the other half will be for the maintenance of the institution.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

EARTHQUAKE CLAIMS IN JAPAN

Payment of Sympathy Money: Government Assistance for Weaker Companies

Tokio, Feb. 19.

While the larger Tokio companies are prepared to pay 10 per cent. "sympathy" on insurance claims, in connexion with the earthquake last September, the Government to-day decided to assist the weaker companies to pay the same percentage to the extent of Y.80,000,000, which will be lent to them at four per cent., the loan to be redeemable in 50 years. Small policy-holders are to be accorded preferential treatment.—Reuter.

PEKING EDITOR AND AN ERRONEOUS REPORT

Peking, Feb. 23.

It appears that the "Chou Pao," a Peking newspaper, recently published a report stating that the Japanese Prince Regent had been assassinated. According to Chinese reports, the Japanese Minister brought the matter to the attention of the Waichiaoru and the Metropolitan Police were instructed to inquire into the matter. Mr. Kuan Yi-hsien, editor of the "Chou Pao," was called to the Metropolitan Police Office to give an explanation. Mr. Kuan stated that he had culled the item from a paper at another port and published it in all good faith. His statement was taken down and this morning he was called upon to appear at the Police Office for further examination.

The result of the investigation is not yet known.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WHY THE WINTER HAS BEEN SO MILD

Shantung Pushed 500 Miles South by Earthquake

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Feb. 20.

The New Year holiday and Lantern festival are over and everything has been quiet, except for the fire crackers which have been more in evidence this year than for several years. This shows that last year's harvests were above the average.

Shantung seems to have experienced a mild winter, the cold not being severe enough to freeze the Yellow River. The river boatmen have a proverb which says that when the river does not freeze one might as well sell one's wife—there being very hard times in store.

As to the mildness of the winter, a most ingenious explanation has been put forward in some quarters. The Japanese earthquake is being held responsible. It seems that the quake in its struggles pushed Shantung over 500 miles nearer the Equator which of course would quite account for the warmth!

The local fortune-tellers were in the dumps because the New Year began with dull weather. Instead of snowing as it ought to have done it rained on the second and third days. These are the two days that govern the fortunes of dogs and pigs; but fortunately the seventh day—man's birthday, was bright and sunny, so perhaps we shall manage to get throught the year somehow.

JAPAN'S EDUCATIONAL WORK IN CHINA

Proposed Public Library and Laboratories: Scholarships for Chinese

Tokio, Feb. 19.

Among the measures to be submitted to the first session of the Diet that will be held after the General Elections next May is reported to be one that provides for the establishment in Peking of a public library and a scientific laboratory, and a similar laboratory in Shanghai.

These three projects are stated to be the recommendations of the special Committee set up by the Foreign Office to decide on the expenditure of money allocated by the Government for educational work in China.

It is further understood that the Government has under consideration a plan of establishing 250 yearly scholarships for the benefit of Chinese students now studying in Japanese higher schools and colleges.

The value of each scholarship approximates Y.85 a month. Reuter's Pacific Service.

PREMIER'S ENVOY IN HANGCHOW

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Feb. 20.

Mr. Tze-chang, of railway fame, is here, sent by Mr. Sun Pao-chi, the Premier, to get Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang's aid in bringing about "National Unity," for which all true patriots are working, and our General among them.

The Civil Governor returns to-morrow.

FATHER VAN PRAET SAFE AT SUIYUAN

Peking, Feb. 27.

The Government has received a telegram stating that Father Van Praet, the Belgian priest who was recently rescued from bandits, safely arrived at Suiyuan on February 23.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHARGES OF LOOTING DURING JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE

Tokio, Feb. 21.

Seventeen persons were to-day charged with violently looting Japanese and foreigners' houses at Negishi and Yokohama after the earthquake and were committed for trial.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE JAPANESE IMPERIAL MARRIAGE

Tokio, Feb. 22.

The Regent and the Crown Princess left for Kioto this morning, where they will announce their marriage at the Imperial shrines of Ise, Unebi and Momoyama. They will stay over-night at Numadzu, where late last night there was great excitement owing to a serious fire, which burned down more than 200 houses in the neighbourhood of the Palace, which is safe.

In view of the recent attempts at train-wrecking, the track is being heavily policed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ALLEGED COMMUNIST PLOT IN JAPAN

Twenty-nine Socialists Sent for Trial: Attempt to Establish Soviet Rule

Tokio, Feb. 19.

Some nine months ago the police of Tokio made an extensive round-up of Socialists in the capital on the suspicion that they were implicated in a Communist plot against the State. Twenty-nine persons were held under arrest for some time, being afterwards released on bail, but the result of the preliminary examination into the affair has only just been concluded, with the result that these Socialists have been committed for trial early in April.

According to the statement issued by the Preliminary Court, these men aimed at the establishment of Soviet rule in Japan by the abolition of capitalism and the transfer of all political and economic power to the proletariat.

The details of the plot, which the authorities claim to have unearthed by their inspection of seized documents and the examination of the accused, show that a secret Communistic Society was organized in December, 1922, as a branch of the International Communists, that very careful efforts were made to spread, and at the same time to protect, their principles throughout the country, and that such success attended their early efforts that in March, 1923, one of their members was sent to Russia to exchange views with the Soviet authorities.

SEIZURE OF CORRESPONDENCE.

The first suspicions of the police were aroused in Waseda University. A domiliciary search of the residences of the leaders in the trouble took place, when certain correspondence between one of the professors of the University and certain Russian Communists was discovered. Further documents were later seized in the house of a certain miner, who in an unguarded moment had given expression to his political views in the hearing of a police officer, and these led to the arrest of the accused, as well as to the flight from the country of other leaders, who had previously been notified that their plot had become known.

PLANS FOR A SOVIET GOVERNMENT.

It appears, according to the report of the affair published by one paper, that these men had planned a complete Government strictly along Soviet lines, and definitely fixed the personnel of the new "Government," by assigning to each of the leaders some portfolio of importance.

This report says that the plot was revealed to the police by one of the original conspirators, who seceded after having been accused of embezzling part of the money received from Russia to promote their campaign. The total amount they got from Russia for this purpose is alleged to have been Y.70,000.

DOCUMENTS IN CODE.

The police, the report goes on, experienced considerable difficulty in deciphering many of the confiscated documents, which happened to be in code and contained many "watchwords."

So much so that insufficient evidence is forthcoming to enable a graver charge of crime against the State to be preferred, and the men are now to be tried because they attempted to form a secret party.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A SWISS CITIZEN IN DURANCE

Mr. Elly Widler Still Held as Prisoner by Chinese in Szechuan

So many outrages upon foreigners in the interior of China have occurred during the past few months, that it is not unlikely that the case of a Swiss citizen, Mr. Elly Widler, imprisoned by the Chinese military authorities in Szechuan, has latterly escaped the attention of the public. Mr. Widler, when a resident of Chungking, was arrested by order of General Yang Sen as far back as September 10, details being published in the "North-China Daily News" a few weeks later. The charge against him was of arms smuggling, and to start with a ransom of $200,000 was asked. This has not been paid, and Mr. Widler still remains a prisoner.

The following summary of his experiences has been compiled from letters received by his relatives in Shanghai. Whether Mr. Widler was innocent or guilty we neither know nor is it the point of the story, which is dealt with in a Note and Comment.

BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE.

On September 10 armed soldiers rushed into the Cosmos Club owned and managed by Mr. Widler at Chungking and at the point of loaded rifles captured Mr. Widler, bound him and took him to the Magistrate's yamên in the city of Chungking. Following his capture a raid was made on the Cosmos Club by officials of the Chungking Foreign Office, and all movable valuables and money were taken to the Foreign Office Headquarters in Chungking City. Later in the day Mr. Widler's private residence situated on the hill behind the Customs quarters was completely looted of its contents. In their raid on the Cosmos Club—on the pretence of looking for arms—the Chinese found three sporting rifles and two pistols, property which Mr. Widler had owned for years and used for self-protection and game shooting on his numerous trips in the interior and in Tibet.

After a week's detainment as prisoner in the yamên of the Magistrate he was brought on trial before the Magistrate and an official of the Chungking Foreign Office. It was a mock trial. He was threatened with being bambooed and killed. The Magistrate of Chungking asking him in open court whether he would feel the pain or not when bambooed, adding, "I can bamboo you and have you shot, do you understand?" At this trial the Magistrate compelled Mr. Widler to give up the keys of his safe and personal boxes. This he did. Mr. Widler was accused of selling arms to the Southern leaders. Then followed weeks of imprisonment, Mr. Widler being marched through the streets of Chungking, bound and heavily guarded, from one yamên to the other.

Then came the advance of the Southern Generals and Yang Sen prepared for retreat. All things looted and taken from the Cosmos Club, including more than $3,000 in money, hundreds of clocks and watches, curios and merchandise were handed over to General Yang Sen. It was General Yang Sen who had ordered the arrest of Mr. Widler who was also handed over. Later Mr. Widler was asked to buy his release, and $200,000 was asked, otherwise he was informed that he would be shot. Then came the day of defeat and Yang Sen had to evacuate Chungking. On November 16, after spending weeks in a dirty military gaol, he was forced out, cruelly bound, and made to march with Yang Sen's retreating army all the way from Chungking to Wanhsien—a 10 days' tramp. He was laughed at, mocked at and illtreated by the soldiers and numerous ex-bandits in General Yang Sen's army.

At Wan Hsien he was put into a filthy public gaol, and there he still remains.

CORRESPONDENCE

BRITAIN'S AERIAL DEFENCE.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I have read with considerable interest your leader of to-day's date, entitled "Britain's Aerial Defence" and whilst, with all due respect, I submit that you have put your finger on a weak spot when you complain of the weakness of our Air Force, the references to France are most certainly open to criticism.

Those who have followed aviation since its infancy know well enough that the position of aviation in England to-day has nothing to do with France. It is due to loose thinking, a failure to envisage the problems of the future clearly and the apathy of naval and army authorities. We know, but always fail to realize, that our army or navy without the air would be hopelessly outmatched. Yet it was only about three months ago that the R.A.F. came into its own, every leader of the late Government, the Admiralty Board and the War Office were moved to make the Air Force an auxiliary service, instead of it being a separate service as it is to-day.

The Admiralty and Army had no clear visualization of the respective rôles in the future of sea, land and air forces, or more particularly, of how they will interact one with the other, and how they can be welded into one great striking machine rather than blunder along separately, each in its own compartment. There has been an almost total lack of any grasp of what the great air strategy of the future may imply. The Navy and Army seemed utterly incapable of realizing that what the conquest of the air has brought about is not the addition of another arm—a long range gun, as it were, for the use of the existing services, but a completely new factor in the greater problems of offence and defence—a factor which has an even more important bearing upon those problems than the discovery of steam navigation. We shall get nowhere until the full realization of what the air and air power mean has been grasped by those who direct the policy of the Government, or who share in the moulding of that public opinion, without which even governments cannot act.

As you have said, Sir, when it comes to this question of aerial defence, the Labour Government shows no more originality of thought than any of its predecessors. One might also add, neither do naval or army officials. Even the newspapers have had restricted vision, which has prevented them seeing further ahead than to-morrow, air casualties have been magnified beyond all proportion, and it is these conditions which are at the back of the matter—this and the quite understandable desire of a few senior officers of the older services to squash the aspirations of one that is new.

In 1920 the Government was urged that unless it could make up its mind to formulate a real aerial policy—such policy only just being materialized in the creation of the R.A.F. as a separate service—and to carry it out with promptness and despatch, the lead in the air with which we ended the war would disappear and we should see other countries going ahead of us.

It is, unfortunately, only too true that the Government has maintained its attitude of supineness, and now what airmen have prophesied has come to pass. Shall we blame France?

Since the day of the armistice France has realized that the first line of offence and defence is the air. To state that such an air force is being built to bomb London is as ridiculous as to state we shall have war. As an island Power, and particularly in view of the far-flung character of the Empire, naval supremacy has hitherto been the beginning and end of our safety. Once the trident passed from our hands to those of another Power we could only look forward to existence by sufference of the leading naval power. This remains as true as ever it has been, but the question which is now being debated is whether or not the standard of comparison has completely changed. If it has not, and the capital ship remains the unit of comparison, then the supremacy of the French Air Force or any other country does not matter.

The Italian view concerning the world's air supremacy is drawing the long bow, and cannot be substantiated in view of the above facts. One might just as well state that, when the French volunteer force here obtain their aeroplanes, these volunteers will direct their efforts to capture the International Settlement, just because we in the S.V.C. do not consider that our standard of defence must be drastically revised to meet the importation of over 500 aeroplanes in China.

Outside the Government it is only too well recognized whither our present policy is leading us. Yet we look in vain for any signs of clear appreciation of the fundamental factor in air policy—that it is only by the direct encouragement of aerial traffic on the commercial side that a nation can build up the margin of air power which will render it immune from hostile attack. France recognizes it, and we know the measures she is taking to ensure a lead in commercial flying. Germany also recognizes it, and we have been told a good deal about "her plans for the future." America is well to the front and is encouraging aviation by all and every means. Only in Great Britain is there an apparent failure to grasp the facts, and we still have NO AIR POLICY!

THE CASE OF MR. WIDLER.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—With reference to the article which appeared in your paper this morning under the heading of "A Swiss Citizen in Durance," I have the honour to inform you that the Federal Government have refused to recognize Mr. Elly Widler as a Swiss citizen on the grounds that he was unable to establish his claim to Swiss citizenship.

I shall feel obliged if you will cause this letter to be published in to-morrow's issue of the "North-China Daily News."

CHICHOW GIRLS' HOME.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—May I ask you to print, with this summary of accounts for 1923, the adjoined list of subscriptions received with much gratitude since my appeal of of November 20 last?

The Chichow Girls' Home averaged 38 inmates for 1923, the cost of their care averaging as the account would show, something under $4.40 a month. The receipts shown do not include what the Matron has been able to sell direct of their work, and that sum should be added to the actual cost of upkeep; it supplemented the remittances which passed through my hands, and reduced the figure which would otherwise have been reported for the clothing bill. I regret that I have not the details of this Work Account to show. The girls' own self-supporting work is a point which we hope will be more and more stressed in spite of the difficulties mentioned in my late appeal. I hope it may be possible to rearrange my accounts with the institution this year, so as to show the total cost, and the total of what the girls do towards their own support.

The recent instruction in grass cloth work, which I reported in November, shows promise of increased orders and better results this year. Orders may be sent to the Matron, addressed to my care.

The balance of $103.70, with the December bank interest, two subscriptions received from England this year, and the last of the five acknowledged below, also received since December, leave us with $458.32 to carry on with as from January 1. Many thanks are due to the subscribers named and anonymous, whose help is recorded below. We would beg to ask for all possible fresh support.

THE OLD BRITISH CEMETERY.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In the course of a number of exploration trips which I have been making into out-of-the-way spots around the Settlement I visited to-day the old British military cemetery, the entrance to which lies in Chinese territory opposite the junction of Rue Hue with the Boulevard des Deux Républiques.

This quiet spot, with its four long rows of graves where some hundreds of British soldiers await the reveille, is, I venture to say, quite unknown to the larger part of the British residents of Shanghai. The land, although in Chinese territory, is, I believe, under the control of the Municipal Council of the International Settlement, and while the Chinese caretaker seems to be doing his duty by keeping the place tolerably clean, I noticed that the grave mounds, while still distinguishable, have almost disappeared, and that the lettering of the few tablets and monuments remaining is badly in need of repointing.

The officers and men of both Home and Indian units who lie here died in Shanghai during the last years of the Taipings, (1860-64), and it was due to their presence and to that of their fellows that the Settlement became the secure haven that it was during those stormy days when the foundation of its present greatness was laid. These men served with Gordon.

It is sad to think that 60 years hence the places where lie our gallant comrades of 1914-18 will be as forgotten as this little spot "which is for ever England" in Shanghai.

Could not these graves be reheaped and properly sodded, the crumbling lettering of the tablets renewed, and, as in the great cemeteries of France and elsewhere, a small mast be planted where the Flag under which they served will fly always over their graves?

Lastly, there is absolutely no external mark at the entrance to the cemetery to indicate that it is a sacred spot. A simple brass plate on the gate would serve.

I am, etc.,
Sixtieth.

BREEZY NINGPO.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Can you please spare me a little space in your interesting newspaper, in which to say how pained I was to read of the unkind remarks made by a Mr. C. I. Smithson-Jones about my very dear friend Mr. Squeers.

I have looked in my 1918 copy of the Hong List and though I counted 17 Joneses and one Smithson I am quite sure I could not find Mr. Smithson-Jones. Is it possible that the printer has made a mistake? Or perhaps Mr. Smith-Jones has only come to China since that dreadful war.

I know Mr. Squeers quite well. I still remember the last time he paid a visit to our little community. How, one night, on our way back from the meeting, he suddenly said "Stand still! Stand quite still!" I was so frightened but I could not see the thing he was pointing at, However, there was something there, because next morning he told us that he had discovered a specimen of that rare reptile Humfrisianus Nocturnus (such a long name). I believe it is sometimes called the Inarticulated Asp of Central China. I cannot remember now whether it had purple spots and green eyes, or green spots and purple eyes, but, perhaps, you read about it in the "Scientific Lett."

I am afraid I am taking up so much of your valuable space but I did want to tell you that I am qute sure Mr. Smithson-Jones has made a mistake as Mr. Squeers is such a dear friend of mine.

Yours very sincerely,
(Miss) Agatha Boadge.

Chow Hang, Chê. Feb. 22, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir.—One detects, to say the least, a certain insincerity in the Rev. Smithson-Jones' letter, to which you were lenient enough to accord a space that he abused in your correspondence columns to-day. One is forced to the conclusion that it is his boasted sense of humour which leads him to pour forth such a volley of scurrilous invective and ill-simulated indignation at the article entitled "Breezy Ningpo" published in your issue of the 15th instant, for it is impossible to believe that any sane (and sober) man could read more—or less—into that article than an honest civic patriotism engendering a desire to extol a famous old Treaty Port.

But no doubt you, Sir, are all too familiar with these epistolary-cranks who, mentally too inept to "scramble into print" on their own merits, are yet so avid of publicity that they let slip no opportunity of winning a little cheap applause from the gallery, by way of the correspondence columns of our long-suffering newspapers.

If Mr. Smithson-Jones is really the missionary he, judging from his unpleasant effusion, purports to be (and one doubts the genuineness of his cloth at least as strongly as he does the actuality of so old and well-known a China hand as Mr. Alf Squeers), one can only sympathize with those unfortunate Chinese who in all innocence look to such a mountebank as their spiritual father.

Enclosing my card,

I am, etc.,
The Author,
"Breezy Ningpo."

Ningpo, Feb. 22, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I am all for freedom of speech and the freedom of the Press, and your "Correspondence" column is usually a shining example of the proper application of those principles. But when a correspondent uses that column as a vehicle for a splenetic personal attack on two old friends of mine—an attack as malignant as it is unprovoked, as scurrilous as its substance is baseless—it is high time, Sir, to exercise a proper censorship. Never in all my born days have I read such a disgustingly vindictive stream of abuse, such foul and coarse vituperation as Mr. Smithson-Jones pours out in his letter that sullied your columns yesterday—the gutter or dustbin would have been a fitter place to throw such garbage. One hesitates to suggest that he was the worse for liquor when he perpetrated this outrage on public decency, but his well-nigh incoherent ravings can only emanate from the mental depths of an habitual drunkard or a criminal lunatic.

Who is Mr. Smithson-Jones, anyway, that he should talk so familiarly about Ningpo? I have lived here many a long year, yet can remember no resident of that name—but no doubt like all such curs he is hiding behind a pseudonym. At any rate he displays a lamentable lack of knowledge of local conditions together with an utter disregard for the truth.

In the first case, as many of your readers will be aware, there are other churches in Ningpo besides the Parish church—St. Luke's with its adjacent Memorial Hospital is a prominent landmark on the Bund. Secondly, Mr. Smithson-Jones has the amazing impudence to suggest that Mr. Alf. Squeers is a fictitious personality! That, Sir, is going a bit too far, and it alone gives one serious doubts of Mr. Smithson-Jones's sanity. Mr. Alf. Squeers and the talented author of the article "Breezy Ningpo" have been friends of mine for more years than I care to name. There are no better known figures on the China coast, and no more patriotic citizens of Ningpo. My friend, the author, is incapable of writing in other than a sincere and appreciative way about the port he has loved so long, and Mr. Smithson-Jones' insinuations that his article is "writ sarcastic" are as preposterous as they are unfair. I have read the article in question myself and consider it an honest and deservedly laudatory tribute to an historic city—and capital literature to boot.

But the most extraordinary thing about Mr. Smithson-Jones' colossal piece of effrontery is its apparent lack of motive. It is quite evident that he conceals a violent antagonism to Mr. Squeers and the author of the article, thinly-veiled under a pretence of standing up for a place to which he is, fortunately, an obvious stranger. But why this maniacal hatred?

That, Sir, Mr. Smithson-Jones alone can explain.

Enclosing my card,

THE SALVING OF THE RHEINLAND

Fine Work Done by Sampson and St Dominic in Ice and Snow and Winter Gales

A remarkable feat of salvage has just been completed by Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co.'s rescue and salvage tugs St. Sampson and St. Dominic, which pulled the str. Rheinland off the sandy beach west of Chefoo. Local residents familiar with the vicinity may recall the situation and the long stretch of sand around the jutting point.

The Rheinland went on to the sands on February 7, in the midst of the violent storms which at that time caused so much trouble to shipping in this part of the world; the Persia, Edmore and several smaller boats coming to grief during the same 24 hours. It was impossible for the local tugs to proceed to the spot at once as they were busy bringing in the Persia and so the Dairen Maru, a small tug of 700 h.p., was brought over from Dairen, but her efforts came to naught, so further calls were received for the Shanghai ships. The St. Dominic was despatched on February 13 at midnight and arrived 60 hours later. The St. Sampson, urged to leave, got under way on the 19th.

The Rheinland had evidently been driven by the terrific gale and surging waves, with her normal speed, head on to the beach,, but the storms had swung her round broadside and the tugs found her in this position on arrival. Lightering was attempted but was found impossible owing to climatic conditions, so tugging was the only resource that remained. Neither of the tugs could work effectively at less than 1200 feet distance: at a closer range the violent waters bounced them on to the sandy bottom and then up again. The closest that they ever got was 800 feet, but they could not remain here at all, so they went out to a workable distance. Two immense lines were run out on buoys and joined fast. The layman can hardly imagine a six-inch steel line and a 12-inch Manila rope, but that is what was used by each tug (125 fathoms of each). Fastened together the lines formed a massive link with the ship, unbreakable even in the terrible weather that prevailed.

The 4,000 h.p. motive power was applied time and again, with no seeming success. On two occasions the waves reached such proportions that the tugs dragged their anchors. The snow and ice made operations most miserable. Finally after gigantic efforts for three days, three hours and 30 minutes the combined efforts of the tugs proved successful and the Rheinland with her nose pointing outward, having had it manipulated from the broadside position, slid off into her depth—February 24, 12.30 p.m.

It is impossible to tell the exact amount of damage done, but it is certain that both anchors were left by the vessel on the Chefoo beach. Yesterday she went into Tsingtao under her own steam and is expected to arrive in Shanghai to-morrow.

The Rheinland (Hamburg-America Line, Agents) is 449 ft. over all, has gross tonnage 6,552, displacement 11,000, and is equipped with Diesel engines.

During the absence of Mr. H. von Heidenstam, who left on Monday for Sweden by the R.M.S. Empress of Australia, Dr. H Chatley will be acting Engineer-in-Chief to the Whangpoo Conservancy Board.

Messrs. W. and T.E. Poignand were sued in H. M. Supreme Court on Monday for Tls. 920, balance of account for a Daimler motor truck purchased from the plaintiff, Mr. Jacques Azadian. Mr. R. C. Faithfull appeared for defendants and Mr. J. G. Priest-Wood for plaintiff, the latter stating that the truck had been seized and disposed of in connexion with another claim against the defendants — His Honour Judge Grain gave judgment for the amount claimed with costs.

WEDDINGS

New—Zee

A very pretty wedding, attended by a host of both foreign and Chinese friends of the bride and groom, took place on Saturday afternoon, when Dr. W. S. New, the well-known local physician, was married to Miss Y. T. Zee. The ceremony was performed at the new Shantung Road Chapel by the Rev. Ernest Box, assisted by Pastor Lee Seok kang. Mr. B. Hou acted as best man and Miss S. Y. Ting was bridesmaid. The flower girls were the Misses Lee and Yang, while Master Koo acted as page. Following the ceremony a banquet, attended by 200 guests, was held at the Great Eastern Hotel. The bride and groom will spend their honeymoon in Peking, returning here in about a month's time to make their residence.

Chassels—Martin

A very pretty wedding ceremony was celebrated on Thursday afternoon in Union Church when Miss Margaret Muir Martin, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Martin, of Springpark, Uddington, Scotland, was married to Mr. Thomas Rae Chassels, son of the late Mr. James Chassels, of Glasgow.

The Rev. A. N. Rowland, M.A., officiated and Mr. Donald Macdonald presided at the organ. The bride, who was given away by Mr. W. A. Willis, wore a charming dress of white charmeuse, trimmed with a silver lace bertha, the skirt gracefully draped and finished at the waist with pleatings and flowers. Mrs. W. A. Willis acted as matron of honour, wearing cornflower blue crêpe de chine and a black picture hat, while Miss Mary R. John, the bridesmaid, wore a tan costume trimmed with grey and a matching hat. The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. Linn Fernie as best man and Messrs. W. N. Scott, William Buchanan, and W. Fergus Johnston acted as ushers.

A reception was held following the ceremony at the house of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Willis, 106 Route Ferguson, after which Mr. and Mrs. Chassels left for Hangchow, the bride wearing a mole gabardine hand-embroidered with a taffeta silk hat with embroidered georgette brim.

OBITUARY

Capt. A. Palmer

Capt. A Palmer, master of the Jensien Transportation Co's str. Yuentah, died at the Shanghai General Hospital on Saturday morning, after a short illness. Capt. Palmer, who was a native of Australia, is understood to have arrived on the China Coast about 18 months ago and has been in command of the Yuentah for the last 15 months. He was 63 years of age, and leaves a widow in Shanghai, for whom the deepest sympathy will be felt.

Mrs. R. S. Hykes

Word has just been received of the death of Mrs. Rebe S. Hykes at Chengchow, Honan, where she was living with her son Mr. Edgar R. Hykes. This will come as a shock to a large number of friends, as Mrs. Hykes, as well as her late husband, were well known in Shanghai. She and her husband will long be remembered for their open-handed hospitality, and the generous help quietly given to numbers of needy men and women in this country. Mrs. Hykes had been in failing health for a few months, and latterly was confined to her room. It was her intention to proceed to the United States this month: but owing to her illness the passages had to be cancelled. She leaves four sons to mourn her loss.

On the initiative of several returned students from America and France, agricultural stations are to be established along the Hangchow-Shanghai and the Shanghai-Nanking railway lines. In stations, it is said, cattle and fowl will be raised.

THOS. HANBURY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

The Prize-giving: Choruses and Drill and an Address by Mrs. E. M. Gull

Prize-giving at the Thomas Hanbury School for Girls, which took place on Wednesday, afforded a very interesting afternoon and it is only to be regretted that space was inadequate to permit a larger number of visitors to hear the well rendered choruses and to see the excellent drill. Not even parents or all the girls themselves can be present on such occasions, which seems distressing when one realizes the natural desire of children to have their parents and playmates with them when honours are conferred.

Miss E. H. Mayhew, the headmistress, presided and introduced Mrs. E. M. Gull, who presented the prizes, saying in introduction, "I will not preach a sermon, but will only remind you school-girls that many of us older people spend a great deal of our time in wishing that we had not missed so many opportunities in the days of our youth. Fine opportunities in many directions will be coming to you now. Try not to miss them. . . . I am not talking of opportunities for personal enjoyment or for money-making. I speak rather of opportunities for being good citizens and for being of real use in your generation, for taking a hand in the great game of life. . .

"You have all the advantage of being educated in a school where honour and high ideals are held to be of great importance. Don't forget that when you are away from school; apply your high ideals and remember that each one of you is just as responsible for the well-being and good behaviour of the place you live in as is the Consul-General, the Judge or your own head-mistress. Remember that you girls are beginning where we leave off in the general scheme of life and that you will have greater freedom to play your part than most of us have had. . . . Guided by a singularly broad-minded and human head-mistress, the excellent education you are receiving in this school should prepare you to use your own judgment, to have the courage of your own convictions because you take an intelligent interest in things going on around you."

"LA BELLE AVENTURE"

Delightful Play at the Cercle Sportif Francais

The production of "La Belle Aventure" at the Cercle Sportif Français on Tuesday was attended by a highly satisfied audience, if one may judge by the hearty responses given to the witty sallies by the leading characters of the play. There was a general atmosphere of real joy and hearty approval of the timely bits of by-play between André and Hélène the secretly married happy couple who eloped on the morning of Hélène's wedding day with Valentin.

The first act is devoted to the gathering of friends and relatives to witness the ceremony and their consternation at the absence of the bride, while the next revolves round the visit of the 80-year old grandmother of the bride. The young couple are afraid to tell her of their marriage. André retires to the couch in the parlour, while Hélène goes to her room. The fatal hour of midnight brings the old lady into the parlour and she literally throws them into each other's arms. Valentin, the former fiancé, arrives in the morning, angry, but he is and must be satisfied with the marriage and the proffer of friendship by Helene.

The tall, debonair Henry Dreyfus, plays the captivating rôle of André to a nicety and his clever modulations of voice on delicate play of words reveal to the audience his Parisian training. He is to remain in Shanghai for some time. Dominating the part of Hélène, Madame Fano is charming in her ingenuous harmony with the complicating situations that arise, meeting the crisis with Mme Wilden, in the grandmother rôle, as smoothly as the more experienced matron of many years of married life could reasonably be expected to do. Mme. Wilden has charming lines, which she brings over well to the audience and adds life and go to the action. René Mazet as Valentin has a difficult part to play, especially in the last scenes but he is fully equal to the occasion. Marthé Labansat as the Comtesse and Marcel Lambert as the Comte d'Eguzon mother and father and aunt and uncle of Hélène and André come on in the last and handle their lines with a delicate touch. Jeane Beudin as Jeantine, the servant, is a perfect portrayal of the part.

A word must be given to the work of Mr. J. Schlisler who as director has brought out the whole in a wonderful manner. His is the part that remains unseen yet most truly appreciated.

MR. VYVYAN DENT'S PORTRAITURE

The New Style in Photography

Most of us possess, somewhere tucked away, an album of old family portraits. Which, at rare intervals, we turn over, marvelling at the stiff unnatural positions of the ladies in pork-pie hats and crinolines gazing into a pier glass; at the gentlemen with peg-top trousers and bushy whiskers; at the prim self-conscious children, digging in unnatural sands against obviously "property" cliffs and sea.

Yet in a way these earlier efforts of the camera were more genuinely photographic than the pretentious style which came later, when photographers appeared anxious to get as far as possible from the mechanical side of their craft and to insist on their title to be called artists. Photographs of every sort were worked up with pencil and brush into something as unlike the original as could well be imagined. In portraiture it seemed that every subject had to be made beautiful and while the result was undoubtedly gratifying to the originals, it could hardly have been acceptable to their friends as a real reminder of them. Every sort of fake was permissible and many beautiful effects were certainly obtained. But to call them photography was paltering with terms.

The brush-and-fuzzy school are not yet so lacking in followers that these remarks may not expose us to violent rebuke. But more and more it is evident that "straight photography" is coming into its own again; that the work of the camera, if properly managed, has a beauty and truthfulness of its own which subsequent doctoring by hand of plate and print cannot improve and may easily mar: and that just as photographers have learnt that nothing in development can cure a negative which has been wrongly exposed, so the real work of manipulating light and composing the picture must be done before it is taken.

Nowhere have the effects of this perception been more successfully shown than in portraiture, the type which young Mr. Vyvyan Dent is now doing. After having been an enthusiastic photographer all his life, especially interested in human studies, Mr. Dent has recently spent some time in a studio in California, with a view to taking up photography professionally, learning all the latest devices, particularly as regards the control of lighting, in which respect electricity has put an enormous power in the hands of the modern photographer. With its aid retouching has ceased to be necessary. The lines of a face are what chiefly give the character and the only reason for touching them out is that the lens has a tendency to exaggerate them. By subduing the light, however, this defect can be overcome. Artificial light is, of course, indispensable, daylight being far too uncertain and Mr. Dent has a fine equipment in his house in Avenue du Roi Albert, for obtaining the exact kind of lighting that he requires and even to focus it on one particular point and reduce it at another. The process sounds complicated and it certainly needs skill in management. But from the sitter's point of view it is all easy and un-terrifying, and the result is a portrait at once truthful, instinct with character and pleasing. Among other people whom Mr. Dent has taken, he made some particularly fine studies of Sir Ronald Macleay, when the latter was last in Shanghai.

Tientsin will benefit by the departure from Shanghai last Tuesday of a very popular and widely known resident in the Settlement — Mr. A. Mildner. For the past 17 years he has been connected with the Kalee Hotel, amongst the patrons of which he was extremely popular, for as manager he made it an extremely comfortable place. Mr. Mildner now is taking up the position of manager of the Imperial Hotel in Tientsin, which some years ago was managed by another of Shanghai's most popular hotel people, the late Mr. Marsh.

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Water Supply.

Letter from the Waterworks Company in continuation of the correspondence published in the Gazette of January 24:—

Shanghai, February 22, 1924.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 18 on the subject of the proposed purchase of the Company by the Municipality.

My Directors note that it is the Council's intention, subject to confirmation at the next meeting of Ratepayers, to purchase the Company's business and undertaking and all the land, buildings, plant, machinery and effects belonging to the Company. They regret, however, that they are quite unable to agree that the price to be paid should be arrived at on the basis of 15.3846 years' purchase of the profits earned during the year 1922.

The extracts from a joint opinion from the Hon. Sir Malcolm McNaghten, K.C., and Mr. S. B. J. Merlin set forth by you are noted, but my Directors are unable to find therein any authority for fixing a price based upon the net maintainable income on one year only.

The negotiations that have taken place since 1918 with the view to modification of the Agreement of July 1905 may be taken as an admission on the part of the Municipal Council that modification has been called for. While these negotiations were taking place and during the subsequent period when the question of purchase has been under discussion, the policy of my Directors has been to spare no expense in keeping up and enhancing the efficiency of the undertaking in the interests of the Community and beyond what is strictly called for in the Agreement of 1905, basing their trust on the assurances and the fairmindedness of succeeding Councils that the Company would receive such treatment as would compensate shareholders for the protracted delay in the negotiations. Yet the Council now proposes to take advantage of this by seeking to base the purchase price on the year in which the return on capital expenditure was at its lowest. Nor is any allowance made for expenditure on new works, etc., in recent years that is as yet not fully remunerative.

Messrs. Gibson Harris, Gardiner & Co., a firm of Chartered Accountants in London, consulted by the Company in their report say that it must be borne in mind that the Company's profits have been limited by its agreement with the Council so as to prevent the Company recouping itself for its capital expenditure in addition to a reasonable rate of interest on such capital expenditure and that it is obviously inequitable for a community which has itself fixed a limit to the profits that the Company can make, to take the amount of such profits as a measure of the value of the Company's undertaking.

Since addressing you on the 12th ultimo, my Directors have received a joint opinion from the Right Hon. Sir John Simon, K.C., M.P., probably the foremost counsel at the bar in England at the present time and Mr. G. J. Talbot, K.C. —now Mr. Justice Talbot—a counsel with wide experience in Waterworks matters. The following extract from their opinion is given:—

"We understand that it is suggested that in the event of Arbitration being required to fix the sum to be paid by the Municipal Council of Shanghai to the Shanghai Waterworks Company on the purchase of the Company's business and undertaking and other property, the Arbitrator would be bound to arrive at the figure he awards by reference to the 'Maintainable net income of the Company.' We are most decidedly of opinion that the Arbitrator is not called upon to do anything of the kind. The Arbitrator's duty is to fix a sum which in his opinion fairly corresponds to the value of what is purchased and it is obvious that since the right to purchase arises at any time after March 18, 1911 and the charges made by the Company are strictly limited by Clause 5 of the Agreement, the income in fact received by the Company from what may have been and may still be a very valuable and expensive installation is not necessarily a measure of the fair price of the installation at all. The supposed necessity of adopting the maintainable income basis appears to be derived from the analogy of cases in which local authorities have obtained power from Parliament to purchase by compulsion the undertaking of Gas or Water Companies. But there is really no analogy; for, in the present case, the position of the Shanghai Waterworks Company is that of a Company which has entered into a voluntary Agreement with the Council as the result of negotiations and the effect of the purchase clause is merely to confer upon the Company the right to be paid such a sum as might be arrived at by agreement between the parties if the negotiations were conducted fairly with a view to arriving at the fair value of what is purchased.

Failing such agreement, the Arbitrator is to fix the amount; but the Arbitrator's duty is himself to fix the sum which fair negotiations between a purchaser who wishes to buy and a Company that is not unwilling to sell might have been expected to arrive at. There is therefore no obligation to proceed by way of capitalising the maintainable net income; and indeed (having regard to the fact that there has been a large outlay by the Company in the provision of an installation to which the Municipality now succeeds) there seems much good sense in the view that the Arbitrator might be disposed to assess the figure on present day values. If the Municipality was not able by exercising its option under this Agreement to acquire the Company's business and installation, they would have to make one of their own, and the Arbitrator would appear to us to be acting quite reasonably and certainly well within his rights if he fixed the sum awarded by reference to those considerations."

Counsel from whose opinion you quote state further that the debenture or mortgage debt of the Company may or may not be taken over by the Council, that if it is taken over by the Council, then the annual interest, which has been payable upon that debt hitherto, would have to be deducted from the net maintainable trading profit for the purpose of fixing the price.

In your letter under reply you state that the actual amount of the purchase price cannot be definitely ascertained at the present stage as it will depend very largely on the question as to whether or not the Council is prepared to take over the debenture obligations of the Company.

If the taking over of these obligation is to be at the expense of the Company, it is obvious that it can be countered by voluntary liquidation prior to sale with consequent redemption of debentures.

Mr G. J. Talbot, K.C., in his opinion states in regard to debentures: "It cannot, I conceive, matter to the Council, as the obligation whether it is continued or discharged by payment, must go equally in reduction of the purchase money."

Further arguments might be adduced but sufficient have been put forward, in the opinion of my Directors, to confirm their stand for the present value basis, supported as it is by such eminent counsel as the Right Hon. Sir John Simon, K.C., M.P. and Mr. G. J. Talbot, K.C. If the Council persists in adhering to the maintainable income basis my Directors see no recourse but to appeal to arbitration as the divergence in price based on these two methods is so wide. The price on the present value basis (as at December 31, 1922) is as stated in my letter of April 13, 1923, Tls. 14,947,780 while the price on the maintainable income basis as proposed in your letter under reply is less than Tls. 8,000,000. (The debenture issues of the Company are included in these figures).

It may be pointed out that if once the Council should give one year's notice to the Company to purchase under Clause 9 of the Agreement of 1905, the Council would be bound to purchase whatever the result of an arbitration might be.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding on the matter hereafter, my Directors think it well to state that the Council's letter under reply—if it is intended to be—cannot be accepted by my Directors as the notice of intention to purchase referred to in the Agreement of July 1, 1905.

In view of the reluctance of the Council and of my Directors to incur the heavy expenses involved by arbitration, my Directors, in order to evince their desire of meeting the Council's views as much as lies in their power while safeguarding the interests of the shareholders to whom they are responsible, are prepared to propose to the Council as an alternative to purchase, some compromise that might be arrived at on the basis of a profit-sharing arrangement whereby the Municipal Council should participate in the profits earned after paying interest at an agreed rate upon the capital cost of the concern, the Company in return being authorized to base its charges for water upon a meter tariff. By this means the Municipal Council would avoid the necessity of paying the present value of the undertaking (and of raising the amounts that will be required for future extensions) and of charging higher water rates to obtain a return thereon than would be the case if a compromise, as is now suggested, be decided upon, while it will at the same time greatly increase its financial interest in the Company and by some form of representation on the Board, its measure of control. Should an arrangement on these lines commend itself to the Council my Directors will be pleased to submit a scheme in detail.

My Directors would request the Council to give this letter early publication in the Municipal Gazette as they consider it a subject of considerable interest to the Ratepayers who should be in a position to consider the subject some time before the Annual Meeting.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. B. Pitcairn,
Engineer-in-Chief & Manager,

Notification of Communicable Diseases.

With a view to securing assistance in obtaining early notification of communicable diseases amongst the Japanese Community, the following letter has been addressed to the Consul-General for Japan:—

Council Chamber,
Shanghai, February 13, 1924.

Sir,—I have the honour to draw your attention to the difficulty experienced by the Council in securing prompt notification of communicable diseases from Japanese medical practitioners residing in the Settlement, and, having regard to the paramount importance of this measure as a means of safe-guarding the public health, I have the honour to request your valued co-operation.

In this connexion, I have the honour to inform you that, in April last, a letter was addressed to every Japanese doctor whose name appeared on the list so kindly furnished by you, requesting him to notify promptly to the Health Department any case of certain specified diseases occurring amongst his patients, and a similar request has been communicated during the current year. Nevertheless, cases of death amongst Japanese patients from the specified diseases have been reported from time to time, which have not been notified after diagnosis of the complaint. The following recent cases are quoted for your information:—

Minoru Matsuoka, Pd.-77 Haining Road (Dr. K. Akita) Smallpox.

Keuchi Baba, 1136 Woosung Road (Dr. K. Kurahara) Smallpox.

Both of these patients were admitted to the Shinozaki Hospital, 66 Boone Road, instead of the Municipal Isolation Hospital. Another case of smallpox which was recently reported, but was not notified by the doctor, was:—

R. Tumura, Kashing Road (number unknown)—Dr. Satomi. This case was admitted to Dr. Satomi's private hospital, 6 Miller Road.

In bringing this matter, which is regarded in a serious light as prejudicing the preservation of public health, to your attention, I have the honour to request that you will impress upon all Japanese medical practitioners, firstly, the importance of prompt notification, and secondly, the undesirability of treating acute communicable disease in private hospitals. In the latter connexion, I also have the honour to request that you will be so good as to remind the Japanese doctors concerned of the facilities afforded by the Municipal Isolation Hospital (as published in the Municipal Regulations), where patients may be attended by their own doctor, and where a trained Japanese nurse is in attendance specially for Japanese cases.

In conclusion, I have the honour to convey to you an expression of the Council's appreciation, in advance, of your valued co-operation.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. S. B. Rowe,
Acting Secretary.

S. Yada, Esq.,
Consul-General for Japan.

Mixed Court Report for January.

Communication from Outside Bodies.—While the hearing of what is commonly known as the Ningpo Road Robbery Case was sub judice, a communication was received from the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce requesting that the accused be handed to the Arsenal Authorities. The Court characterized writings of this description as a criminal attempt to interfere with the free and impartial administration of justice. More especially was it so in this case when it was remembered that the case against four of the ten accused was withdrawn by the prosecution and the charge against two of the remainder was dismissed. In view of the fact that this custom appeared to be tolerated by certain other Chinese Courts in spite of the theoretically independent status of the modern Courts in China, and as assurances had been given by the offenders that this practice would cease, no further proceedings would be taken on this occasion, but any similar offence in future would form the subject matter of a criminal charge.

Unrepresented Foreigners.—Of the thirty foreigners charged, two were found guilty of shoplifting and sentenced to three and six months' imprisonment, respectively, to be followed by expulsion in both instances. The only other serious charge was one of lareeny for which the Court imposed a sentence of one month. The remaining 27 were charged with minor offences which were met with short terms of imprisonment, small fines or cautions.

Precedents.—On several occasions during the hearing of Chinese civil actions, lawyers in their arguments referred to Court decisions and orders rendered prior to the case at issue and tried to insist that these earlier decisions must be upheld. In one case the Bench found it necessary to point out that such earlier decisions might hamper the exercise of justice and that consequently the Court was in no way bound to look upon earlier decisions as precedents. It would only take into consideration the facts of each particular case and would be guided by law and equity.

TAKE PEPS

THE best safeguard against the chest and throat troubles due to changeable temperature is to take a few Peps every day.

The germ-killing medicine that comes from a Peps tablet as it dissolves in the mouth is breathed straight into the lungs.

Strength to resist colds is thus conveyed to every part of the bronchial tubes and lungs. Inflammation set up by a sudden chill is allayed, and immediate relief given to bronchitis sufferers. There is nothing half so good as Peps for the throat and chest.

THE LAY OF THE LAST HUNT

The way was long, and the wind was cold,
The General felt he was growing old,
As his pony stopped on the dreadful brink,
And letting him fall, it watched him sink,
With never a tremor and never a blink,
And turning, it trotted home!

The water was cold and the mud was black,
And poor old Teesdale had lost his hat.
He uttered a curse and he damned his bones,
For the hunt had galloped off after Jones,
And vain regret!

There were two tired loafers who'd lost their pip,
And they came up together to Potter's Dip;
The one got over, the other remained,
The one went on and the other was pained,
He cried that his comrade's escutcheon was stained,
At leaving him all alone.

PAPER HUNT CLUB'S LAST OUTING

The last hunt of the season took place on Saturday afternoon starting at 3.30 at the Gun Club on Hungjao Road. It had been originally intended to hold an additional handicap at Kiangwan on that afternoon, but it was decided to cancel the handicap and have an ordinary hunt instead. About a hundred riders participated in the hunt, which was laid by Mr. N. L. Sparke for Messrs. J. G. Lyon and V. D. K. Craddock, light and heavy-weight winners of the previous event. The hunt was despatched by the Master, Mr G. Grayrigge, and riders immediately galloped off towards Marah. The going was found to be rather on the heavy side, as was only to be expected after the recent rains, but the run was a very enjoyable one although the wind was piercingly cold.

From Marah the paper lay in a clear and broad trail on the dark earth to the Slough of Despond, where the real business of the day began. A few of the leaders reached it and got over without mishap, but once trouble started, it led to further trouble and the air became blue with ejaculations. Messrs. Martin Little and G. Buyers found themselves in water up to the waist, while over and round on every side riders jumped or pushed and scrambled through the Slough.

The trail had doubled back at once through Panama and round by the back of Marah and across Hungjao Road, towards Benbow's Finish, and now came the nine-foot waterjump, laid in this [illegible] the hunters. The jumping on the [illegible] usually is found to be towards the close of the season, but there [illegible] refusals.

The hunt now found themselves in the Wilderness and a brief check took place while the knowing ones ranged west looking for the new trail, which they soon found. So away raced the hunt, still strung out in an immense long line, as the check had been too short to bring the riders together. The trail led straight [illegible] creek and then on to Forth, and away to a crossing of the Rubicon Creek near its junction with the Siccawei Creek. After a brief run in the trans-Rubicon country riders duly negotiated the Twins, [illegible] hunt [illegible] Seyka, Quartermaster W. G. [illegible] long jump northwards towards Miss Johnstone's line.

Mr M O Springfield now led the hunt on a smart dash homeward past Mrs Leader's bungalow down Miss Johnstone's line, where on the low ground lies the deep cleft full of water, laid by Mr Sparke two years ago, and now laid again. The leaders cleared it but General Macnaghten lost his pony, as also Mr. J. H. Teesdale, who unfortunately got very wet and lost all his chance of a win this season.

The survivors now scented home and Mr. Springfield made the going again at a terrific pace, closely followed by Dr. Davis, Mr. H. W. Lester and Mr. P. Stanglund. They darted through the Rubicon Creek where the last named went clean under, but Mr. Botelho took his place and with the rest of the hunt after them in full cry, they dashed down Hungjao Road, and into the country again for Dallas Grave and the Clearwater Jump.

At Clearwater Mr. Springfield had shot his bolt and presently his over-tired pony tripped and fell and Dr. Davis took the lead and held it to the finish. He was challenged on the Westward Ho line by Mr. A. J. P. Heard on the crack Letchfield, but the effort cost Mr. Heard his mount, so he was out of it. A cloud of lightweights followed Dr. Davis, for the pace and the absence of checks killed off the heavy and medium-weights and the order of finishing at Port Said is as shown on the card, details attached:—

1. Dr. Noel Davis on Sherwood
2. Mr. W. Hu on Huntsman.
3. Mr. P. Stanglund on Spade Guinea.
4. Mr. W. G. Johns on Torrid.
5. Mr. G. Pollock on Liability.
6. Mr. C. G. Acker on Accelerator.

GUNNERS' POINT-TO-POINT RACE

Fair weather and good going favoured the Field Artillery Battery on Sunday when the postponed individual point-to-point race was run in the home country. The start was at the corner of Warren and Hungjao Roads in French country, thence to Forth, Family Creek Wade, Drop and Crawl, the Barrier Platform and down the Bee Line to the finish.

Both battery ponies and those privately owned compete. Riders are handicapped on weight and ponies on reputation, and the [illegible] the result that few competitors have ever been on their mount [illegible]

At 10.15 Lieut. Barnes started the heavier gunner on the oldest pony, the scratch man following four minutes after. Fate soon overtook Gnr. Arnovick on "The Quail" and then Gnr. Wilson parted company with his mount in Family Creek Wade. By this time Gnr. A. Ferguson, half-a-minute from scratch, had established a lead, which he maintained over Drop and Crawl to [illegible] began to tell on some of the four [illegible] one amble. Each of [illegible] of the country at Barrier Creek [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] the hunt [illegible] Mr. Mercer leading [illegible] Bee Line and [illegible] for becoming [illegible] and rider came down and failed [illegible] again.

The Bee Line jumps proved too [illegible] for most of the ponies, and nearing the finish about half-a-dozen swerved to the path at the side of the creek causing a mêlée of casualties at a small stone bridge. Of the few who cleared were Gnrs. A. Ferguson, McCann, and Sgt. McIntyre, who passed the flags in that order, with Gnr. Nahon's pony second.

The fastest time, Gnr. Ferguson's, was 17 minutes, the slowest about half-an-hour, the tail end of the ride coming in at a trot. A sergeant, sad to say, would have been last but was saved by the gentlemanly instincts of a gunner just ahead who checked his pace saying "After you, sergeant, if one of us has to be last let it be me."

Tilden Defeated by Alonso

Buffalo, Feb. 25.

Senor Manuel Alonso, the Spanish player, beat Mr. William T. Tilden, 6/4, 1/6, 6/1, 3/6, 6/4, in the final of the Men's Singles Indoor Lawn Tennis Tournament.

Mr. Tilden was erratic throughout, especially at the net, where he frequently netted seemingly easy chances. Senor Alonso covered the court in a sensational manner. His driving was brilliant and his backhand play unbeatable.—Reuter's American Service.

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY

Scotland Defeats Ireland by 13 to 8: France Loses to England 7—19

Edinburgh, Feb. 23.

Scotland beat Ireland by 13 points to 8 in glorious weather before 20,000 spectators here to-day.

Scotland scored after seven minutes through Waddell, Drysdale converting. Ireland up the attack and the Scottish goal had two narrow escapes. It was a fast, open game, the play going quickly from 25 to 25. A great Scottish forward rush ended in Bertram running across, Drysdale converting. Ireland made very strenuous efforts to reduce the lead. A fierce forward dash overcame the Scottish defence and G. Stephenson scored a try, which he himself converted. At the interval the score was Scotland 10 Ireland 5.

On the resumption an Irish forward rush resulted in G. Stephenson scoring again, but the try was not converted. The play was very keen and the Scottish defence withstood prolonged hammering. From a scramble near the Irish line Waddell scored, but the kick failed. Scotland thus won by 13 points to 8.—Reuter.

England v. France

London, Feb. 23.

The international rugby football match between England and France was played to-day at Twickenham in fine weather before a crowd of 25,000, including the King. The ground was in excellent condition.

England won by 19 points to 7.

At the outset the play was fairly even with England getting more of the ball. A forward rush took the game into the French twenty-five, where a splendid bout of passing by the English backs ended in Jacob scoring a try, which was not converted. Shortly afterwards as a result of more excellent work by the English backs Jacob ran over again, but again the try was not converted. England was now outplaying her opponents, although the latter got their share of the ball in the scrums. Near the interval in a passing movement Catcheside received the ball and, with the French full-back going for his legs, made a four-foot jump over him and scored an unconverted try. At half-time England led by 9 points to 0.

The game re-opened with England attacking. The French tackled well. After a quarter of an hour Behoteguy, the French three-quarter, dropped a fine goal. Then the English backs raced away and Jacob went over again, Conway converting. Towards the end Young scored and Conway converted. Then in the last minute after good handling Ballarin, the French three-quarter, scored an unconverted try, reducing England's lead to 19 points to 7.—Reuter.

Sir HENRY J. WOOD

"I consider this instrument the greatest contribution to the advancement of music since the original invention of the gramophone itself."

Dame CLARA BUTT

"I feel that you have in this invention easily placed the Grafonola several years in advance of any other known gramophone."

Sir DAN GODFREY

"There is something about it which is different to all other gramophones, to my mind, very natural and satisfying in its fidelity."

Mr. HAMILTON HARTY

(Conductor, Halle Orchestra)

"Your instrument, by comparison, makes every other gramophone old fashioned and untrue."

SILVER.

The London price is ⅛d. lower for ready and 1/16d. lower for forward than a week ago. China has been a consistent seller on a small scale. India has been on the whole more of a buyer than a seller. Locally it does not look as if China in the near future is likely to give much support to the market. There is very little doing in exports and few bills offering; on the other hand, spot cargo is finding a ready market and clearances are good. The price of dollars is still Tow—71.5375. The price of silver in New York on Thursday was 64 7/16 cents, buyers bidding at quoted price, sellers asking higher price, firm, very little offering. The New York/London cross rate was 430¼.

EXCHANGE.

There has been very little genuine trade exchange business doing during the week, most operations reported being on account of speculators or inter-bank. The closing rate last week was T.T. selling 3/3d. but the market opened on Saturday at T.T. selling 3/3⅛d. On Monday the rate remained unchanged at opening but in the afternoon there was a rise to T.T. 3/3⅜d. The advance, however, was short lived, in fact a matter of minutes, when there was a drop to the opening rate T.T. 3/3⅛d. and on Tuesday a further decline at opening to T.T. 3/3⅛d. In the course of the forenoon a further collapse took place to T.T. 3/3d. the present level, at which the market is quietly steady with small sellers at about 1/16d. over the rate for March, 3/3⅛d. April, 3/3 1/16d. May. G.$ T.T. 70 ready and forward to June is the quoted rate, but T.T. 70⅛ is offered from some quarters. For Bills 4 m/s. are quoted 3/4d. February/March, 3/3⅞d. April, 3/3⅝d. May/June, and 4 m/s. L/C G.$ 72 ready and forward.

LONDON BULLION

Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

Under date London, January 16, Messrs Samuel Montagu & Co. report as follows on the bullion market:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 9th instant amounted to £126,234,595, as compared with £126,233,095 on the previous Wednesday.

Indian and Continental demand being on a small scale, the larger proportion of the moderate amount of gold available this week will probably be despatched to New York.

The United Kingdom imports anl exports of gold during the month of December, 1923, were as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.
Sweden	£ —	£ 306
Netherlands	2,862	277,684
Belgium	—	3,568
France	—	63,957
Switzerland	—	49,420
Spain and Canaries	678	—
Egypt	—	255,000
West Africa	31,875	—
United States of America	—	1,937,471
Rhodesia	186,424	—
Transvaal	2,245,528	—
British India	—	304,321
Straits Settlements	—	11,440
Other Countries	817	37,745
Total	£2,468,180	£2,940,912

The Transvaal gold output for December, 1923, amounted to 778,849 fine ounces, as compared with 780,639 fine ounces for November, 1923, and 790,712 fine ounces for December, 1922.

The political situation at home and abroad has not failed to affect the silver as well as other markets by creating temporary paralysis. Although it is generally considered that the price of silver is high, there is no disposition to open bear speculative positions. One deterrent is the fact that recent attempts to do so have been far from satisfactory, for, as usual in times of political perplexity, the tendency of the peoples in the Far East is to acquire precious metals, the possession of which gives them confidence in times of unrest.

The high appreciation of the U. S. dollar is rather a discouragement to American sales here, though U.S. dealers are now more inclined to sell, even though by so doing they do not obtain so good a dollar outturn as they have obtained during the greater part of last year. A clearing up of even one of the political difficulties to which we have alluded would probably tend to bring about easier silver prices in this market.

Indian buying orders have been small, and China has both bought and sold.

The following article from the "North-China Herald" dated December 1, 1923 throws considerable light upon the remarkable consumption of silver by China:—

"All reports on the financial and commercial position of Shanghai during the past three weeks have made reference to the steadily decreasing amount of silver available here. Silver seems to have begun to disappear in dead earnest, when Japan came into the market as a heavy purchaser of China cotton and, to pay the farmers for the crop, several millions of dollars had to leave the vaults here. Then the mints set to work really hard and called for a considerable amount of sycee, but notwithstanding that they are turning out large quantities of dollars, these do not seem to return to Shanghai to replace the lost silver. The result of it all is that a condition of unusually severe financial stringency provails in the port, and the detrimental effect it has upon business is very great. The Chinese dealers who buy goods from foreign merchants are unable to get their customary accommodation from the native banks except at ruinous interest, and even although the rates demanded are between 30 and 40 per cent. per annum, in several cases the banks have to refuse business on these terms, having no more money to lend. The popular view of the case is that as the result of military and other requisitions in the interior, merchants will no longer trust their money to their native banks but prefer to bury it in the ground. One can by no means blame them, but the effect upon trade is extremely grave and likely to be more so."

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Uncertain Position of Yarn Following Drop in Cotton Prices: A Waiting Attitude

Mar. 1.

The yarn section of the local markets has probably provided the greatest amount of interest during the past week. Following the recent downward tendency of cotton, yarn prices have been quoted in Chinese circles as lower, but at the rates mentioned no business has transpired.

Lower prices for piece goods have been the rule at the auctions, some heavy drops having been experienced. A small indent business is believed to be taking place.

The prices ruling for produce coupled with the scarcity of stocks in some branches have restricted export business.

PIECE GOODS.

While certain firms are reported to have placed orders at Home for moderate quantities since China New Year, the interest in piece goods centres almost entirely on the auctions. As against last week all the auctions have shown a drop in quotations, but this is regarded as a temporary phase, as clearances continue good and a certain amount of steadiness is shown in the local market apart from this. Offers to Manchester from Shanghai are generally from 5 to 10 per cent. below Home demands, but it is understood that in some cases a small business has been possible during the week.

In woollen goods the market has been steady, the offtake being good. The Home market continues firm, and very little new business can be put through at present prices. The outlook, however, appears to be healthy.

As far as the auctions are concerned, expectations were entertained in various quarters of a better market this week, but these were not fulfilled. The position seems to be that fictitious prices were generally established a week ago by speculators who had cargo to clear. Having successfully done so, they are but little interested in prices to-day, and have offered no support. At the same time stocks purchased prior to the settlement are still in process of consumption, and pending their absorption no further demand is likely to eventuate from the interior. In the case of Black Italians, especially, the fall that has been seen is more or less natural, and in view of the high level of prices at which dealers have been working, lower rates may continue during the Spring and even into summer.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton—The beginning of the week was characterized by a heavy drop in the price of all varieties of cotton, this being started by American. Indian and Chinese followed suit, Shensi losing about Tls. 4. During the past two days cotton has become firmer again. When the fall in price took place it appeared as if Indian would rapidly be on a parity with Chinese cotton, but this is no longer the case owing to the fall in Chinese. Some of the mills have bought on each succeeding weakness, but there has been too much uncertainty in the market to bring out any great volume of business. Thursday and Friday were delivery days on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange and the last quotations available are those of Wednesday which are as follows:—March 42.45; April 42.15; May 42; June 41.95; July 40.85. Chinese cotton spot quotations:—Tungchow 44; Shanghai 42; Shensi 42; Hankow 41.

Local Yarn—The drop in cotton at the beginning of the week naturally affected the yarn position, and prices fell heavily. The uncertainty of the position has practically brought business to a standstill, and it is reported that with a view to giving some stability to the market Chinese millowners met and decided not to sell yarn under the following figures:—20's Tls. 192; 16's Tls. 178; 10's Tls. 164. It was hoped that this would stop the downward tendency of prices but apparently it has not had the desired effect, and the following quotations current on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange show how values have receded:—February 14—March 180.20; February 27—March 167.10. Since the last date the March quotation has risen to 171.60. Szechuan merchants are apparently holding off hoping to find the bottom of the market, but if prices stiffen as it is now thought more likely they are expected to come in shortly as within a couple of weeks the bigger steamers will be running to Chungking, and if, as is reported, freight on yarn is being reduced by Tls. 10 a bale, it may induce business on their part. Stocks are apparently very low in the interior, and once buying sets in there ought to be heavy movements of cargo. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the rates for yarn on the 27th were:—March 168.60; April 166.80; May 165.70; June 165.10; July 164.50. In sympathy with yarn cloth has come down, though not to the same extent. Newchwang is again in the market after the winter closing.

PRODUCE.

Sesamum Seed—No change. Home buyers' ideas remain considerably below the parity of local prices. Business in this line is therefore dead.

Groundnuts—A slight revival of interest is shown from Europe and as the Tsingtao market has declined owing to the accumulation of stocks there and in the interior, prospects of a resumption of business seem more hopeful.

Tobacco—Supplies of all qualities are scarce, and both local and European prices are firmer.

Wool—Very little business is reported as dealers are asking higher prices for the few lots at present available. American buyers are in consequence looking elsewhere for their supplies.

Feathers—A few inquiries have been received but the ruling high prices prohibit business in any volume.

Egg Products—New season's cargo is now on offer, but practically no transactions have been concluded on account of the abnormally high asking prices. American buyers in particular are holding off, insisting that lower prices will prevail later.

Goatskins—Are firm and in short supply. Arrivals here are reported to be taken up steadily at prices rather higher than current values in the U.S.A.

SILK.

During the week a few transactions were booked in middle and lower grades of steam filatures for the Lyons market, and the Indian markets have taken a fair quantity of the usual native sorts. America keeps out of the market altogether, as our prices are still found too high. The market closes very unsettled, at a further decline.

Yokohama Specie Bank

It is announced that new branches of the Yokohama Specie Bank have been established at Canton and Samarang.

NEW MANCHURIA BANK

Substantial Japanese Backing

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Feb. 16.

The Bank of Manchuria, the new Japanese concern which is to operate exclusively in Manchuria and assist Japanese interests in this territory, having an adequate liquid capital at its disposal and in which the Bank of Chosen and other Japanese financial undertakings are shareholders, has begun operations in South Manchuria. The bank will no doubt before long open branches in North Manchuria. In order to make room for this new Bank, the Chosen Bank has already closed branches at Port Arthur, Liaoyang, Kirin and Chenchitun. The latter town, which is on the Ssepingkai-Toanan Railway, is just being developed, and has great prospects of becoming a most prosperous trade centre for beans and other produce grown in the Petuna region and valleys of the upper Sungari and lower Nonni.

It is reported that the Three Eastern Provinces Eastern Bank, the capital of which is $4,000,000 and which has its head office at Harbin, had a remarkably successful year in 1923 and that its profit amounted to $1,300,000.

STOCKHOLM FREE PORT'S SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Sign of Renewal in Trade

Stockholm, Feb. 3.

The Stockholm Free-Port, which is administered by a semi-private company, reports a good financial result after a couple of magre initial years. After paying the city about 230,000 instead of 98,000 kroner for 1922, the company pays a dividend of seven per cent. to the shareholders with 350,000 kroner.

These important harbour works, conceived in great part as a transit port for the Russian and Baltic trade, have had to struggle against the troubles incident on the decline in shipping and trade generally, which set in shortly after its completion. It is a good sign of revival in trade that the business transacted last year has been up to the full capacity of the port, even calling for extension in the quay space and warehouse facilities, of which a part has already been carried out.—Reuter.

JAPAN'S SILK TRADE

Special Bureau Suggested

Tokio, Feb. 22.

The establishment of a special silk bureau as a Government organization designed to conserve and concentrate the policy and activities of the various organs that deal with the silk trade is the object of a petition to the Government on behalf of the silk interests in Yokohama. The opinion is expressed that, if the new Department of Agriculture comes into being, a special bureau will be set up to deal with all matters relating to silk production, manufacture, and exports.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

An Argentine Loan

New York, Feb. 23.

Only a half of the Argentine Six Per Cent. Loan of $40,000,000 was subscribed here recently owing to the greater attractions of the Japanese Loan. The underwriters have taken up the balance.—Reuter's American Service.

Sale of Swedish Steamers

Stockholm, Feb. 3.

The Transatlantic Shipping Co. of Gothenburg, which recently disposed of five of its large sailing ships abroad, has now sold two of its older steamers, the strs. Kratos and Alstern to Japan, while the sailing ship Vinga goes to Italy. The Line has of recent years acquired a number of Diesel vessels, and it is the intention gradually to dispose of all the steamers in favour of motor ships.—Reuter.

Rise in Sugar Prices

London, Feb. 22.

The Clyde crushed sugar market to-day advanced the prices of all classes of sugar by 3d. to 6d. per cwt.—Reuter.

COMPANY MEETING

NEW AMHERST RUBBER ESTATE, LD.

Annual General Meeting

The seventh annual general meeting of shareholders of the above named company was held at the offices of the general managers (Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., Ld.), No. 10 Canton Road, on Thursday afternoon. Mr. G. Crayrigge presided and was supported by Messrs. E. S. Kadoorie, C. J. L. Stewart and Mr. R. N. Swann (Directors), and Mr. G. Copley, representing the secretaries and general managers, the total attendance representing in all 33,975 shares.

The notice convening the meeting, and the auditors' report, having been read, the Chairman said:—

Gentlemen,—Since I last had the privilege of addressing you, affairs in the rubber world have considerably improved, due to British restriction, and would be very much better if the benefit of restriction in British areas was not offset by the huge increase of export from the Dutch East Indies, which are apparently out to profit themselves without regard to the ethics of the situation. It is to be hoped that the Dutch in due course may come into line with the British and play the game of supporting and preserving this great rubber plantation industry. As I told you last year, restriction does not function in South Burma, but even if it did, Amherst, under the scale, could claim a much bigger output than the estate is at present making.

Our total planted area remains unchanged, but the tapping area is now 436 acres, an increase of 112 acres on last year. This year I expect to see a further 170 acres in bearing. The average yield per tree and acre per annum is rather a disappointing one and points to Southern Burma as being a low yielding region. The estimated crop for the year was not reached, the deficit being some 9,538 lb. Excessive rains and alternate monthly tapping are the attributable causes. The estimated yield for the current year is 90,751 lb.

IMPROVED PRICE OF RUBBER.

The net price realized for rubber sold was 12.64d. for all grades as against the wretched figure of sixpence the preceding year. For this improved price we have to thank restriction. It is the intention of the Board to go in for smoked sheet and the manager has been instructed to pay a visit to the F.M.S. to inspect smoke house designs and methods of manufacture. One advantage of smoked sheet is that it packs 200 lb. per case as against crêpe 140 lb., and the more we pack into a given space the lower the transport expense will be.

Labour conditions, owing to the completion of the railway, have eased up somewhat and perhaps further anxiety in this respect need not be felt. The estate is in good condition.

During the year the manager, Mr. Palmgren, had a well-earned six months' furlough and has returned, full of vigour I hope, to face the task of adapting his organization to the financial position of the Company. I have no doubt he will be successful in instituting the economies called for and at the same time keeping the property in an adequate state of cultivation.

Great keenness is being shewn by all concerned with the property and I desire to thank Messrs. Stuart Smith & Allan, of Rangoon, Mr. Fenoulhet our visiting agent, and Mr. Palmgren, our manager, for their good work. With such keen interest as evinced, I feel sure that if Southern Burma can ever be classed on a competitive footing as a profitable rubber-growing country, New Amherst has every chance of being one of its best estates.

I think it is fitting here that I should refer to the retirement from the East of Mr. R. N. Truman, erstwhile general manager and a Director of this Company for many years. We thank him for his excellent administration in the past and we wish him long life and good health in his well earned retirement.

I would now ask you to look at the Balance Sheet. Debentures to the extent of Tls. 44,650 were issued during the year, bringing the total up to Tls. 254,361.

THE DEBENTURE ISSUE

The need of keeping this debenture issue down to as small a figure as possible is quite apparent. Except for a few petty amounts in cash, interest is satisfied by a fresh issue half-yearly and it is just a matter of calculation as to the time of exhaustion of the total sum authorized. I am hoping that long before that period could overtake us, the estate may be in full bearing, paying its way and leaving something over not only for debenture holders, but for ordinary shareholders as well. The Company is deeply indebted to Mr. E. S. Kadoorie for his continued financial support. We hope the estate may prove to be worthy of the amount of financial backing he so determinedly puts up.

The accounts have been made up on the same lines as in past years, that is to say, no Profit & Loss Account has been opened, the net profit on rubber sales less all charges is simply deducted from the development account.

The Title Deeds for our property are now issued and are deposited with the Trustees for the Debenture Holders.

The formal resolution were then duly passed.

CLUB AND SOCIETIES

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

President's Review of the Year's Work: Large Donations in Charity

The annual meeting of St. George's Society was held at the General Chamber of Commerce Rooms on Thursdaf. Sir Skinner Turner (the retiring President), was in the chair, supported by Mr. A. Brooke-Smith, Sir Edward Pearce, the Very Rev. Dean Symons, Dr. R. S. Ivy, Major Hilton Johnson, Mr. A. C. Clear and Mr. E. L. Allen.

Proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, the Chairman said:

It is now my duty and pleasure to move the adoption of the report and accounts of St. George's Society for the past year. They have been in your hands for some time and I do not need to read them to you. The report presents no new features, but I venture to think we can congratulate ourselves on the very satisfactory state of affairs shown by the accounts and on the activities the society has shown during the year under review.

The accounts are presented to you in the same form as last year and we stand in the fortunate position, thanks to the generosity of our members, of having an ample balance at the bank while our investments have been investments by the purchase of Tls. 4,500 Municipal Debentures. But our expenses, alas, are always with us and the need for the help of the society still continues and shows no signs of any decrease. Our thanks are specially due to our hon. treasurer for the work he does for us in this matter: I know it is no light job.

You will see that our charitable disbursements have increased from $5,581.56 to $7,633.79, and I assure you that all the cases that come to us receive the most careful, as well as sympathetic, consideration at the hands of our Almoners and the Charity Sub-Committee. To them all we owe a debt of gratitude for the work they have done. It is again most satisfactory to note that we are able to record the repayment of loans to the amount of $535.12.

EDUCATION, GOLF AND WALKING.

Your Committee has decided to give further assistance in the matter of education and an examination will shortly be held for two scholarships, one for boys and one for girls, the children of Englishmen.

Our membership has again increased: and this year by no fewer than 181 new members and 32 Life Members. Here I should like to mention the services of Capt. Rolfe and Mr. Holmes who were instrumental in introducing no less than 12 Life members: thus carrying out the suggestion made by your Vice-President at the last annual meeting.

Turning to the other activities of the society, it is gratifying to have on the table here the Cup kindly presented by Mr. Prentice for competition between St. Andrew's Society and ourselves. (Applause) the team had an excellent day's golf. Long may be friendly rivalry continue between them and long may the Cup remain with us. Our congratulations to the team. Then it was most gratifying to know that the team for England in the International Walking Race was composed of members of our Society and won handsomely: our congratulations to them as well.

The two dances held were most successful and added handsome amounts to our charitable funds: I do not think I am putting it too high when I say that, thanks to the Dance Committees, the ball on St. George's Day at the Carlton was one of the most successful functions of the year in Shanghai.

Your Committee have met regularly and after the due transaction of business have lunched together—at the expense of each other. (Laughter). We have had the pleasure of entertaining Col. Marr Johnson and Mr. Slowe before their departure from Shanghai, as well as Col. Gordon and Admiral Leveson.

A FAREWELL AND WELCOME.

Gentlemen, it has been a matter of great pride for me to have been President of St. George's Society during the past year. I know the need of this society in Shanghai, and I believe in the value of our national societies. This society naturally fosters our love for England and all that she stands for in the world. It is a worthy ambition for any Englishman to be chosen as your President. In conclusion I have to thank you all, Committee and members, for the honour you did me in electing me last year, for the support you have given me during the year and for the forbearance which you have extended to my failings.

As chairman of the charity committee, Mr. Trenchard Davis mentioned, in seconding the motion, that in addition to those cases referred to in the report, the society had been instrumental in raising $4,000 to assist an Englishwoman and her two sons to go to Australia. It had not only been possible to pay her passage, but to provide her with £15 per month for 12 months after their arrival. The society had also helped two other Englishmen.

The Chairman expressed their thanks to Dean Symons, who, he said, had done so much in connexion with the society's charitable activities.

The report and accounts were adopted.

OFFICERS FOR 1924.

The election of officers was then proceeded with. Proposed by Dr. R. S. Ivy, and seconded by Sir Edward Pearce, Mr. W. H. Trenchard Davis was elected President for the ensuing year. No one save those like himself, said Dr. Ivy, could possibly realize the amount of work Mr. Trenchard Davis had done on the Committee of the society.

Proposed by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. A. Brooke-Smith, Mr. A. C. Clear was elected Vice-President.

The following were elected to serve on the Committee:—

Mr. Trenchard Davis, President, Mr. A. C. Clear Vice-President, Dr. R. S. Ivy, Sir Edward Pearce, Sir Skinner Turner, Mr. A. E. Baker, Capt. E. I. M. Barrett, C.I.E., Mr. A. W. Brankston, Mr. A. Brooke-Smith, Capt. A. W. Dixon, Mr. E. F. Goodale, Mr. O. M. Green, Mr. C. Harpur, Major Hilton Johnson, Mr. R. F. C. Master, Mr. P. H. Nye, Mr. R. C. Phillippo, Mr. E. L. Allen (hon. secretary), Mr. W. Nation, (hon. treasurer) and the Very Rev. C. J. F. Symons, M.A., Almoner.

CELEBRATING ST. GEORGE'S DAY.

It was suggested, said the Chairman, that St. George's Day should be celebrated as on previous occasions by a service in the Cathedral during the morning and a ball at night.

As regards Empire Day, Sir Skinner went on, and what could be done for the children on that day, steps had already been taken to get into communication with other national societies, with a view to ascertaining whether it were possible to hold some general demonstration for British children.

The meeting decided to celebrate St. George's Day as last year.

Votes of thanks were accorded to Mr. W. Nation, hon. treasurer, and Mr. E. L. Allen, hon. secretary, to whose untiring efforts the Society owes a very great deal.

On the conclusion of the proceedings the Chairman handed the President's Jewel to his successor in office, and Mr. Reader Harris proposed a vote of thanks to the retiring Chairman, which was enthusiastically acclaimed.

SCALP INFLAMED WITH ERUPTIONS

Itched and Burned. Baby Cross. Cuticura Heals.

"My baby's head broke out in little red spots which grew larger and formed sore eruptions. The eruptions soon spread all over his scalp which was very much inflamed. He could not sleep on account of the itching and burning, and was very cross.

"I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. After using it we could see an improvement, so purchased more, which completely healed him." (Signed) Mrs. Violet Williams, Jubilee Cottage, Lliswerry Rd., Newport, Mon., Eng.

There has been more life in the local share market during the past week, with a marked demand for Langkats (Combined), Shanghai Explorations and Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co. for both cash and forward delivery. Practically all other shares with the exception of "Rubbers" have continued steady with an upward tendency.

London market quotations with exception of Chinese Engineering & Mining Co. and "Shells" have continued steady and the following are the latest prices added to us this week:—

THE NEW TAXATION IN FRANCE

Government's Scheme Accepted: Additional Revenue of Frs. 7,500,000,000

Paris, Feb. 23.

The Chamber approved by 354 votes to 218 the ensemble of the Government's fiscal programme. Taken in conjunction with his victory in the Senate on Thursday by the narrow majority of 16, the final passing of M. Poincaré's taxation proposals, after an all-night sitting of the Chamber lasting till seven o'clock this morning, means that the Premier can confidently look forward to remaining in office at any rate until after the elections.

The latest political developments are already apparently influencing the franc, which yesterday recovered to 99 to £1.

The taxation proposals are expected to produce Frs. 7,500,000,000 additional revenue. Most of this will used for the purpose of balancing the Budget. The so-called recoverable expenditure has hitherto merely been debated to Germany's account.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 25.

The first executive act following the passage of the financial proposals is a decree forbidding access by foreigners to stock exchanges except with special permission.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 27.

The Produce Exchange, which has been compulsorily closed for the past week, has been permitted to re-open upon the representatives of sugar, oil and rubber interests agreeing upon stringent regulations, like the exclusion of foreigners and the reduction of the periods for the execution of contracts.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 22.

The French franc recovered to-day to 100.50 and the Belgian franc to 113¼.—Reuter.

FRENCH ELECTORAL CAMPAIGN

Ex-Premiers' Appeals to Democrats and Socialists: Left Leaders' Policy

Paris, Feb. 25.

M. Briand, speaking at a Radical-Socialist banquet at Carcassonne last night, prophesied certain victory for the Left Parties in the forthcoming elections, provided Republicans made common cause. M. Briand advocated the creation of an atmosphere of peace in which Germany would feel that her neighbours would enable her to achieve a peace that would be real.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 25.

M. Briand's speech at Carcassonne last night may be regarded as the opening of the electoral campaign. The ex-Premier appealed to all Democrats and Socialists to unite against the Governmental bloc. A national union, he declared, would bring victory.

The ex-Premier, M. Painlevé, at the same time made a similar appeal at Annecy.

Evidently the Left parties mean to fight the elections on a platform of international solutions through the League of Nations as opposed to the doctrine of force. The Left leaders declare that M. Poincaré's policy of military pressure has failed, that new methods and new men are required, and their policy of close and cordial inter-Allied cooperation, with the extended use of the League of Nations as the arbiter of international disputes, will bring France the reparations and security she has so far failed to obtain.—Reuter.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—A woman who was killed by falling from Westminster Cathedral has been identified as Mrs. Davey, of Hammersmith. Her two daughters were four and eight years of age respectively. The woman is said to have left a note for her husband saying that she was tired of life.—Reuter.

FALL OF BELGIAN CABINET

Anti-Ruhr Policy Attack by Socialists and Democrats: M. Theunis Resigns

Brussels, Feb. 27.

The Chamber to-day rejected by 93 votes to 79 the bill embodying the Franco-Belgian economic convention. The Premier announced that he would resign, as the Government had made the bill a matter of confidence.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 27.

The Franco-Belgian Convention which caused the resignation of the Premier, M. Theunis, is now effective.

It has been two years in negotiation and has been strenuously opposed by the Belgian manufacturers and the press on the ground that it gave France seven times the number of conce sions granted to Belgium.—Reuter.

Later.

The fall of the Belgian Government, which consternated Government circles in Paris, creates an interesting European situation on account of its international implications just when reparations seem to be entering a decisive stage. Opposition came from different quarters and is based on diverse grounds, but the most formidable assault proceeded from a combination of Socialists and Flemish Democrats, who for a long time have decried the occupation of the Ruhr and feared that the Convention would lead to further subservience to France.

The King requested M. Théunis to form a new Coalition. It is understood that M. Théunis declined. It is now anticipated that the King will summon the Socialist, M. Vandervelde, or the Flemish leader, M. Cauwelaert, but the Socialists have recently been advocating dissolution and are preparing an electoral campaign.—Reuter.

LUDENDORFF ON TRIAL

Charge of High Treason in Bavarian Monarchist Movement: All Germany on Tiptoe

London, Feb. 26.

Reparations are momentarily forgotten in Germany. All eyes are turned to Munich where the trial opens to-day of Herren Ludendorff and Hitler and eight others on a charge of high treason in connexion with the Bavarian Monarchist revolt in November last year.

The trial is reviving the keenest political passions. The newspapers are freely venting conflicting opinions. The Bavarian Government has taken very extensive precautions to safeguard order. The law courts where the trial is being held are surrounded by troops. Political meetings are forbidden. Barbed wire has been erected at several points on the frontier while the town itself is crowded with visitors, including hundreds of foreign journalists few of whom, however, can gain admittance to the Courts.—Reuter.

Crowded Court and Friendly Atmosphere

Munich, Feb. 26.

The trial of Gen. von Ludendorff, Herr Hitler and seven of their alleged accomplices, on charges of high treason in connexion with the revolutionary attempt in Bavaria in November, opened to-day at the former Infantry School.

The approaches to the court were blocked with barbed wire, and armed soldiers and police held up everyone, demanding to see their passes, while a detective inside examined those admitted for hidden weapons.

The hall was packed to suffocation with pressmen and witnesses, but the public were very limited.

Gen. von Ludendorff, wearing a blue lounge suit, headed the accused when they entered the court. The reading of the indictment lasted an hour and a half. Then the Prosecutor proposed to exclude the public, and the court adjourned to consider this.

Later.

When the Court resumed; no announcement was made as regards admission of the public. A noticeable feature is the friendly atmosphere in which the proceedings are being conducted. None of the accused appear to take the affair very seriously.

The President of the Court made a statement laying sympathetic stress on Herr Hitler's war career.

Herr Hitler, in a long statement, attributed his action to patriotic motives and denounced the conduct of Dr. von Kahr and Gen. von Lossow, who joined the movement under duress and immediately suppressed it when free.—Reuter.

Unsensational Proceedings and Public Apathy: Monarchist Movement Explained

Munich, Feb. 27.

A slight snowfall this morning sufficed to keep away from the vicinity of the court-house even the few persons who assembled yesterday. It is evident that the citizens of Munich are little interested in the trial, because it is already clear that the case will provide no sensations and will not have any serious consequences for General von Ludendorff and Herr Hitler, a fact of which they are probably aware.

One of the accused, Herr Weber, President of the Nationalist Oberland Bund, made a statement today explaining the aims of the Bund, which, he said, were chiefly to tear up the Versailles Treaty and to create a new German Fatherland. He gave an account of his conversations with Dr. von Kahr, General von Lossow, and the chief of the Bavarian police, Herr von Seisser, showing that all three had approved the revolt.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S BUILDING OF NAVAL CRUISERS

No Contravention of Washington Naval Treaty: Only Replacement: Some Comparisons

London, Feb. 26.

A score of well-known Liberal Members of Parliament have issued a manifesto urging reconsideration of the project to lay down new cruisers and destroyers as being unnecessary, economically disastrous and morally wrong, and contending that Britain's action would create mistrust abroad and endanger the work of the League of Nations. The manifesto asserts that four new cruisers are already built for the Royal Navy, and points out that Japan has reduced her naval estimates by Y.45,000,000.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 27.

In the House of Commons today at question time, Mr. C. G. Ammon, Parliamentary Secretary Secretary to the Admiralty, said that it was not in the public interest to publish details of the new cruisers, but they would conform with the requirements of the Washington Treaty. The Admiralty expected the cost to be between £1,500,000 and £2,000,000. The effect of their building on the number of the personnel of the Navy must depend on the decisions reached on the replacement programme, which would be the subject of Government investigation. The latest figures in regard to the light-cruiser strength of the British, American, French and Japanese Navies were respectively 48, 29, 16 and 28.

Mr. Ammon added that, had the full programme of the late Government been embodied in the naval estimates for 1924/25, the extra cost involved would have been approximately £3,000,000 and the additional personnel 14,000. He also stated that the increase in the Mediterranean Fleet did not indicate a change of policy on the part of the Government.—Reuter.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Fifty-seven Americans will receive approximately $1,000,000 under the first group of awards arising from the sinking of the Lusitania.—Reuter's American Service.

MILITARY CONTROL IN GERMANY

British Proposal of Revival to be Discussed by Inter-allied Committee

Paris, Feb. 26.

The British plan for the resumption of inter-Allied military control in Germany, outlined in Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's Note to the French Government, demands an inventory of German ammunition depôts.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 27.

The Conference of Ambassadors has assembled to discuss the British memorandum on military control in Germany, which proposes to revive the Inter-Allied plan of September, 1922, substituting a committee of guarantees with limited functions for the present Control Commission. The plan had been dropped owing to the occupation of the Ruhr.

Later.

The Ambassadors' Conference has referred the British memorandum to the Inter-Allied Military Committee at Versailles, which is presided over by Marshal Foch.—Reuter.

Berlin, Feb. 27.

A semi-official statement refuses to believe that the British Government would lend a hand to the encroachment on German sovereignty involved by revival of the Guarantees Committee, which, the statement declares, is not provided for in the Treaty of Versailles.—Reuter.

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF RED ARMY

M. Trotsky's Review of the Growth and Development of the Soviet

Rosta News Agency

Moscow, Feb. 21.

In an article written on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the Red Army, M. Trotsky, after making an historical survey of its growth and development, writes in part:—

"The international situation we face on this day of the sixth anniversary has changed for the better for us. One state after another recognizes us, or is preparing to do so, 'de jure,' which means that they recognize that we exist on a 'lawful basis.' The Red Army takes due note of this.

"However, the Red Army has long since learned to look upon the Revolution as the most lawful basis of the Workers' State. The very fact, indeed, that six years were needed for the bourgeois governments—and then only a part of them—to recognize our existence, is the best evidence of the enmity surrounding the first Workers and Peasants' State.

"This is why"—states the People's Commissary of War of the U.S.S.R.—"the Red Army, reduced five times from its former numbers, enters into the third triennial period of its existence with a profound conviction that it is still, as before, wanted by the Socialistic mother country to keep watch on her national independence and progress."

ARMAMENT LIMITATION

Task too Hard for League of Nations: Self-Denial None Will Accept

Rome, Feb. 25.

Little progress has apparently been made by the League of Nations' conference on the limitation of naval armaments. The conference throughout sat privately. A communiqué issued last night states that a report has been submitted to the Council of the League and also to the Governments concerned, but it is reliably reported that Spain has withdrawn from the conference and that Argentina, China and Turkey have declined to accept the limitations while Brazil, Chile, Greece and Sweden have made offers conditional upon similar undertakings by Argentina, Turkey and the Baltic Powers. Thus nobody has pledged to definite disarmament.—Reuter.

The Attitude of Spain

Rome, Feb. 26.

It is semi-officially denied that Spain has withdrawn from the Naval Disarmament Committee. It is explained that the members of the Conference are not empowered to take decisions, but merely to frame opinions in the form of reports.

Later.

The Naval Disarmament Conference closed to-day with an official declaration of unanimity, which is difficult to reconcile with the reports of dissension among the delegates. Notwithstanding the semi-official denial, the Spanish delegate has published a statement explaining that he retired because he failed to secure general support for a tonnage of 105,000, instead of the permitted 83,000. Russia uncompromisingly claimed 400,000 tons and also the closure of the Baltic and Dardanelles to all warships.—Reuter.

ITALY'S INCREASING PROSPERITY

Revenue Returns Evidence of Economic Progress under Fascist Government

Rome, Feb. 20.

An indication of the increasing prosperity of Italy is given in the statement of the Minister of Finance, Signor de Stefani, relating to the increased Treasury receipts. The figures for 1923 show an increase of 70,000,000 lire over those for 1922, and this increase has been derived from all the sources of income, viz., 13,000,000 lire from direct taxes, 37,000,000 lire from school taxes and transfers of property, 13,000,000 lire from the indirect taxes on articles of consumption, 2,000,000 lire from industrial monopolies and matches, and 4,000,000 lire from the popular Italian game of lotto. This means that the State income has increased from 1,325,000,000 lire for the period ending August, 1922, to 1,395,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1923.

These figures are the best evidence of the economic progress of Italy under the Fascist Government. New Italy is devoting all her energies to the balancing of the budget, which, of course, cannot be attained without a considerable reduction in expenditure and an increase in taxation. Premier Mussolini has set himself to work along these lines with his usual thoroughness. He has inspired the great mass of the workers with the will to labour. There are no longer labour strikes in Italy. Useless elements in the various departments of administration have been removed. Italy is again the land of tourists, particularly American. Whatever may be said as to the imperialistic aims of Italy, it is evident that the policy of to-day contributes to the maintenance of peace. While the Mussolini Government is ready to defend the honour of the country and to safeguard its interests, it is also ready to make sacrifices in order to prevent Europe being plunged into a war that would bring ruin to the whole continent.

The Pawnshop Test.

Another indication of the growdiminution in the number of articles pawned in the Monti di Pieta. These institutions are very old in Italy. They were founded in 1444 by a popular saint of the Middle Ages, Bernardin of Sienna, who tried by their means to find a remedy for usury. Figures show that the poorer classes who have recourse to these institutions in time of need are now in better circumstances.

Unemployment has decreased. The number of unemployed in Italy is only 240,000, that is to say, about equal to the number of unemployed in the city of London. The proportion would be less if the United States would consent to enlarge the quota of Italian immigrants. Before the war the number of immigrants from Italy to the United States reached and even exceeded one million, but now it is limited to 42,000 per annum. This is the cause of the labour difficulties in Italy at present.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

THE DOCKERS' STRIKE SETTLEMENT

Will the Men Accept the New Terms? Hostile Element in the Provinces

London, Feb. 22.

The dockers' conference after further long sittings decided to recommend acceptance of the terms and has adjourned until Monday. The delegates, meanwhile, will proceed to their districts to submit the whole position to the men and will return with a mandate to decide the issue.

Later.

While it is hoped that the strong recommendations of the leaders will convince the majority of the dockers of the wisdom of accepting the terms of settlement, the fact that mass meetings of strikers at Hull, Bristol, Grimsby and Newport to-day resolved to continue the strike unless the full two shillings are granted immediately, shows the strength of the intransigent movement. The resolution adopted by the delegates' conference stresses the "tremendous advance" made towards decasualization and its maintenance by the agreement reached.—Reuter.

Northern Strikers' Acceptance of Employers' Offers

London, Feb. 24.

A mass meeting of dockers at Hull to-day passed a resolution by an overwhelming majority in favour of acceptance of the employers' offer. Newcastle and Bristol strikers also voted for acceptance. A meeting of 5,000 Liverpool dockers enthusiastically agreed to accept the employers' offer. There were only three dissentients and an overflow meeting of 1,500 voted unanimously for acceptance. An overwhelming vote in favour of acceptance was also the result of the meeting of the Glasgow dockers.

Meetings of the members of the Stevedores' Union at Poplar and Canning Town, however, decided to continue the strike pending the settlement of their demand for an increase of 2s 6d. a day and 25 per cent. on piecework rates.

Feb. 25.

Yesterday's mass-meetings of dockers throughout the country without exception decided in favour of resumption, which is thus inevitable to-morrow, except in the case of the stevedores, whose union claims 25,000 members, mostly in London.—Reuter.

Work to be Resumed at Once: A Strike of Railwaymen Narrowly Averted

London, Feb. 25.

The dockers' delegate conference has decided to endorse the settlement and to call off the strike. Work will be resumed at all ports to-morrow morning.

Members of the National Union of Railwaymen at Hull went on strike to-day owing to the dismissal of hundreds of checkers employed at the docks, on the railway and in the warehouses.

The strikers are of opinion that this is a reprisal for the recent strike, but officials say that owing to the dock strike it is impossible to keep the full number of men usually employed at the goods depot.

Up to the present the engine-drivers have not joined the strike

Later.

The Hull strike has ended in view of the conclusion of the dock strike and the railways' withdrawal of dismissal notices.—Reuter.

Stevedores Still Stubborn

London, Feb. 26.

The executive of the Stevedores' Union have unanimously recommended all members to resume work to-morrow under the terms of the National Agreement pending the result of negotiations, the employers having promised that particular grievances will be favourably considered immediately.

Later.

A hitch has occurred in connexion with the resumption of work by the stevedores, as the men have turned down the Executive's recommendation.—Reuter.

Stevedores Resuming Work

London, Feb. 27.

Mass meetings of members of the Stevedores' Union at Poplar, Canning Town and Bermondsey this morning unanimously decided to call off the strike. Work will be resumed to-morrow.—Reuter.

THE BRITISH BUDGET

Little Remission of Taxes in Prospect

London, Feb. 24.

The "Sunday Times" understands that although the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have a surplus when the national accounts are closed next month Mr. Philip Snowden does not expect to be enabled in his first budget to do much taxation remission. Something may be done to reduce the sugar duties and Mr. Snowden will also try to take something off tea. The Government does not mean to spend any more on the Singapore base, according the paper, as the Cabinet has decided not to proceed further with the scheme.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S FOREIGN POLICY

Views of the Home Secretary: Endeavours to Establish a Lasting Peace

London, Feb. 24.

Mr. Arthur Henderson, the Home Secretary, in the course of a by-election speech at Burnley to-day, declared that the Peace Treaties had failed. The Government's task was to arrest demoralization, prevent further economic ruin, establish real peace, restore trade and commerce, and place them on such a firm foundation that never again would civilization be threatened with a similar experience. Therefore the Government must insist on revision of the Treaty of Versailles as soon as possible and a solution of the problem of reparations.

The Prime Minister was trying to create the necessary atmosphere. He was hopeful that steps would be taken through a world conference or the League of Nations, or both, to see whether we could not return to the position taken up by President Wilson and the policy of the Allied statesmen in 1915-17.—Reuter.

Mr. Henderson's Speech on Versailles Treaty Reproved in the Commons

London, Feb. 27.

The Government were again made the target for attack to-day on a motion for adjournment moved by Mr. Ronald McNeill, former Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, calling attention to the question of the Government's responsibility for utterances of Ministers made outside the House. Particular reference was made to the Government's policy in regard to the Versailles Treaty, arising from the speech of the Home Secretary, Mr. Arthur Henderson, in the Burnley by-election campaign on February 23, in which he declared that the Treaty must be revised if further economic ruin was to be prevented.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, replying to his critics, said that Mr. Henderson had apparently been under the impression that as a Minister, he could speak as a private citizen. Of course he was wrong. The Prime Minister declared that the speech was not an expression of the Government's foreign policy, which he had defined in his statement at the opening of Parliament. He pointed out that he was awaiting the reports of the Reparations Committees of Experts before making a complete survey of all the war problems.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin said that in view of the Premier's reassuring statement his party would not press for a division. The motion was accordingly negatived without a division.—Reuter.

PARLIAMENT AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Reduction of Reparations Levy on German Imports

London, Feb. 25.

In reply to questions in the House of Commons to-day, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. William Graham, announced that an agreement had been reached with Germany whereby the rate of the British reparations levy on imports from Germany would be reduced from 26 per cent. to five per cent. from to-morrow. Germany agreed to compensate the German exporter later and to make it a punishable offence to charge any part of the levy to the British importer. Customs receipts respecting imports prior to February 26 will be reimbursed by Germany in gold bonds.

In the House of Commons to-day at question time the Colonial Secretary, Mr. J. H. Thomas, stated that after careful consideration the Government had decided, particularly as the imperial Economic Conference was itself not unanimous on the subject, that a standing Economic Committee with general terms of reference would not assist co-operation of the Governments. Therefore the Government was unable to support the adoption of the Imperial Conference's recommendation.

Pressed on the subject, Mr. Thomas said that the Governments of the Dominions had not been consulted, since there had been no time to get in touch with anybody in connexion with this. He added that the matter would come before the House.

Colonial Air Transport.

Replying to Major L. Ropner, Conservative member for Sedgefield, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said that the Government at present did not intend to subsidize air transport companies in the Colonies or to make grants to Colonial Governments towards the support of Colonial air lines.

Railway Protection in China.

Answering another question, the Prime Minister said that the Chinese Government had assured the foreign representatives in Peking that they regarded the whole matter of railway policing and protection as an urgent problem of China's internal administration and were fully conscious of their responsibility for a practical solution. It was understood that they had already taken steps to reorganize the railway police force.

The China Tea Duty Again.

Dr. W. A. Chapple, Liberal member for Dumfriesshire, has been elected Vice-Chairman of the Parliamentary group formed to look after Chinese affairs, of which Mr. T. P. O'Connor is Chairman.

The "Manchester Guardian" hears that the dispute with China with regard to trade-marks is in a fair way towards settlement.

The question of preference against China tea will come up in the Budget discussions in the House of Commons. Although the amount involved is not very large, equality of admission, says the journal, is a point of pride with China, and, if the policy of discriminating against China is abandoned, it would probably improve Chinese opinion towards British imports, which declined last year.—Reuter.

HAVANA, Feb. 27.—Battling Siki is seriously ill with bronchial pneumonia.—Reuter.

POOR LAW RELIEF AT POPLAR

Government Action Criticized in Parliament: The Premier's Explanation

London, Feb. 26.

In the House of Commons to-night, the Government successfully withstood the first serious Opposition onslaught in a debate evoked by the action of the Minister of Health, Mr. John Wheatley, in withdrawing the previous Government's order restricting the amount of the poor law relief payable by the Poplar guardians, which the opposition interpreted as a dangerous precedent.

Mr. Asquith moved a vote of mild condemnation which the Unionists sought to strengthen by an amendment. In the course of a long debate, the Prime-Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, gave explanations which mollified the Liberals, and the motion was shelved after the House had defeated the Conservative motion by 295 votes to 228.

Feb. 26.

Mr. F. Briant (Uniorist) moved the Liberal motion in the House of Commons with regard to the action of the Minister of Health, Mr. John Wheatley, in withdrawing the previous Government's order restricting the amount of the poor law relief payable by the Poplar guardians, mentioned earlier. Mr. Asquith supported the motion.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 27.

As a result of yesterday evening's vote, it is not likely that the debate regarding the Poular Guardians will be resumed.

The division revealed differences in the Liberal party. At least a dozen voted with the Conservatives and others abstained as a protest against the Liberal tactics, while a large section voted for the Government. There was no cross voting among the Labour Members and the Conservatives.—Reuter.

NATIONALIST PARTY IN INDIA

Inquiry Into Working Reforms Sanctioned but No Round Table Conference

London, Feb. 25.

A very important statement on India will be made by the Secretary of State, Lord Olivier, in the House of Lords to-morrow in view of the demand of the Swarajists for a round-table conference with the object of achieving immediate self-government.

It is understood that the Government are prepared to sanction an inquiry into working reforms, but in a form different from a round-table conference. The Cabinet are not disposed to depart from the principles embodied in the Government of India Act.—Reuter.

Government Not Prepared to Accept Recommendations for New Constitution

London, Feb. 26.

In a statement on India in the House of Lords to-day, the Secretary of State for India, Lord Olivier, stated that the Government were not prepared to accept or to indicate that they might be prepared to accept on the recommendations of any round-table conference a new scheme for now establishing full and responsible government in India only three years after the institution of the scheme of reform, which had been adopted "because we are convinced that the establishment of full and responsible government would be worse than perilous; it would be big with disaster to the people of India," and when the purposes which that transitional scheme was designed to give had not been availed of.

The Government, having the same ultimate aim for India as the Swarajists, namely, the substitution of a responsible Government for the present admittedly transitional political constitution, earnestly desired to avail themselves of the Swarajists' disposition towards effectual consultation. The Government were open to consider any practical proposals, but were not yet satisfied in regard to what might be the best means of establishing that closer contact and better understanding that was so manifestly desirable, but hoped that after consulting the Government of India they would be able, with the least avoidable delay, to decide the means. Meanwhile the Government, which were unequivocally friendly towards the Indian Constitutional Reforming Party, had appealed to that party for patience, circumspection and co-operation in using the Councils for efficient administration.—Reuter.

Sikh Grievances.

Delhi, Feb. 26.

In the Legislative Assembly to-day a Swarajist motion in favour of the appointment of a committee to inquire into Sikh grievances was carried without a division, after a lengthy discussion in which the Pundit Malaviya bitterly denounced the treatment of Sikhs and "the killing of non-violent Akalis at Jaito." Several members declared that the deposition of the Maharaja of Nabha was a blow against the Sikh organization.

Sir Malcolm Hailey, on behalf of the Government, opposed the establishment of the committee. He denied that the Government of India had done anything to injure Sikh religious aspirations and denied that women had been maltreated or that machine-guns were used at Jaito, where the firing by Government forces had been of a minimum character. Sir Malcolm eulogized the bravery and devotion of the Sikhs and declared that the Government's hand of friendship was still held out to them.—Reuter.

Campaign in Kenya.

Nairobi, Feb. 26

Indians in Kenya have begun an intensive non-co-operation campaign as a protest against alleged political grievances, their initial step being refusal of payment of the poll-tax.

Lengthy lists of summonses have been issued and four Indians at Mombasa have been committed to prison.

The movement has extended to the voters' rolls, in which there are hardly any Indian names.—Reuter.

EGYPTIAN SOVIETS

Grave Action by Textile Workers

Alexandria, Feb. 23.

A strike, lasting three months, in the textile factory "Filature" was settled a fortnight ago by the intervention of the Governor, but the operatives yesterday evening repudiated their agreement. A thousand operatives remained in the factory all night, women bringing them food. The men declare that they will run the works on their own account and have formed a species of Soviet. The operatives at the Egolin cotton-seed factory are behaving similarly.

The situation is causing uneasiness and nationalist intrigues are suspected. Zaglul Pasha, the Prime Minister, has been asked to intervene. A battalion of troops has been sent to the Filature, whose owners insist on a lock-out.—Reuter.

Later.

The operatives at the Filature works have walked out, probably owing to their having heard of the Government's determination to eject them forcibly.—Reuter.

Operatives Resuming Work.

Alexandria, Feb. 25.

The operatives at the Filature textile factory have resumed work. Five of the leaders have been taken back and the workers' lawyer has been recognized on the responsibility of the Government. The owners' repudiation of these men was the direct cause of the outbreak.

The workers have evacuated the Egolin cotton seed cake factory, which is being occupied by police pending negotiations.—Reuter.

RUBBER RESTRICTION IN MALAYA

London, Feb. 25.

In the House of Commons, replying to a question suggesting abandonment of the rubber export restriction policy in British Malaya in view of the increasing supply of rubber from the Dutch East Indies and the diminishing output in Malaya, the Colonial Secretary, Mr. J. H. Thomas, said that he did not contemplate reversal of his predecessor's policy in this matter. He was not aware that any substantial body of opinion, either at home or in Malaya, advocated the repeal of the ordinances in question.—Reuter.

BRITAIN AND THE BOXER INDEMNITY

London, Feb. 27.

In the House of Commons today at question time, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Arthur Ponsonby, replied affirmatively to a question whether the Government intended to introduce a Bill enabling them to appoint a committee to deal with the disposal of the Boxer Indemnity, but he said that no inference should be drawn in regard to the likelihood of Boxer Indemnity funds becoming available for defaulted payments on the unsecured debts of the Chinese Government.—Reuter.

THE HOURS OF LABOUR

London, Feb. 27.

In the House of Commons today, in reply to questions, the Minister of Labour, Mr. Thomas Shaw, announced that he proposed shortly to introduce legislation dealing with the Washington Hours of Labour Convention. He added that what had occurred in Germany in contravention of the Convention could not absolve us from keeping our word.—Reuter.

Germany's Capital Exports

Paris, Feb. 22.

The Paris edition of the "New York World" understands that the Second Committee of Experts, of which Mr. McKenna is Chairman, unanimously estimates the amount of German capital exported since the War at $2,000,000,000 or double Mr McKenna's previous estimate.—Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

IMPERIAL WIRELESS EXTENSION

Post Office Control in Great Britain and State Control Throughout the Empire

London, Feb. 28.

The report of the Imperial Wireless Committee recommends that the Post Office should own and operate all the Empire wireless stations in Britain, or, alternatively, that exception be made in the case of Canada and the existing competition between the Post Office and the Anglo-Canadian wireless be continued, subject to the safeguarding of public interests in any licence granted to the Anglo-Canadian service.

In any licence granted to a private company the State must reserve the right to take possession or to exercise control of stations in an emergency. Leafield Station should be enlarged and the new high-power station now being built at Rugby should be extended to a 16-mast station and a second new station of similar capacity should be erected without delay. Each high-power station should have a world range and be equipped with the latest apparatus. The Post Office should establish an improved business organization.

The present terminal wireless station at Cairo should be removed from the Empire system as soon as the requirements or the Admiralty are met by the other stations and the proposed new high-power stations in India, South Africa and Australia are operating. An expert wireless telegraphy commission should be requested to report on the extent and cost of a wireless system for the Colonies to complete the Empire network of wireless communications Private enterprise should be given facilities to develop wireless communication outside the Empire, subject, in the case of Anglo-Continental services, to the payment of royalties or other dues in view of the competition between wireless and the State-owned cables.

There should be free competition in foreign wireless, subject to the State reserving the right to expropriate, take possession or assume control in case of national emergency.—Reuter.

GERMANY AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

A Question of Terms

Berlin, Feb. 28.

In view of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's recent statement, it is noteworthy that the Foreign Minister, Herr Stresemann, in a speech in the Reichstag, declared that the Government had not rejected in principle the idea of entering the League of Nations, but had not received an invitation from a responsible quarter.

He further stressed the necessity for a guarantee of full and unconditional membership of the League to be extended to Germany, including membership of the Council.—Reuter.

IMMIGRATION INTO AMERICA

Washington, Feb. 28.

The Senate Emigration Committee to-day decided to recommend retention of the census of 1910 as the base of the allocation of immigration quotas, but the Committee is in favour of reducing the percentage to be admitted from three per cent. to two per cent. of the 1910 total.—Reuter's American Service.

PROSPEROUS CANADA

Speech from Throne Foreshadowing Lower Taxation: Tariff Revision

Ottawa, Feb. 28.

The Speech from the Throne at the opening of the Dominion Houses of Parliament dwells on the evidences of increased prosperity and the probability of an early start on debt reduction and relief of taxation.

It forecasts much constructive legislation, notably revision of the tariff in the interests of Western farmers.

Regarding the decisions of the Imperial Conference, the speech merely states that a report of the proceedings will be presented to Parliament.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. SHIPPING BOARD FLEET FOR SALE

Washington, Feb. 28.

The United States Shipping Board has invited bids, closing on March 14, for its entire fleet of 1,335 vessels, of which approximately 423 are operating. The Board will fix the minimum price after the valuation, instead of the former terms of a minimum of $30 per ton.

The vessels to be sold include the Leviathan and her big sister ships.—Reuter's American Service.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

NOBODY LOVES ME

The Woes of Football Referees

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Jan. 11.

You probably remember the pathetic little story of the small boy who, when reproved by his parents and being afterwards seen leaving the house, explained:—"Nobody loves me, I'm going into the garden to eat worms."

I was moved to recollection of that little human narrative by reading some cases of the woes of Referees, perhaps the most downtrodden class of men we possess. They have, it is true, formed a Union, but their efforts to substantiate their claim to any sort of consideration except permission—grudgingly given—to breathe the fresh air of Heaven, are a tragic failure. Here is a little type of the sufferings they undergo.

Referees are recommended by some of the authorities to take the name of a player who perpetrates rough play. But it is doubtful whether the official who adopted this course at Newcastle will ever do it again. He took the name of Gibson—the crowd disliked the idea. Whatever happened afterwards—whether a fullback kicked hard or a half missed his kick or a forward ran down the touch line the crowd chanted in chorus:

"TAKE HIS NAME!"

The crowd at these gatherings is no respector of persons and the average referee is vested in its eyes with about as much dignity as a milch cow. The crowd starts out with a critical watchfulness. It regards him as a necessary worm. It examines his attire and if his plus fours are over-striking, the first opportunity is seized of conveying to him without the least delicacy that shopwalkers should leave behind their business trappings when they come to a neighbourhood where that sort of display is regarded as an offence against local decency. It is quite ready to comment on his personal appearance; if Nature has been at all unkind to him, there are thousands who are ready to call very pointed attention to the fact. If he shows by his alacrity and movements that his training is not as good as it might be, the crowd is there waiting to assure him that the time for the exhibition of prize fat cattle is approaching and that he ought to send his name as a certain winner. If he whistles too much, the crowd encourages him to go on with the performance and if he—to their mind—does not whistle enough, they help him. Of course the paternal Football Association is a moral force at his back, but these ebullitions are not easily dealt with either on the spot or in subsequent representations in cold blood to the organization which has commissioned him to be present.

AN UNPOPULAR DECISION.

Then if his decisions are unpopular? When time is drawing to a close, he will do well to keep some wind well in hand so that he may make a sprint to the railway station and jump on the first goods train leaving for no matter where, so long as it does leave. Delay may be fatal. Recently in the West Country the referee's decisions did not meet with the approval of the local spectators, so one enthusiast simply waited for him and laid him out with a blow on the nose. Of course the Football Association simply had to do something in this case for the sake of preserving alive the race of referees and it came down with heavy penalties on the offending parties. Indeed in another case it has barred from attending any local matches of a certain club a spectator who seemed, like the dog which bit the postman, to have a "down" on all referees. He clearly regarded them as a set of bold bad men sent from some nefarious clime to mar the harmony which should prevail at these gatherings and he always lay in wait for them as they left the ground.

PERHAPS THEY LIKE IT.

I suppose there are referees who like their job. They do not get well paid for it. No decision they ever give pleases all sections of the crowd and if there is, so far as its utterances are concerned, a more bloodthirsty set of men than the average collection of football "fans" I do not know it. The referee's only hope of peace—there is no enjoyment—for him is that some football player will by some action incur more odium than he himself does. The crowd then lavishes on the unfortunate victim all the caustic criticism which would pierce the hide of a rhinoceros. We are indeed rapidly approaching the time when the referee will have to don chain-armour. The poor chap would have done it long ago but for the difficulty of getting up and down the ground. You can't run like a rabbit in metal sheathing, either on the ground or to the railway station.

HATLESS WOMEN LABOUR M.Ps.

Not A Question of Fashion, But of Headaches: Ceremonial Critic

"The first afternoon of the meeting of the new House is a kind of museum of historical antiquity," said Miss Susan Lawrence, M.P., when asked for her impressions of her first day in Parliament.

"I think the first impression of any new member is a very strong one of the historic continuity of the House. The closing of the door against the King's messenger in order to assert our independence; the Speaker being led to the Chair with each wrist firmly grasped by his proposer and seconder; the formal bows of the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords—by the way, what infinite practice must be needed to replace a three-cornered hat correctly on top of a full-bottomed wig!—all those details, so often rehearsed, impress the most casual observer with the vast age of the assembly.

"Amidst the infinite calm of these curious archaic proceedings one's mind was occupied with the contrast the House will present a week hence. It was a sort of handshake before the prize fight."

Asked about the action of the three Labour women members in discarding hats in the Chamber and thus setting a new fashion, Miss Lawrence said:—

"It is extremely fatiguing to wear a hat through a long afternoon and evening of work. I personally found it almost unbearable to do so even at the County Council. It was a question of headaches. It is such a bother to wear a hat continuously.

Miss Jewson, another of the Labour M.P.'s, smiled when it was suggested that she had made a departure from custom by wearing a brown dress and a brilliantly hued scarf in the House. She was similarly attired to-day.

"What struck me most yesterday in the House," she said, "was the preponderance of men; and the very small number of women. We hope to increase the number of women at the next election.

"The cremonial and formality which I witnessed yesterday strikes one as a terrible waste of time. There are historical associations. We don't want to break down all these at once, but we do want to get on with the job. We have been waiting since December 6, and feel we could have got something going to meet unemployment.

On the hat question, Miss Jewson said: "We (the Labour women) have decided not to wear hats because it is more convenient not to do so in an overheated chamber like the House of Commons."

ITALIAN ELECTIONS

Signor Mussolini's Plans for Power

Rome, Feb. 19.

The Government list of candidates for Parliament is being made the subject of final revision this week by Premier Mussolini himself. The Fascisti list consists of a big coalition of various parties under Fascisti leadership but the Fascisti candidates are in the minority. The last obstacle to the success of this coalition seems to have been removed last week when Signor Orlando, the former Premier, was persuaded to accept the Fascisti programme and the Fascisti persuaded to accept him. This is most important, as Signor Orlando's personal popularity is very strong in South Italy and Sicily, where the Fascisti have a weak organization and where party programmes count for less than personalities. Having persuaded Signor Orlando to accept the Government's platform is Premier Mussolini's most brilliant political achievement since he split the formidable Popular Party.

The Opposition has been utterly split by Signor Mussolini since he assumed office. It is even uncertain whether any Opposition list will be presented. Three Socialist Parties and the Popular Party are the only ones making any serious gesture of opposition, and their strength is local. Thus Parliament is being virtually elected by one man. This fact arouses resentment in those who are devoted to equalitarian democracy, but the Fascisti insist that it is necessary to get national work done. Premier Mussolini in his relations with Parliament appears to be aiming not so much at a Parliamentary majority in the ordinary sense as at a sort of big executive committee.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

ITALIAN ELECTION FORECASTS

Strength of the Opposing Parties: Probability of a Large Government Majority

Italian Wireless through Reuter.

Rome, Feb. 23.

Although nearly two months must elapse before the Parliamentary elections occur, it is now possible to outline the character of the coming Chamber of Deputies. The new electoral system, which was voted last summer under the old Parliament, will secure for the Government a total of 356 seats, representing a majority of 177. The remaining 179 seats will be occupied by those whose names are inscribed on the Opposition list, belonging to various non-Fascist Parties. The Government list, which was compiled by a committee of five prominent Fascisti and then approved by Premier Mussolini, embraces 216 Fascists, 43 mutilated combatants in the Great War and gold medal soldiers, 28 Right Wing Liberals, 31 Left Wing Representatives, 10 Catholics who have left Signor Sturzo's party, and 26 non-party men with a reputation for financial, commercial and technical training. All social classes and all professions are represented. There are some 50 lawyers, 30 journalists, 20 capitalists and employers of labour, 20 university professors, 20 workmen and clerks, and 10 members of the aristocracy. Most of the candidates hold important positions and are recognized authorities on their own particular calling or professions.

The Premier's Choice.

Signor Mussolini is a candidate for two districts, in Milan and Naples. He will have to choose in favour of one if he is elected for both. Among the candidates in Tuscany is Signor Benelli, author of "The Jest."

Most of the leading figures of Italian political life have been included in the Fascist ticket, notably, ex-Premier Orlando and Signor Salandra. The chief exceptions are ex-Premier Giolitti, who is in the field in Piedmont on the Liberal ticket, ex-Premier Bonami, who is at the head of the Unitarian Socialists, and Prince Colonna di Cesaro, formerly Minister of Posts and Telegraphs under Premier Mussolini, who is leading the Democratic Liberals. Ex-Premier Nitti will not participate in the elections.

The Opposition is still busily discussing its lists, which must share the 179 seats, but there are no signs of the formation of a bloc against the Government lists.

Extension of Foreign Policy.

The new Italian foreign policy, as carried out by Premier Mussolini, is to be further extended. Although of far-reaching importance to Italy and affecting all Europe, this policy can be expressed in one sentence, namely, completion of treaties with neighbouring nations chiefly for purposes of friendship and trade. The treaties with Spain, Jugo-Slavia and Russia were signed in order to increase Italy's commercial relations. Italy realizes that such things as the defensive and offensive clauses in the Jugo-Slav treaty and certain terms of the Spanish treaty are interpreted abroad in many deeply political ways, such as Italian moves against French domination of Europe. But Premier Mussolini's supporters declare that the chief object of Italy's aspiration is to become a greater [illegible] nation and live at peace with the rest of Europe.

New Treaties.

It is said now in well-informed political circles that the Government's next steps in new policy will be treaties with the following nations in this order: Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia and France.

Ever since Premier Mussolini came into power he has expressed the desire to make a new treaty with France, inasmuch as he believes that all the old treaties are antiquated. But occupation of the Ruhr and concentration of French policy upon England have delayed such a step, and present conditions are regarded as unfavourable for the new pact which Italy believes to be inevitable.

The Rumanian treaty appears to be imminent. In the treaty which Italy needs. In connexion tion would be wheat and oil, which Italy needs. In connection with oil, it is reliably reported that the Sinclair deal with the Italian Government is off. The Government concluded a preliminary agreement with Messrs. Sinclair for boring for oil here, but when the scandal broke Premier Mussoliri immediately gave instructions for the negotiations to be broken off.

The Race for Oil.

Italy is watching the race between Britain and America to corner world oil, but hopes to protect herself by treaties with some countries. After Russia she looks to Rumania. With the latter Italy hopes to enjoy special privileges. Italy believes that a treaty with Rumania would be most valuable for future commerce with Rumania, which last year took a big jump.

In Vatican circles Signor Mussolini's treaty policy is heartily approved. Where the League of Nations failed to bring peace and end chaos, Mussolini's programme of friendship is bringing results which are appreciated by the Pope. In many instances better relations between Italy and other nations have led to better relations with the Vatican.

The Value of the Lira.

The lira, which has freed itself from bondage to reparations, is closely following the oscillations of sterling with respect to the gold dollar. This is comforting, as the lira is the only European currency whose fate is linked with that of the currency of rich, strong England. This is due to the fiscal policy followed since the beginning of the war and to the recent economic policy of discipline and work and restoration of the budget.

THE ITALIAN CRUSADE SHIP

Objects of the Cruise to South America

Rome. Feb. 19.

After many days' delay due to bad weather, the "crusade" ship Italia left Spezia on her voyage round Latin-America in order to diffuse commercial and intellectual information and so arrest the influence of the United States in the Latin republics. The Italia carries carefully and artistically arranged samples of every kind of Italian manufacture from electrical appliances to automobiles, specimens of arts and crafts, and quantities of Italian literature. The crusade is under the direction of Signor Giurati, who will lecture on the place of Latin countries in the world and the right to maintain the Latinity of South America.

The ship was recently visited by the King who evinced deep interest and expressed good wishes for the crusade. The Italia will proceed to Rio, Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, Santos, Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, Valparaiso and Panama, returning by way of Trinidad, the Antilles and Gibraltar. The voyage is expected to occupy seven months and it is hoped that the visit of the Italia will revive interest in Latin culture.

The Italia is the liner Konig Albert, formerly belonging to the Nord-Deutscher-Lloyd, sequestered by Italy and renamed Palasciano but now known as the Italia.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

OBITUARY

Mr. George R. Chester

New York, Feb. 26

Mr. George R. Chester, author of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and other stories, died to-day.

Mr. Chester was born in Ohio in 1869. He left home at an early age and engaged in various occupations. He began his newspaper work as a reporter on the "Detroit News" and later joined the "Cincinnati Enquirer," of which he afterwards became Sunday editor.

Mr. Chester then began writing for a newspaper syndicate and magazines, when his characters "Wallingford" and "Blackie Daw" brought him popularity as a novelist and playwright.—Reuter's American Service

AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Funds for the Prosecution

Washington, Feb. 21.

The Senate has adopted the resolution of the House of Representatives, appropriating $100,000 for prosecution in the oil lease case

New York, Feb. 21.

Mr. Harry Sinclair expects to give evidence before the Senate Oil Committee early next week. Mr. Sinclair remarked to interviewers that the present excitement was largely a matter of policy. He drew attention to the fact that there would be two Presidential Conventions this year.—Reuter's American Service.

Attorney-General in a Hostile Camp

Washington, Feb. 22.

Attorney-General Daugherty electrified his foes in the Senate to-day by calmly appearing among them during the ceremony in honour of George Washington's birthday. Mr. Daugherty explained that his attendance was in accordance with a long-standing promise to one of their number to listen to the reading of Washington's farewell address.

Feb. 23.

There was bitter discussion in the Senate to-day on the oil leases scandal. The debate dealt chiefly with Attorney-General Daugherty and was led by Senator Borah, who declared himself willing to lay the foundation of impeachment proceedings.—Reuter's American Service.

Daugherty Declines to Resign

Washington, Feb. 28.

Referring to the demands for his resignation, Mr. Harry M. Daugherty, the Attorney-General, in a statement, says that he does not intend even to consider resigning until there has been a fair hearing of the charges against him.—Reuter's American Service.

AKALI SIKHS AGAIN

Fanatics on the Warpath

Delhi, Feb. 22.

It is reported that 14 Akalis were killed and a number were wounded in an affray in Nabha State between troops and a force of armed Akali fanatics, who raided the State. It is rumoured that a well-known Khalifat leader and a leading Member of Congress were arrested after the fighting. Lately there has been much controversy with regard to the abdication of the Rajah of Nabha which has been enforced by the Government of India.

Later.

Fourteen Akalis were killed, 34 wounded and 100 arrested. Dr. Kitchlew, the well-known Khalifat leader, and Professor Gidwani, a leading Member of Congress, who reached the scene after the firing, were taken into custody.

A force of 500 Akalis, armed with spears and firearms and screened by a force of 6,000 other Akalis, started from Bargari in Faridkot State to raid Jaito in Nabha. They were met by the British Administrator with a small party of Nabha troops. When the Administrator called on them to retire one of the Akalis fired, wounding a villager. The Administrator then ordered his force to fire. The Akalis replied with heavy fire and delivered a determined attack, which was checked by dismounted cavalrymen. Two thousand Akalis then took refuge at a shrine and the remainder broke up.—Reuter.

BRITISH BIRTH-RATE

Decline Compensated for by Fewer Infantile Deaths

London, Feb. 22.

The birth-rate in 1923 in England and Wales was 19.7 per 1,000, the lowest recorded except in the war years, 1917-1919, but it is compensated by the fact that the death-date was 11.6 and infant mortality 69, both the lowest recorded, and the marriage rate 15.2.—Reuter.

TUTANKHAMEN'S TOMB

Now under Egyptian Control

Luxor, Feb. 22.

Representatives of the Egyptian Government took over Tutankhamen's tomb yesteday. The locks affixed by Mr. Howard Carter were sawn off, the interior inspected and measures to prevent damage to the contents taken, after which new locks were affixed to the doors, and the tomb was again closed.

Mr. Howard Carter and his assistants were not present.—Reuter.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND OPIUM TRAFFIC

Medical Requirements Exceeded

Geneva, Feb. 21.

The Health Committee of the League of Nations to-day passed a resolution expressing the opinion that the 600 milligrammes of raw opium per head, adopted by the Mixed Sub-Committee on Opium, considerably exceeds medical and scientific requirements and should be reduced to 450 milligrammes as a maximum and should be only applicable in countries with a highly developed system of medical aid.—Reuter.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND HYGIENE

Epidemic Bureau Recommended

Geneva, Feb. 24.

The Hygiene Committee of the League of Nations after sitting for 10 days has concluded its work. It recommends the creation of an Epidemic Bureau in one of the Far Eastern ports to be chosen by the Governments interested and also transmission to all Far Eastern Governments of the report of the commission of inquiry, containing the draft Sanitary Convention between these countries.

The Committee has decided to institute an inquiry into malaria in Albania, Greece and Persia in accordance with the request of these countries, and also to make inquiries with regard to epidemics of plague and exanthematic typhus in Russia.—Reuter.

THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING

Tribute from the U. S. Congress

Washington, Feb. 27.

A joint session of Congress was held to-day in honour of the memory of the late President Harding, at which President Coolidge, Mrs. Harding, and members of the Cabinet and the Diplomatic Corps were present. Mr. Hughes, Secretary of State, in an eloquent address, declared that President Harding's death had been due to his exhaustion of himself in the service of his country. He concluded with the charge that the late President's spirit of brotherly understanding must characterize his countrymen if American life were to be worth living.—Reuter's American Service.

THE MEXICAN REVOLT

Vera Cruz, Feb. 25.

General Lopez has defeated the revolutionary command at Paso del Macho. The rebels are reported to have lost 150 killed and wounded. Three chiefs were captured, and executed after court-martial.—Reuter's American Service.

Tampico, Feb. 27.

The Federal forces have occupied Tuxpam without resistance. The rebels evacuated that town on February 25.—Reuter's American Service.

IMPERIAL AIRSHIP SCHEME

London, Feb. 23.

Lieutenant-Commander C. D. Burney, Unionist Member of Parliament for Uxbridge, in a speech at Bedford to-day, said that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald had told him that the Labour Party had not rejected the Imperial airship scheme, which would have their serious consideration.—Reuter.

RUMOUR OF REVOLT IN BULGARIA DENIED

Athens, Feb. 24.

The newspapers publish rumours that a Communist revolution has broken out in Bulgaria. It is reported that a Republic has been established, King Boris has been sent to the country and the Premier and certain other Ministers have been murdered. No confirmation can be obtained from official sources.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 24.

The Bulgarian Legation denies the report of a revolution in Bulgaria.—Reuter.

NEW ZEALAND AND FAR EASTERN TRADE

Wellington, N.Z., Feb. 27.

Recent investigation on the possibilities of opening up trade with Eastern countries has resulted in an offer by a Dutch shipping company to provide a regular service, provided New Zealand cancels preferential duties imposed on products from the Dutch Indies. It is stated that the proposal is not likely to be entertained since the Government prefers to make a greater effort to develop Empire trade.—Reuter.

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Prime Minister to Return in Bad Grace: His Alleged Participation in Britain's Politics: Lord Leverhulme's Visit: "Fondness for Jazz"

Melbourne, Jan. 17.

Information from London shows that the Prime Minister, Mr. S. M. Bruce, is about to return direct to Australia, leaving his colleague, Senator R. V. Wilson, to return viâ Canada, and to attempt the arrangement of a reciprocity treaty.

Mrs. Bruce has been in ill-health, and her condition is made the reason for the somewhat abrupt return of the head of the Australian Government. In other quarters, amongst those who decline to accept the official explanation, it is held that the Prime Minister must hurry back to prevent or arrest the steadily growing schisms in his own following, and the criticisms of his Government which are becoming painful and free, even in that section of the press which was so anxious to use him to depose the late Prime Minister, the ex-Labour leader, W. M. Hughes.

Mr. Bruce is expected to arrive on Australian soil by the March 4 but the best that his locum tenens, Dr. Earle Page, can say is that possibly parliament will meet before the end of March. This, of course, means that while the last general elections were held in December, 1922, parliament will have only sat for two months and "a bittock," within a period of 15 months.

Dr. Page has expressed the opinion that parliament sits too much, and that two or three months in the year is quite sufficient, but the electors of Australia hold very different views. They pay their members £1,000 a year, and they hold that parliament should at least be "working" for five months in the twelve.

Mr. Bruce is said to have delayed his departure from London because he desired to keep his eye on political eventualities in the United Kingdom, but this argument for delay in meeting parliament does not appeal to the great majority, while the Labour party in this country most certainly resents even the appearance of the Australian Prime Minister taking an active part in British politics.

Unfortunately for Mr. Bruce he will return by no means in triumph. He is believed to have hustled the Conservatives into a disastrous election, which is about to result in Labour gaining office in the old country, even if it does not immediately attain power.

JAPANESE OFFICIAL NAVAL VISIT.

Melbourne has just finished welcoming and entertaining three Japanese men-o'-war which are visiting Australia. There was nothing wanting in the reception given to the Japanese Admiral and seamen—officially. There was an entire absence of popular enthusiasm, but this must be ascribed to a general lack of interest, rather than to wilful ignoring of the visit. As in many cases what did not happen is of greater importance than what did.

The Labour party is particularly insistent that all we require to preserve peace in the Pacific is intercourse and kindly feelings towards the nations bordering that ocean. The leader of the Federal Parliamentary Labour party has more than once insisted that what we require is more talking about peace, and less reference to the possibility of war, but it was assuredly the chance for the great body of organized Labour to show the Japanese visitors in that it was anxious to hold out the glad hand of welcome.

There was an official banquet given by the Commonwealth Government at Federal Parliament House, but, though many leading Labourites were present, the official leader, Mr. Charlton, possibly the next Australian Prime Minister, was not there, and his place was taken by an unofficial member who at the best can be described as a strong Irish Radical with the cleverness of his up-bringing to avoid any complimentary reference to the British Empire.

The Japanese Admiral stressed the point that though the Anglo-Japanese alliance had expired its place had been taken by the four or five power understanding which was the outcome of the Washington Peace or Disarmament Conference. He argued that the lesser pact had been replaced by the greater. He said this in Perth on arrival, but at the more formal gatherings in the Federal capital we do not find this view repeated by any of the representatives of the countries which were and are parties to the so-called pact.

BRITISH CRUISER SQUADRON.

The British cruiser squadron, headed by the world's greatest battleship, the Hood, is expected in Australian waters some time next March. Already quite serious preparations are being made for its reception, and it is not difficult to forecast that the popular enthusiasm—the enthusiasm even of the Labourites with their pacifist tendencies—will be strikingly different from that attending the visit of the Japanese.

Perhaps a striking—even the most striking—event of the short stay of the British squadron in Australian waters will be the formal sinking of the Australian battle cruiser, Australia, which has to be finally disposed off and rendered innocuous in accordance with the terms of the Washington treaty. It is hardly necessary to say that Australians by no means appreciate this premature destruction of their one great warship, even though it may reduce the annual cost of the upkeep of the Royal Australian Navy. The Australia did excellent work in the early part of the war, and it was doubtless due to her activities that the rounding up of German raiders in the Pacific, and the destruction of the Von Spee squadron off the Falklands, was made possible and prompt. It is hoped that the British squadron will be off the coast on April 25, for on that day it is proposed to tow the bulk of the Australia out to sea, about 10 miles from Syancy, and solemnly and with ceremony send her to the bottom. British people are alleged to have no imagination, but it is not difficult to realize how such an event will impress the most callous Australians, even as the burial of the unknown soldier impressed the whole world. It has been suggested that a permanent floating lighter be moored where the Australia is to lie, but such additional details have not yet been finally decided.

THOPE SURPLUSES.

Dr. Earle Page, the Commonwealth Treasurer, has called down upon his head a mixture of faint praise and anathema. Following a habit or an impulse he has delivered a nominally important speech on Australian finance during a casual country tour.

In the course of his speech Dr. Page told us that he had used the cash in hand to redeem so much of the 1918 war loan as he was unable to convert. As the amount was £7,000,000 the sudden diversion of so large a sum would in the ordinary course of criticism call for a fuller explanation. But his announcement has been allowed to pass without question or comment.

He further stated that it was necessary to pay off the public dead war debt, and this was what the present government proposed to do, and he merely hinted that it might see its way to reduce taxation when the dead debts had been liquidated. Dr. Page seems to think that the taxpayers will willingly continue to pay taxes, in order that he may use his surpluses to reduce the public debt. It is true that he also suggests that there should be a large increase of population, with a wider distribution of the debts, and, incidentally, of the incidence of taxation. To all of this the reply of such bodies as the Taxpayers' Association, and such newspapers as the leading city dailies, is that this government which came into existence to economize where Hughes had failed to do so, is no better than the ministry it supplanted.

Thus in the first financial year after the Armistice the ordinary cost of government apart from war services, was £4 18. 4½d. per head, whereas last year it amounted to 15s. a head more. The common every-day services show generally an increase, and comparing the present with the last year under Hughes the saving on an amount of £16,000,000 is only £176,000, a quite negligible amount. It is naturally argued that were this Bruce government seriously to cut down duplications and unnecessary expenditure it would be able to both reduce the capital debt and also the burden of taxation.

INCREASING THE POPULATION.

When the Country Party appealed to the electors in December, 1922, it made a feature of the necessity of expediting immigration. With the elimination of Hughes and the advent to power of Dr. Page, leader of the Country party and author of the demand for speeding up immigration, one might have expected a sudden increase in the migration towards Australia. In actual fact nothing worth "writing home about" has taken place. Only the other day a few Commonwealth and State officials met together to see what could be done in the way of making the path of the arriving immigrant smooth.

Mr. Atkinson, the Minister attending this conference, mentioned that in 1912 the number of nominated and assisted immigrants was 46,000, but in the year just finished the number was only 26,000. When one realizes the position in 1912 and that of 1923 in the old country, and also that in the past year Australia has been hammering away to get migrants from the British Isles, and has been paying to drag to her shores some of the unemployed battalions, the failure to attract newcomers is a matter for great speculation. The Commonwealth authorities in London declare that had they been given larger quotas they could have sent many more migrants, even up to ten times the number, and at this end the Commowealth and State Immigration Departments are admittedly still only half-prepared to accept newcomers. It is hardly a matter of wonder that the mission which recently visited this country on behalf of the British Government to make inquiries on the spot declared that the necessary arrangements at this end were quite insufficient.

The Country Party has little to show for its nine months' work at expediting immigration. There is, however, evidence that in the coming year the number of newcomers may approximate the Hughes ideal of 100,000.

THE ONE BIG UNION.

Probably the most interesting of industrial matters just now, apart from the internecine war amongst the rivals in New South Wales Labour circles, is the curious development of what is known as the O. B. U., which being interpreted means the One Big Union. Of course this is an attempt to bring all the Trades and Political Labour unions under one control, in the expectation that the time and opportunity may arise when a general strike and even a revolutionary upheaval may become possible. But in order to win the great body of the workers to their side the promoters of the O. B. U. seek to legalize their position by getting themselves registered under the Commonwealth Arbitration laws. The necessary application has been made, and at once not only the employers but many trades unions have entered their protests on various grounds against the registration.

The most striking and probably the most important of the objectors is the Federated Seamen's Union, of which one Tom Walsh, married to the once notorious Adela Pankhurst, is the head. Walsh objects to the platform of the O. B. U., because it contains a pious expression of opinion in favour of a White Australia. He declares that his union has many "first-class niggers" in its membership, and the colour bar should not be persisted in. As a matter of fact, there are a good many coloured brethren in the trades unions, but their presence there has been discreetly ignored in the past. Walsh seems to be forcing the issue into the open, and it is quite on the cards that he will either compel the O. B. U. promoters to abandon their revolutionary ideas, or create a new line of cleavage in the Labour ranks on the subject of White Australia.

In Sydney the operative bakers are nominally on strike, against night-baking, but in this case the operatives are by no means determined to bring the masterbakers to their knees, and the bakers' carters are fighting their brother union. The carters declare that day-baking means extra long hours for them—a matter which they hold the operatives utterly ignore. The matter is but one of the many indications that the huge organisation of Labour is more than the leaders can control.

SOAP-MAKER'S POLITICS.

Speaking of Walsh and his coloured labour ideals reminds one that we have at present in our midst Lord Leverhulme; head of the great soapmaking business, which has interests in many of the South Pacific Islands. Lord Leverhulme is said to be merely paying Australia a visit, but appears to be obsessed with the idea that he must make speeches, and generally lay down the law for the misguided people who have settled in Australia. He has explained to us that we should have free-trade, and that increased production of wool and wheat is required to populate the country. He could hardly have chosen two primary industries which employ, each in its own way, fewer people. But he reaches the zenith of inanity when he tells us that the negroes saved the United States, and that we should import negroes to develop our tropical country. All Australia is laughing at Baron Leverhulme's incursions into Australian public questions.

He admits his 72 years, and a fondness for "jazzing." A leading Melbourne morning daily laughs good-naturedly at him, but concludes its comments with this bit of advice:—"A little more jazzing, my lord, and less jawing."

SUPERIORITY OF AUSTRALIAN COTTON.

The wheat harvest is coming off satisfactorily and in many parts of the country the crops are proving well above the average. All the talk about the woes of the fruitgrowers seems to have evaporated. Not so long ago we were told that there was a glut of peaches, yet, to-day, with the season at its height peaches are fetching 8d. to 9d. a pound, equivalent to about twopence each.

Along the sugar districts on the eastern seaboard of Queensland sufficient rains have fallen to practically assure the output for the latter half of this year, and a total production of well over 300,000 tons of sugar, with a value of nearly £9,000,000. The best news, however, comes from the pastoral areas of the northern State where the general drought has at last really broken up. There have been many places where no rain has fallen for three years, and the land was as bare as a planed board. Now rain has fallen in quantities and the future for a long time ahead is assured. In the Darling Down area the large dairying centre south-west of Brisbane, the settlers have had a very bad time. The dairying industry suffered severely, and from being a constant and heavy exporter it was until a few weeks ago expected that Queensland would have to import butter from the other and more fortunate States.

Cotton in Queensland is likely to prove remunerative this year, and at least 100,000 acres will be picked while recent tested samples of cotton grown in New South Wales have reached the Liverpool appraisers and been declared definitely superior to American Middling.

Henry Ford, the motor-car builder, is about to open a factory in Australia. His representative at first regarded Newcastle as a suitable location, but apparently he took fright at the frequency of industrial strife, and has now settled to go to Tasmania, where he can utilise the hydro-electric current, instead of coal.

The New South Wales Government has opened tenders for the building of the great North Shore bridge, to connect Sydney and the northern shores of her harbour. There were six tenders and these came from America, Canada, England, Scotland and Australia. The accepted tender has not yet been announced, but it is known that the estimated cost of the bridge is £5,750,000. The bridge will carry four railway tracks, six vehicular tracks and two 10 ft. footways. The so-called unemployed in Australia have ample work before them during the new year.

A VERY WILD CAT

Characteristics of a Fierce New comer at the Zoo

The Zoo has just added to its collection a fine specimen of the wild cat, the most interesting as well as the most formidable of our native carnivora, and so rare as to be known by name only to most inhabitants of these islands. At present restricted to the wild, mountainous districts of northern Scotland, the wild cat is rarely seen even in places it frequents.

Visitors to Regent's Park will have little difficulty in appreciating the evil reputation possessed by this species, for the flattened ears., bared teeth, and snarling hiss with which all advances are met indicate very plainly the innate fierceness and intractability of this unsociable animal.

This almost maniacal savageness is manifested at a very early age, small kittens in the nest hissing and spitting viciously at anything intruding on their lair, though still too young to leave their cradle.

The title of British tiger which has been bestowed on this cat is thoroughly in keeping with its character, for not only will it attack fearlessly and with almost incredible ferocity any animal which obstructs its path, but its mode of tracking its prey is strongly reminiscent of its larger relative.

In build the wild cat is larger and stouter than the domestic species. Unlike the larger cats—lions, tigers, leopards, etc.—it never loses its fierceness in captivity.

BEAUTY FIRST

["In towns political bitterness strikes sometimes very deep; it becomes an obsession, an emotional poison that makes its mark even upon the faces of the men and women who live there."—A leading article in a London daily.]

Pacing amid the city's hum,
I have from time to time observed
Some mug whereon the potter's thumb
Had very, very plainly swerved;
Some features past excuse or plea,
Some hopelessly disordered dial,
Constructed, so it seemed, to be
Its own (and other people's) trial.

And once I sympathized thereat;
Though frowning under its assault
I never dreamed a face like that
Was possibly its wearer's fault.
But now I search the ugly man
For hidden, self-engendered meanings—
His fearsome countenance I scan
As index of his party leanings.

"Dear me!" I muse; "and is that nose,
With its unmitigated twist,
The curious, outward sign that shows
A true-blue, fixed Protectionist?
Or was it some Free-trader's view
Too fiercely and too firmly harboured
Which slowly sent the thing askew
And fixed its present list to starboard?

"Do other facial freaks reveal
The unrelenting Asquithite;
Is there a brand for those who feel
That all the Wizard does is right?
A massive and portentous beak,
A sullen eye, a jowl so heavy—
I wonder, now, do those bespeak
A passion for Macdonald's levy?"

I cannot say; but this I know,
And know it very hard indeed,
I will not lightly undergo
This risk for any party creed.
Let reckless zealots play with fire,
But I confess without contrition
I haven't got the least desire
To be a fervent politician.

Oh, no, I will not lend an ear
To violent views in speech or print
Lest I acquire a Liberal leer,
A Tory scowl, or Labour squint!
From all extremer zeal resigned
I'll rank amid the lukewarm creatures,
And cultivate the cross-bench mind
Lest I develop cross-grained features.

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

Razor-Slashing in Glasgow: The Poetic North: Revival of Bardism

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Jan. 15.

A serious outbreak of what is known as razor-slashing is reported from Glasgow. The growing prevalence of this detestable form of crime points to a regrettable departure, among certain classes of the community, from the manly and humane traditions of the British people. We have always been combative and even quarrelsome, and actual physical assault was probably much commoner among all classes 50 or 60 years ago than it is to-day. But in former days the only persons of our race who ever made deliberate resort to edged weapons were out-and-out criminals of marked homicidal tendency. In ordinary quarrels, however violent, even in the roughest districts, the fist was the natural and instinctive weapon of the true-born Briton, who as a rule was more anxious to vindicate his manhood than to inflict serious damage on his opponent. The use of knives was reckoned a cowardly practice, characteristic of cowardly and low-class aliens, "the lesser breeds without the law," who had not been trained in the manly art of self-defence.

There is not the slightest doubt that this new habit of crime has been brought to Glasgow and several other British ports by disreputable foreign elements in the British Mercantile Marine. Recently it has also made its appearance in several Irish cities, and a demand has been raised that the authorities should look more sharply after some classes of foreigners who have either sought refuge on our soil or have come to follow certain well-defined kinds of trading. The effect of this undesirable foreign invasion is unmistakable. We understand that there are quite a number of young hooligans in Glasgow in whose pockets razors, not intended for toilet purposes, might be found. In most cases this is merely a perverted form of the play-acting instinct, fed by sensational literature of a degraded type, and the youthful possessor of the hoarded razor is as little likely to use it on his companions as Mr. Mantalini was to use his histrionically brandished razor on his own throat. But it is of bad omen if youths of our race derive satisfaction from possessing such weapons; it is almost certain to lead to a degrading form of criminal assault.

"BUNTY" IN THE FAR EAST.

Mr. Graham Moffat, author of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," had some amusing things to say to an interviewer concerning his Eastern travels. By way of prelude he was asked whether, as successful comedies like "Charley's Aunt" and "The Private Secretary" have been played in foreign tongues, he contemplated some day translating "Bunty." "Well," he answered, "I don't think there is an exact equivalent in French or Spanish, or even in Portuguese for "Hoots, mon... for instance, or that the Germans boast an exact transcription for 'Awee, hae still."

At an hotel in Shanghai, where a native Chinese was manager, Mr Moffat had occasion to enquire if two friends of his (European ladies) were at home. Came the reply—Number one, please gone topside, makee washee washee; number two, sucee gelee go outside, makee walkee walkee, which constructed meant that one of the girls was upstairs washing her hair, the other out walking.

LIVING POETRY.

A well-known American poet, Mr Vachel Lindsay, has attained conspicuousness among his fellow-bards by reviving the traditions of the old minstrels and going round the country earning his keep by giving recitations of his own verses. Whether the practice will ever revive throughout Europe is doubtful, but something like it has long been familiar in certain Bohemian cafés in Continental capitals where poets, often of no mean order, recite their own poems or sing their own songs, just as the troubadours and trouveres and minnesingers of the Middle Ages used to do in feudal halls or in market places.

The tradition is a reminder that poetry was originally meant to be spoken or sung. Departure from that tradition, Mr. Masefield pointed out some time ago in an address delivered in Edinburgh, was the main reason for the weakening of the popular hold of poetry and for its consequent decadence. Poetry, he said, is no longer addressed to the living imagination or the human heart, but "to the reflective understanding of those who have leisure to think and buy books." Poetry is a human necessity, and it cannot regain its power until the art and practice of speaking poetry are revived.

Mr. Masefield's address has led to the formation of the Scottish Association for the speaking of Verse, which is to be formally constituted at a meeting in Edinburgh. The association is to be representative of all Scotland, and branch associations are to be formed, with the particular object of promoting the use and appreciation of spoken verse and the teaching of fine speech as a part of education. The association thus appeals both to verse-writers and to educationists, and its aims are in line with the potential capacities of the Scots people as beautiful speakers, and also with the urgent and widely recognized need for a strong movement to guard England against degradation and disintegration.

LAST LINK WITH "CHINESE" GORDON

A Victim of, and Builder to, the Mahdi

With the death of Piemo Agati, at Omdurman, one of the last two surviving Europeans who were with "Chinese" Gordon when he was overwhelmed by the Mahdi at Khartoum has disappeared. There is reason to believe that Father Bonomi, who was captured on the same occasion, is still alive and ruling a missionary station in Abyssinia.

Ninety-one years ago Agati was born at Pisa of a family of builders. When 20 years of age he left Italy and emigrated to Alexandria, where he joined an elder brother in business as a builder. In 1870 he established himself at Khartoum, and when Gordon was appointed Governor-General of the Soudan Agati was entrusted with the construction of many of the principal buildings at Khartoum. He had just decided to return home when the Mahdist revolt broke out, and his retreat was cut off. When Khartoum fell, and Gordon was killed, Agati's life was spared by the Mahdi, who knew his capabilities, and proposed to make use of them. He was compelled after terrible tortures to become a Mohammedan, and was then entrusted with the construction of all the defences of Omdurman. He was also responsible for the construction of the Palace of the Khalifa, the Tomb of the Mahdi, and the principal mosques and residences of the Arab chiefs.

In 1898, when Lord Kitchener crushed the Mahdists and captured Khartoum, Agati fell into the hands of the English. He was sent to Cairo on his way home, but the sight of modern civilization, after many years in the Soudan, so frightened him that he begged to be allowed to return to Omdurman for the remainder of his life.

As result of his early wanderings in Central Africa Agati was able to give valuable aid to many explorers, including Burton, Speke, Rolfe, Piaggio, Gessi, and Matteucci.

OUR PARIS LETTER

Catastrophic Collapse of Francs: M. de Lasteyrie's Tirade on Foreign Specu ators

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Jan. 11

Another sudden fall in the exchange value of the franc, which is now less than 3d., has revived the anti-foreign sentiments of a certain section of the French public. Many of the newspapers are telling their readers that there is an organized conspiracy against French credit, that Germany is carrying on a subterranean financial war against France, and so on. It was felt in official circles that something must be done to prevent a panic, and accordingly M. de Lasteyrie, the Minister of Finance, has made a long statement to the effect that there is nothing to justify the depreciation of the national currency, and that the present admittedly difficult financial position is entirely due to the failure of Germany to pay reparations. He announces his intention of clearing out the undesirable foreigners who haunt the Bourse, and restricting purely speculative operations in exchange.

He said that some foreign firms have obtained a virtual monopoly of the rapid communications with foreign centres on which exchange transactions depend, and that one of these firms, for instance, has no less than 63 telephone lines. He also said that on November 6 a meeting of representatives of banks in the occupied regions was held at Frankfort, and that those present were instructed to use all possible means to carry on a campaign against French currency and to sell francs for dollars at every opportunity. Circulars advising French people to sell their French Rentes and buy foreign securities have been sent out broadcast.

THE ROOT OF THE TROUBLE.

M. de Lasteyrie, of course, knows that the perfectly legitimate police measures which he may feel called upon to take cannot have any real effect, because, the value of the franc depends on the opinion of the world and not of France alone. He must also be aware that great numbers of his countrymen are not sufficiently patriotic to refrain from selling French money, which is just as much a commodity as coal or any other merchandise, if they see a chance of making a profit out of the transaction. He himself admits that some exporters took advantage of the comparatively low discount rates to deposit in foreign banks part of the payments they receive abroad for their goods. He says he has made up his mind to stop this kind of thing, and he has begun by causing the Bank of France to raise its rate of discount from 5 to 5½ per cent.

The root of the whole trouble is the great amount of borrowing which the Government is obliged to carry on for the financing of public expenditure and the rebuilding of the devastated regions. Perhaps the general election may place M. Poincaré in a position to insist on a drastic cutting down of expenditure and a large increase in taxation; or perhaps the deliberations of the experts now sitting in Paris may produce some plan of co-operation with Germany which will enable the French to obtain substantial payments in kind. If these hopes are disappointed, it is not easy to see how the exchange value of the franc can be prevented from dwindling further.

THE NEW AMERICAN JOURNALISM.

Senator Paul Dupuy, the managing proprietor of the "Petit Parisien," who has just returned home after a long tour in the United States, has been entertained at luncheon by the American Club of Paris, to whom he described their country in the most glowing colours. He found it, he said, in a period of industrial activity and magnificent prosperity, based on definite principles, such as the desire to help one's neighbour, to make new outlets for enterprise, and to place within the reach of the multitude the advantages hitherto enjoyed only by the few.

President Coolidge, who has been described as cold and taciturn, received M. Dupuy with the utmost cordiality and impressed him as a man of great moral courage and force of character. M. Dupuy was particularly struck by newspaper developments in the United States. A new form of journalism, he said, prevails. Instead of pandering to the tastes of the least educated and most numerous section of the community, the leading journals are cultivating the spirit of personal dignity and are constituting themselves the protectors of their readers. The result has been a great expansion of the power and influence of the Press, which has at the same time became far more prosperous. He mentioned one daily newspaper at St. Louis which never comes out with less than 64 pages, and a New York Sunday edition which recently broke the record with 180 pages.

AMAZING LAWSUIT.

Curious litigation is taking place over the estate of M. René Degas, brother of the great French painter. The latter died in Paris in 1917, leaving a fine collection of paintings, including some of the best of his own works. He left his estate equally to his brother René and the daughter of his deceased sister. The collection was sold by auction and realized about Frs. 10,000,000 gross. After payment of death duties and other expenses, M. René Degas' share came to some Frs. 4,000,000. He died in 1921, leaving his property to his three children, who were all brought up in France.

To their intense surprise, an American lawyer came forward with a statement, supported by documentary evidence, that their father had contracted a marriage in the United States long before he met their mother. This marriage took place at New Orleans in 1869, and, after two children had been born, it ended in a divorce, which was granted before divorce became a legal institution in France (in 1884). It is therefore argued that M. René Degas's second marriage, contracted at a time when divorce was not recognized in France, was illegal, and that his three French children were therefore illegitimate and could not inherit to the exclusion of his lawful progeny by his first marriage. The children of the second union point out that their father's wish, as expressed in his will, was that they should inherit his property, and they propose as a compromise that each of the five children should have one-fifth. This offer has been declined by the American claimants, who bear their mother's name, Musson, and the case is now being fought out in the French courts. Probably there would never have been any trouble but for the misplaced activity of one of those singular products of modern civilization who call themselves genealogists and make a living by opening cupboards in which family skeletons are stowed away. The Mussons never interested themselves in their father's second marriage and ignored his existence until a genealogist revealed the possibilities of the situation to them.

SIR HENRY LUCY'S FIRST JOB

The following article gains added interest from the recent death of the veteran journalist.

"On my leaving school at the age of 12—having won the highest prize, and, as befell Alexander at a stage of his career, there being no fresh world to conquer—an inscrutable Providence found a berth for me in the office of a hide and valonia merchant in Liverpool," writes Sir Henry Lucy in "Chambers's Journal."

"There I remained for seven long years, eating my heart out, but steadily keeping my eyes fixed on the goal of journalism, whither they had long been bent. I taught myself shorthand, read incessantly, wrote the greater part of a three-volume novel, and occasionally, like Mr. Silas Wegg, dropped into poetry, which appeared in the London "Mercury."

"This tendency earned for me in the office the name of 'Poet.' A burly country customer, hearing me thus addressed, scanned my stately 5 ft. 9 in. and exclaimed, 'The Poet! What's his name? Not Longfellow, I'm sure.'

"Not bad for a tanner.

"My contributions to the "Mercury" brought me more than an honourable name among my fellow-labourers in the hide and valonia vineyard. They attracted the attention of the then assistant editor of the "Liverpool Daily Post," and served as an introduction that proved the turning-point of my life. Having more or less mastered the mysteries of shorthand, I went the round of newspaper offices in Liverpool, proffering my services. I was kindly received, but there were no openings. I have a vague impression of encountering, at the "Daily Post" office, someone coming downstairs at exceptional speed. I heard somewhere, or somehow, that Mr. Whitty, the then proprietor, a gentleman subject to excesses of irascibility, had just kicked him down. That was not encouraging for the next caller. My good fortune led me, not into the office of Mr. Whitty, but into that of his assistant, Mr. Edward Russell, who in time became Lord Russell.

"A wide circle of friends knew the sunshine of his kind-heartedness. It instantly beamed on me. He appointed me some slight task, expressed himself gratified with the manner of its accomplishment, promised me succession to the earliest vacancy at the bottom of the reporting staff of the "Daily Post," and, awaiting that, gave me a letter of introduction that secured an opening at Shrewsbury.

"This was my first job on the Press."

CAPTAIN FINDS A NEW ISLAND

Will it Share Fate of Other Mushroom Tracts?

On the morning of November 14 the master of the steamer Chakdina, on a voyage from Akyab and Chittagong, Burma, to Rangoon, was amazed to discover that an island, about 1,000 ft. square and 30ft. high, had suddenly appeared where previously there had been no vestige of rock to break the monotony of the ocean.

Reporting his discovery, the captain said that the island appeared to be of a rocky formation, and was about eight miles due south of Baronga Point, with a spit running out to the north, over which the surf could be seen breaking.

"This is not an unusual happening," said a member of the staff of the Geological Survey and Museum to-day. "There have been many cases reported, and we are convinced many more before records were made and kept."

SUBMARINE VOLCANOES.

"The island would be created as the result of some submarine volcanic disturbance," he added, "all the great volcanic mountains of the world began as submarine volcanoes.

"A crater opens on the floor of the ocean, and the escaping larva is heaped up around the opening until it emerges above the sea surface as an island.

"Iceland is believed to have begun in this way, and it is fairly certain that Hawaii, Vesuvius, Etna, and Santorin also originated as ocean-bed disturbances. In most cases, however, these 'islands' have been quickly demolished and washed away by the action of the waves.

"Sabaina was thrown up in 1811 in the Atlantic Ocean off the Azores, but early the next year it had disappeared. Graham's Island, in the Mediterranean, was thrown up in 1831. It lasted four months, and then retired again beneath the sea.

"Bogosloff Island, in the Behring Sea, is an example that has remained. It suddenly came into existence in 1795.

FABLED CONTINENT AN EXAMPLE.

"There is another side to the picture. Large tracts of country have as suddenly been swallowed up by the sea and lost to human ken. The 'fabled' continent of Atlanta is probably an example. Plato describes this mighty continent, and then says . . . lost afterwards there occurred . . . earthquakes and floods . . . a single day and night it . . . all were swallowed up . . . the sea.

"It may be that this new . . . will share a similar fate."

MANKIND OR THE MAN? WHICH IS THE CHURCH'S CARE

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent, M.A., in Union Church, Tientsin, on Sunday Evening, January 13

Acts II. 38. "Repent ye; and be baptized, everyone of you."

There are two general views of human society and of human life, and the question is, which is the right one. These are socialism, in its broadest sense, and individualism. These are defined by the best thinker that I know, the late Dr. Martensen, the great Danish theologian and moralist, as follows. "Socialism is that view which places society as the highest and ultimate aim of ethical development; Individualism is that view, which makes the individual the ultimate aim of ethical development." That sounds like that abhorrent thing, a dry sentence, but it is not. It puts the whole question in a nutshell. Is it the main endeavour of God to create a perfect society, or to create perfect individual persons, and leave them to form what type of society they like This is very important, when we come to consider Christianity. Has the main endeavour of the church to be to create a Christian society, to work on mankind in the mass, and try to bring about an ideal Christian state of things in the world, or is it the main work of the Church to save men, to bring the individual to a perfect condition? This would leave him to organize society as he chooses? Is society's salvation first in Christ's idea, or is your's and mine?

I am sure that we all get worried over this question; and there is an immense amount of confusion in the minds of Christian people of all churches about it. A great great deal of the talk of "the failure of the Church" arises from a confused state of mind among us all on this matter. The idea is that we have a right to judge of the success of the Gospel by the condition of society in general at any particular epoch. People say, "Look here; here are slums, and drink, and very rich and very poor, and crime and privileged classes, and phossyjaw, and a big war just ended leaving an awful mess behind it, and senseless luxury and trusts, and all kinds of evils; and yet Christianity has been in the world for nineteen hundred years! What a dreadful failure Jesus and His Gospel are!" I am quite sure that this is the idea of great numbers of people in the church and out of it. The idea is that, if Christianity is all it claims to be, all ministers and all the innumerable secretaries, who run societies with wonderful initials, would be out of their jobs, for want of something to do. As I read the religious press, I read of "Social workers," whereas I used to hear of "Christian workers." An eminent lady comes to this coast as a "social worker." Was Paul a "social worker?" Did he miss his way by not calling himself one? Tabitha, who made garments, was a "social worker." Yet somehow Paul who stuck to preaching the Gospel, that men should repent of their sins and be converted seems to have done a lot more good. Tabitha's garments have long mouldered in the dust, while Paul's Gospel, like "John Brown's body" still goes "marching along." And here is Peter. Was he a "social worker?" What he actually did on this occasion was to fix his eye on the "bad hats," the conceited Pharisees, the liars and worldlings among his audience, and exhort them to "repent, and be baptized, everyone of you" I like that touch: "everyone of you"; no being saved in the mass, but "everyone of you:" and then things will brighten up in society. I think Peter's idea was a good one if he could get that bad lot in front of him to repent genuinely, and become one by one, changed, redeemed, new men and women, in Christ Jesus, he would be doing more for the salvation of society than by aiming at them en bloc.

A WORLD TO OVERTURN.

I see that Miss Maud Royden, the most eminent of the new women-preachers, now let loose on the church, has been recently discoursing on this subject. She asks, "Can we set the world in order?" That is the idea I am trying to describe; that the first job of the Church is to keep its eye on the effect it is producing on society in general. It needs "setting in order." It does indeed, And her idea is, that somehow the Church ought to be able, almost instanter, to take a disobedient, struggling and kicking world by the shoulders like a naughty boy, and straighten it out, make it behave itself as a Christian world. And they say that is the thing all church activities have to aim at; that getting people to repent, and be baptized as an evidence of a determination to live a new life appears to be secondary.

"Can we set the world in order?" That is the question. We might put it in this way, as a statement of the question we are trying to settle; "Can we set the world in order, without first setting ourselves in order?" That is the point at issue, before we can decide whether the Gospel is the failure it is supposed to be by some people, who will be glad, if it should turn out to be one.

ALL ABOUT COPEC.

In April there is to be held what is called Copec. In these days we are used to strings of letters. I take my information about it from Dr. R. F. Horton of Hampstead, who is a great enthusiast for Conferences. He says he hopes that Copec will become as widely known as Y.M.C.A. and as W.E.A. I am sorry to say that I don't know what W.E.A. is. We shall soon need to pass exams in these W.E.A's, S.C.F's and the rest, which with D.D.'s and so on put a severe strain on the memory. Copec, it appears, is the Conference for Christian Politics, Economics, and Citizenship, which is to be held in London in April. Bishops, canons, D.D.'s, Presidents, Moderators, Ministers, Churchwardens, Deacons and Elders will all be there. The idea of it is "to set the world in order," as Miss Royden says. Dr. Horton hopes the end of it may be to "transform the world," showing that

> Hope, like the gleaming taper's light,
> Adorns and cheers the way;
> And still, as darker grows the night,
> Emits a brighter ray."

Dr. Horton holds that the "Christian religion involves a social ideal;" that the principles of Christianity, the Fatherhood of God, the law that "whosoever would lose his life for this great cause shall save it," can be used to shape an organization of society that shall be truly Christian. They have got commissions sitting; and they have sent out those trying things, questionnaires to really eminent people. None of us have had one, I need hardly say. Thus, as I understand it, it may happen, that all present-day forms of society, of national organization, may be scrapped, and a wholly Christian form of society be set up, if Copec evolves a scheme.

Now, what are we to say about this great scheme intended to "set the world in order?" We wish it well, but we must ask, Is this the idea of our Master and His Gospel? I think it is not. I think that Peter was on the right track, when he got right home to the conscience of the audience before him and darted this at them, "Repent, and be baptized, everyone of you." We need some Copec to take that line. Let us consider Copec and its idea.

AN OLD IDEA NEW DRESSED.

First, suppose Copec does evolve a perfect scheme of a Christian society; suppose the members of this Conference are so wise that they can do what all the nineteen Christian centuries have failed to do, formulate an organization of Society, which embodies all that constitues Christianity, without falling foul of the laws of human nature, which are the laws of God; suppose that the total wisdom of Copec, distilled out of the commissions and questionnaires, does evolve the scheme of a perfect Christian society; how is it going to get the scheme adopted by the nations of the earth? Just think of upsetting the whole framework of society as it is! Oh what an upset and what chaos would ensue! It is terrible to think of even for the adoption of the most Christian scheme. Business, social life, everything would shake, and it would be found impossible to erect a perfect Christian society out of the ruins of the old. It may be said that the promotors of Copec do not imagine any such mad scheme as the setting the world in order at once by any scheme they devise: "They will introduce it gradually." But that gives away the whole case. That is just what is already being done by the Gospel; the kingdom of God is coming; Christ is busy; countless things have improved in my time and yours. Can you not see that? You can. These people are talking as if the setting up of a better state of things were a new idea. It is very old, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever."

THE PEACEFUL PENETRATOR.

So then let us see what is the way Jesus Christ proposed to "set the world in order", and "to transform society". Not any cut and-dried scheme, but by what is called in politics "peaceful penetration". Jesus Christ describes His method in the parable of the leaven. The whole social philosophy of Christ is in that little gem of a parable, to which I hope the Copec Conference will devote all the brains it has. Here it is: "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." It is not such a sensational way, but it does the business: it "gets there. "First there is Christ's Church, which is always busy. Musical Societies usually break up; the Church does not. The Bible is in over five hundred languages. And they tell. They are telling in China. I have never been able to get a Chinese to admit that they used to put unwanted girl babies in "babytowers" to die, yet they did. Christ has made that practice disreputable. China and Japan are not Christian countries, but they have to have the "Red Cross," which is wholly a Christian creation from His Cross, on which He died for us. Christ's method is to go on as He began, quietly. He was born in a stable; none of the great ones in church and state knew anything about; only a few shepherds knew it. He glided, as it were, like a sunbeam into human life. And He is born in the hearts of men, and glides into the national life, and no one knows it, till some dark corner in it is full of light and men, surprised say—The Lord is here.

Again, there is the example of Jesus Christ. Christianity began by making no striking change anywhere, that men could see. It was like the leaven. When He was here He accepted life as it was, while at the same time He was saying and doing things that would turn it inside out, and "make all things new." So it is to-day. With all her faults the Church is leavening the world; and the more there are, who "repent and believe" the quicker the world will be leavened.

HERE A LITTLE, THERE A LITTLE.

Christ's Apostles, like wise men, followed their Master's method. They would have been big fools if they had let it be known that they were concocting a scheme to change the whole fabric of Roman society. They would soon have been in a fine peck of trouble. They would have been wiped out. But, instead, they preached "Repent ye; and be baptized everyone of you." They got the units, and in three hundred years captured the Empire. Paul never says the slightest word even to condemn slavery. No. Christianity accepts the world as it is, till it can mend it. We are apt to think we are Christian in a special sense, if we are always howling about the "sins of the world" and deploring this social evil and the other. Can grousers at the Gospel not see, that the initial presupposition of Christianity is that the world is very sinful; that evil is a gigantic power; "the imagination of man's heart is evil continually". If evil were just a pimple, a "slight cold" in our morals, we had not needed that the very Son of God should descend to earth and be nailed on the cross to save us. A few pamphlets and moral lectures would have met the need. The glory of the Gospel is just this, that it tackled a job that the wisest men thought absolutely hopeless namely that sin can be put away at all, that a blackhearted sinner, like the thief on the cross, can repent and be delivered utterly from all his sins. That this is possible is the grand hope of the world, and the work of the Church of Jesus Christ.

It is finally, doubtful, indeed, whether there is such a thing as a specially Christian form and frame of society. The grandest Christians who have ever lived, lived under the absolutism of Rome. Paul and the Apostles; Augustine and the fathers of the Church too. We rail at the Feudal System. But the idea of it was not bad or particularly unchristian. The king held all the land as representing the people; he let it it out in big parcels to big men on condition that they served the public; they let it out to smaller men on the same conditions and so down. There was a lot of happiness under the Feudal System; and its Christians, like St. Francis, St. Bernard, King Alfred and the like, take our modern democracies, which are supposed by us to be very Christian, all their time to surpass and beat them. The way to get a basket of a hundred fresh eggs is to see to it, that every egg is fresh. "Repent ye; everyone of you." seems to be still the best way to "set the world in order" and "transform society."

DR. LO WEN-KAN, former Minister of Finance, who was thrown into prison for nearly a year on false charges, has been engaged as professor of the Peking National University.

MOSCOW'S STRENUOUS PRESSURE FOR RECOGNITION BY JAPAN

Indispensable Preliminary to Negotiations

On the face of it, the Tokio telegram published below on the subject of Russo-Japanese relations would seem to indicate something in the nature of a "crisis", but much more probably, the message is merely a somewhat obvious piece of diplomatic "wire-pulling."

Undoubtedly, the Soviet government is becoming impatient with the long drawn out negotiations between the two countries and would like to see a settlement speedily arrived at, particularly in view of recognition accorded on the European side, and today's telegram, far from disclosing any real desire to break off negotiations, may cover a certain amount of anxiety for an early settlement, to which recognition must be an essential preliminary. Japan, on the other hand, appears to be in no hurry to accord recognition, being inclined to wait and see how the matter develops as between Russia and China and America.

Ostensibly, the outstanding differences between Japan and Russia are Northern Saghalien and Nicolaievsk. The Japanese demand for compensation for the massacre of Japanese subjects at Nicolaievsk was refused and when, in turn, Russia demanded the withdrawal of Japan from Northern Saghalien, there was an equally firm refusal, Japan agreeing to withdraw only upon condition that the Nicolaievsk compensation is paid. To this, in effect, Russia has responded: "Give us recognition and the money will be paid.

Negotiations have twice broken down at these points, but the fact appears to be that both matters would very easily be settled once Japan agreed to recognize the Soviet Government, in which event the latter may be expected readily to concede a diplomatic point or two if necessary. But recognition is the first and foremost thing, and must precede any arrangement come to.

The Tokio message rightly reports that the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok has been notified that the Soviet no longer recognizes his official position, and possibly there is foundation for the statement that transportation of Japanese mails to Siberia will not be continued, but no step in this direction has yet been taken. The Moscow point of view was expressed in a telegram which we published on Thursday, viz., that in consequence of the rejection of Soviet proposals for the resumption of normal relations between the two countries, the Soviet sees no reason why Japanese officials should remain in the territory of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics. It will be interesting to see how Japan responds to this gentle pressure.

Moscow Putting on the Pressure

Tokio, Feb. 21.

That Russia is apparently impatient at the Japanese attitude vis-à-vis renewal of negotiations and recognition may be evidenced by a series of minor incidents in the last few days, of which the following are the most important:—

(1) Mr. Watanabe, the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok, has been notified that he is no longer recognized as the official spokesman of his Government and people.

(2) The Japanese Post Office has been informed that transportation of mails to Siberia will not be continued.

(3) Japanese correspondents in Moscow have been ordered to withdraw, according to a report received to-day, and the correspondent of the Rosta News Agency here has announced that he is under orders to leave.

It is understood that the foregoing are the subject of representations officially both in Peking and Vladivostok.

Feb. 22.

Mr. Yoshizawa, the Japanese Minister in Peking, has been instructed informally to discuss with M. Karakhan, the Soviet Envoy, the situation created by the series of minor incidents in the last few days which are said to indicate that Russia is impatient at the Japanese attitude vis-à-vis of recognition of the Soviet.

It is believed in official circles here that Russia entertains a false impression of Japan's policies.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CALL OF THE WEST

I feel the tug of the sunset land
About my beating heart,
I want to cross that rim of sand
Where sky and desert part
I dread the spell of this tropic strand.
I long for the time to start

* * *

I feel the call of the mountain side
That looks across the sea
I want the moors vast and wide
And the pine trees' melody
A strenuous hard day's mountain ride
The uplands high and free

* * *

Oh! I'm weary of these "garlic smells"
And the sun's hard, loveless glare
The "tinny" eastern temple bells
And the roads all baked and bare
I want the freshness of the dells
And the "tang" of the mountain air.

T. J. F.

CHERRY blossom time in Japan will be earlier than usual this year owing to the comparatively warm weather that has prevailed for the greater part of the winter. The "Japan Advertiser" reports that plum trees in the vicinity of Tokio are putting forth their buds and many in Shiba Park, noted for its plum trees, already are blooming. Hibiya Park and the Botanical Garden in Koishikawa are second only to Shiba for their plum blossoms, but the shoddy background of temporary shacks built for earthquake sufferers this year will furnish an incongruous setting for the spring blossoms But the spot best known both for the number and beauty of its plum blossoms is Mito in Ibaraki prefecture. Several trains will be dispatched to this city daily when the trees look their best to accommodate parties of beauty seekers.

OUR CANADIAN LETTER

Vancouver's Huge Grain Export: Growing Importance as Outlet for Canadian Produce

From Our Own Correspondent.

Vancouver, Feb. 7.

The port of Vancouver is enjoying a boom in grain traffic. Enormous quantities of wheat from Manitoba and Alberta, which hitherto was shipped abroad viâ the Great Lakes in Ontario or Canadian Atlantic ports, are being sent over the shorter westbound route for shipment to Europe viâ the Panama canal and to many other parts of the world.

From September 1 to January 31 Vancouver from Canadian Pacific cars alone exported 20,416,103 bushels of grain, comprising 15,488,348 to the United Kingdom, 4,630,103 bushels to the Orient, and 338,183 bushels to South America.

During one day recently no fewer than 49 ships could be seen loading or waiting for grain in Vancouver harbour. Elevator, storage and grain-handling equipment and facilities are being rapidly extended to take care of the ever swelling golden flow from the Canadian prairies.

The city as a whole is feeling the benefit of this development and the spirit of good times and prosperity is strong among the populace.

STATE MARINE INSURANCE.

Of interest to the shipping and mercantile interests of Shanghai and China ports generally is the announcement from Ottawa that the Canadian Government will present legislation at the next session of parliament authorizing the Government to go into marine insurance to overcome unjust discrimination of British underwriters against Canadian ports.

The latest of the many complaints comes from the Shanghai office of the Robert Dollar Co. The company says it was offered at high rate a cargo of tea for Halifax, Nova Scotia, but had to refuse it because underwriters exacted an extra premium if the round-the-world freighter Virginia Dollar put into that port. They said this barred. Halifax as a port of call for their ships. It is the frequency of such complaints that has caused the Government to decide upon introducing legislation to permit a system of state marine insurance. We have not yet, be it observed heard the underwriters' side of the story.

MR. V. BRYDONE-JACK.

Vancouver has lost to Shanghai her champion amateur swimmer in Mr. Vaughan Brydone-Jack, member of a pioneer family in British Columbia. When the Canadian Government str. Canadian Seigneur reaches China from here she will have as one of her passengers Mr. Brydone-Jack. He has been transferred to Shanghai as assistant to Mr. D. E. Rose who left the Vancouver office of the Canadian National lines two years ago and who is now Shanghai manager.

Mr. Brydone-Jack has always occupied a prominent place in Vancouver sporting circles. Last year at Capilano Canyon, a treacherous piece of water near here, he "doubled" for a moving-picture actor. He took the part of a mounted policeman in the play which was being filmed there and made a spectacular high dive into the rapids of the Capilano while dressed in the familiar uniform of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He recently completed a tour of the Canadian National Railway system in order to familiarize himself with the working of the railway.

OPIUM SMUGGLING.

I referred in my last letter to the case of A. Worsefold, second electrician in the Empress of Australia, who smuggled opium ashore here in a specially tailored vest. He was sentenced to six months imprisonment and also fined $200 or two months more in jail.

Worsefold said he did not know it was opium he was smuggling but thought it was Chinese joss.

"You connived at committing an illegal act" said the Magistrate, who added that as Worsefold was a married man he would impose the lightest penalty possible in the circumstances.

CHILDREN'S RECORD JOURNEY.

Canadian and American newspapers have recently published stories with photographs of the three children under 15 years of age who, unaccompanied, travelled 9,000 miles from the state of Florida to Shanghai. Jack Turner, aged 15, Mary, his ten-year-old sister, and Richard, aged four, travelled from Jacksonville (Fla.) to Shanghai with only one change of cars and one change of steamer, making the quickest trip on record between these two points, say the traffic officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway who looked after the children throughout their journey. The officials state that the trio who left Jacksonville on December 21 and arrived at Shanghai on January 12, covered the distance of 9,133 miles in 21 days.

BUDDING RAILWAY BUILDERS.

Six young Chinese, five of whom have taken science and engineering degrees in China, have arrived in Montreal, commissioned by the Chinese Government to study railway construction in the Canadian Pacific Railway's shops at Angus and the Canadian National Railway's shops at St. Charles. The Chinese will be employed in the shops until they have learned the Occidental way of doing things, when they will return to China to apply their knowledge in developing the railway system of that country.

A YALE CAMPAIGN.

Among recent arrivals in British Columbia of interest to the Orient was Dr. E. H. Hume, President for Yale in China for the past 19 years, who has started a campaigning tour of the United States for funds on behalf of the Far Eastern protégé of the big American university.

THE SUNSHINE BILL

Mr. Willet's Crusade: First Laughed at, Now Blessed By Practically All

By Our Labour Correspondent.

Manchester, Jan. 15.

It is now nearly 17 years since the late Mr. William Willett first put before the public his suggestion that all the clocks in Great Britain should be put forward 20 minutes on each Sunday in April, and put back again 20 minutes each Sunday in October. It met with a mixed reception. Many conservative old gentlemen in the country looked upon the idea as nothing short of blasphemous. Others predicted railway accidents and general confusion, and a strong minority declared that they would abide by the old times in defiance of any revolutionary tampering with time that was good enough for their grand fathers. Mr. Willett was not dismayed. The benefits of an additional 200 hours of daylight in a year gave him an increasing body of supporters and in 1908 a Bill to save daylight in accordance with his proposals was read in Parliament.

In 1909 a Select Committee was appointed to inquire into the scheme and it was rejected by a majority of one. It was opposed by agriculturalists, by the Committees of the Stock Exchange and the Liverpool Cotton Exchange, and by two of the smaller railway companies. Fruit growers supported it on the plea that it would enable picking to be carried on for a longer day, and the more important railway companies favoured it as a measure that would reduced accidents, most of which took place in darkness. There was also a strong undercurrent of opposition from companies interested in artificial illumination and their shareholders.

The criticisms passed on the original proposal so impressed Mr. William Willett that he altered the scheme from its original from of four 20-minute advances, of 60 minutes in April with a return to normal time in September. His original idea had been that if anyone forgot to make the alteration, 20 minutes would be a much less important error than 60 minutes. The change would also be less perceptible if taken in 20 minute stages, and 200 hours of daylight would be saved instead of about 150. The public, however, preferred to make one cut of it and get the matter over.

BRITAIN'S ONE GAIN BY WAR.

The campaign was pursued with unabated vigour by a growing mass of supporters but although there was a general belief in the many advantages it would confer on the urban community it was difficult to get people to believe that such an innovation would ever be solemnly sanctioned by Parliament. And then the war came and upset all our ideas of what was possible and what was'nt. The factor that compelled Parliament to take the plunge was not a desire for more daylight but the imperative necessity of saving fuel. On Sunday May 21, 1916, all the clocks in Great Britain were put forward one hour by Act of Parliament. The Bill to enforce this alteration was officially called the Summer Time Act, but the popular name for it is the Daylight Saving Bill. Enthusiastic supporters of it, courageously ignoring the vagaries of our fickle climate, sometimes speak of it as the Sunshine Bill." Thousands of people point to it as the solitary benefit Great Britain gained by the war.

Early in 1917 a Select Committee inquired into the results of its operation during 1916. Their Report was overwhelmingly in favour of its continuance, and it was put into operation during 1917 from the 3rd Sunday in April to the 3rd Sunday in September. The Act is now passed every year, and it is curious to note that the length of its operation is varied on nearly every occasion. In 1920 it was from March 28, to October 25. In 1921 from April 3, to October 3. In 1922, from March 26 to October 8. In 1923 from the 3rd Sunday in April, to the 3rd Sunday in October. It is difficult to understand the reason for these variations. The ideal time would be from the first Sunday in April to the first Sunday in October.

FARMERS DEAD AGAINST IT.

Of all the original grounds for opposition to the Bill only one has persisted. The farmers are still against it. They contend that the heavy dew early in the morning interferes with work; that the satisfactory milking of cattle is more difficult; and that they have to pay their workers overtime rates to perform tasks in the late afternoon as a consequence. Workers who commenced their tasks at 6 a.m. used to complain, but the almost general adoption of the 8 hour day, and the 8 a.m. start, has removed that ground of opposition. The only other new objection we have heard came from a man who said that there were farmers in Cheshire who contended that the latest outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease was caused by their having to send the cattle out into the fields before they were properly aired. But this traveller's tale might be a nefarious attempt to take advantage of our urban innocence and cannot therefore be relied upon.

That Daylight Saving is not such a boon to farmers and agriculturalists as it is to town dwellers must be admitted. As a result of this the idea has only achieved a limited success in non-industrial countries Spain adopted the scheme a few years ago but abandoned it in 1920. In Canada and America it is in operation in the larger towns while the surrounding agricultural districts maintain the older system.

Apart from teachers and schoolmasters the only class of the community objecting to Daylight Saving in our urban areas are those wealthy idlers who have unlimited leisure themselves, and preserve a serene indifference to the comfort and welfare of other people. The problem that puzzles the rest of us is why we have had to wait so long for such an obvious boon.

HEALTH BENEFITS.

Doctors say that it is highly beneficial to the public health, as it has encouraged people to take more exercise in the open air. Opticians say that it is equally beneficial for the eyes as it lessens the strain caused by artificial light. Economists claim that it saves three million tons of fuel each year. Tramway and bus companies report greatly increased business. It ensures that the hours of sleep are those when there is least daylight. And above all it enormously increases the amenities of life for the workers by ensuring that a greater proportion of their evening leisure is spent out of doors instead of in close rooms lit by artificial light. Crowds of young people can now often be seen playing tennis and other out-door games after 10 p.m. on fine summer nights. The Saturday half-holiday in summer with its 10 hours of daylight is now longer than a winter's day, and immeasurably more pleasant. Sunday is better still. And paying the quarter's gas bill at the end of June and September comes as near being a pleasure as paying a bill is ever likely to be. We are surprised that the gas company troubles to send round for such an insignificant amount. The big town whose citizens sleep in the summer morning's sunshine while others are up and doing is as grotesque a spectacle to-day as a modern girl would be in a hobble skirt.

COMMUNIST AIMS IN ENGLAND

The "Real Offensive"

The following candid statement regarding the plans and expectations of the British Communist Party in connexion with the advent to power of a Socialist Government in this country are, writes the "Morning Post's" Russian Correspondent, made by the London correspondent of the Moscow "Isvestia" in a recent issue of that paper:

At the present moment the British Socialist Party is on the eve of taking into its hands the government of England. It is obvious that when this happens both capitalist parties, the Liberals and the Tories, will sooner or later unite in order to attack the workers. In this struggle the Communists will support the Socialist Government, while at the same time not forgetting for a moment that the chief duty and aim of the Communist Party is to carry its activities deep into the ranks of the Socialist movement, urging the workers to develop and strengthen their control over Parliament and lead the masses towards the final aim—the sweeping away of Parliament and the establishment of a real workers' Government on Soviet lines.

The day when the Communist Party finally becomes a part of the Socialist Party will be a historic date in the history of the Socialist movement in England, as only then will the real offensive of the working classes against Capital begin. This day is not far off, and there remains no doubt that our aim will be achieved.

COMPULSORY VOTING

Experience of Belgium and Other Countries

Compulsory voting has been in force in many countries during the past half-century. It was made part of the law in Bulgaria in 1882 (says a writer in the "Political Science Quarterly"); it was passed by the Austrian Empire as a measure upon which the provincial diets might exert "local option," and which had been adopted by some half-dozen of them before the war; it has long existed in a peculiar form in New Zealand; and it was introduced into Baden and Bavaria in 1881. In Bavaria a novel method of penalising the abstainer under certain circumstances was invented. It was laid down that a minimum poll of two-thirds of the total electorate was required; and if this was not obtained the voters who had failed to vote were charged with the expense of a fresh election. The latest converts to the system are Czecho-Slovakia and Holland. Compulsory voting formed part of the important Dutch Electoral Reform Law of 1917; and the negligent or recalcitrant citizen who fails to vote is now brought before the burgomaster and may be subjected to the heavy fine of three florins for the first offence and ten florins for each subsequent offence.

In Czecho-Slovakia compulsory voting became part of the constitutional system of the country from the beginning of its existence as a separate State. It applies to both municipal and general elections; and the penalties range from fines of 20 to 500 Czech crowns, or imprisonment up to a period of one month. It is understood that the number of abstentions has hitherto been so large that it has been impracticable, if not impossible, to enforce the law rigorously. At the last municipal election held in Prague, for example, according to an unofficial but reliable estimate, about 50,000 persons (out of 424,680) did not vote; and the courts could not possibly deal with such an enormous mass of offenders.

The country where compulsory voting has been most fully enforced is, however, Belgium. After a discussion lasting some years, le vote obligatoire was introduced into the Constitution in 1893. The results have been remarkably successful. In 1894, at the elections for the popular chamber, the abstentions were only 5.4 per cent. of the electorate, 7.5 per cent. in 1896, 5.3 per cent. in 1898, and 5.9 per cent. in 1900, and this despite a great widening of the franchise. In fact, the proportion of voters to non-voters is normally higher in Belgium than in any country in Europe, perhaps even than anywhere else in the world.

Parmoor is related by marriage to Mrs. Sidney Webb, the wife of the new Labour President of the Board of Trade. Since the Armistice he has taken a great part in all movements to bring about international reconciliation This has probably influenced the Premier, for it is a policy he is well known to favour.

HOME SECRETARY, MR. ARTHUR HENDERSON.

Mr. Henderson's parents planned to make him a butcher, and it must be confessed that if they misjudged his future temperament, they well envisaged his future appearance, for "Uncle Arthur," as he is affectionately called by this Labour friends, looks the very image of a prosperous family butcher. But they changed their minds and put him instead in an iron works. He took an early interest in trade union work and politics. Starting as a Liberal it was not long before he came over to Labour and he was the first Labour member to receive Cabinet rank. He took the popular side in the war, in which he lost a son. He has a strong sense of personal dignity and he left the Cabinet after Lloyd George kept him waiting on the mat when he returned from the Stockholm Labour and peace conference. He is a Wesleyan lay preacher, and a total abstainer. Between him and the new Scottish recruits of the Labour Party there is bitter enmity. They hate him for a dull, pompous, stodgy ignoramus. He reciprocates the feeling. Their nimbleness of wit frightens him. He thinks that they are hardly respectable. He represents the extreme Right of the Labour movement, but he is not to be bought. English trade unionists think a lot of him. He lost his seat at the General Election and another will have to be found for him.

FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY, LORD CHELMSFORD.

A member of the well known Thesiger family, Lord Chelmsford has hitherto been known as a non party man. He is an old member of the London School Board and an Alderman of the London County Council. He has been Governor of Queensland, where they have long had a Labour Government. He was very popular there. From 1916 to 1921 he was Viceroy of India, and was jointly responsible with Montagu for the "Montagu-Chelmsford Report," on the findings of which the present reformed Government of India is based. His share in this effort to conciliate the ambitious Parsee has no doubt influenced his choice for high office in the first Labour Government. The appointment is very unpopular with Labour's left wing.

COLONEL SECRETARY, MR. J. H. THOMAS.

Mr. Thomas will be very disappointed if his biography is left out of any future compilation like the celebrated "Self Help" of Samuel Smiles, for he began work as an errand boy at the age of nine and wishes everyone to know it. There is in fact, no romance one half so attractive to Thomas as the story of his own rise to power from humble beginnings. From running errands to engine cleaning was a short step. Then he became fireman, and a few years later an engine driver on the G. W. R. Grasping the opportunities there were for ambitious men in the trade union movement he soon pushed his way to General Secretaryship of the National Union of Railwaymen. He became Mayor of Derby, and in 1910 its Parliamentary representative. With great political foresight he saw the pitfalls of office in the Coalition Government and refused a position when it was offered him. He is a prominent member of the extreme Right of the trade union wing of the Labour will never forgive him for backing out of the Triple Alliance during the great miner's strike of 1921. It is popularly though no doubt falsely reported that he would sacrifice the livelihoods of all the other trade unionists in the country if he could get an extra sixpence for his own members. What his qualifications are for the Colonial Secretaryship it would be difficult to say, but if he had not been given an important office in the new Government there would have been trouble from the "Hon. Jimmy" as they call him.

MR. SIDNEY WEBB
President of the Board of Trade

SECRETARY FOR WAR, MR. STEPHEN WALSH.

The member for the Incé division of Lancashire won his seat at the last election by one of the largest majorities achieved by any candidate. He is a typical miner's M.P. In his youth he worked at the coal face. From this he rose to the position of miner's agent. Then he entered Parliament. During the Coalition he held two Ministerial offices. qualifications for the high position he now holds would be hard to find. But he has the stolid virtue of not wishing to butt into affairs that are beyond his grasp, and it is said that the soldiers with whom he will have to work prefer a patriotic trade unionist of this stamp to one of the cranky "highbrows" who might have had the office. There are not wanting cynics who say that this appointment is MacDonald's way of showing what he thinks of both the War Office and the average miner's M.P.

SECRETARY FOR AIR, BRIGADIER GENERAL THOMSON, C.B.E., D.S.O.

This recruit to the Labour Party joined the regular Army in 1897 and served in Mashonaland and South Africa. He was on the War Office Staff from 1911—1914, and soon after the outbreak of war he joined the Staff of the First Army Corps under Sir Douglas Haig. He visited Russia during the war and served in Palestine. He was British Military Representative to the Supreme War Council. In 1919 he resigned his commission to join the Labour Party. He is one of the many recruits to the Labour Party whom the Supreme War Council have made.

PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE, MR. SIDNEY WEBB.

It is often said that the Webbs are the brains of the British Labour Movement but the assertion would want some qualifying. Sidney Webb was privately educated in Germany and spent 13 years in the War, Inland Revenue, and Colonial Offices. He is a barrister and a member of the Senate of the University of London. He started the "New Statesman," and has written several authoritative books on economics and trade union history. His wife, who was Miss Beatrice Potter, is a kindred spirit. Between them they employ an army of secretaries on research work. No one in Great Britain has ever read so many Blue Books. They are the arch apostles of that kind of State Socialism which the British temperament abominates. They envisage a Utopia in which armies of hygienically clad officials will order the lives of millions of workers, all of whom will be scientifically fed, clothed and housed. Wells was an early disciple but he quickly experienced a reaction and mercilessly satirised them in "The New Machiavelli." Their useful function is to supply statistics and "facts" to earnest Labour leaders. Webb is a failure in Parliament. He does not suffer fools gladly, and treats opponents who have not mastered the subjects on which they speak with a testy impatience.

SECRETARY FOR INDIA, SIR SIDNEY OLIVER.

One of the more aristocratic sympathizers with Labour ideals, Governor of Jamaica 1907—1913. Was at one time Secretary of the Fabian Society. Author of several books.

SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND, MR. W. ADAMSON.

Like Stephen Walsh, the Rt. Hon. William Adamson, is a typical Miner's M.P. He went down in the pit to work at 11 years of age, and taking a great interest in trade union work gradually won his way to the secretaryship of a Scottish mining union. His gifts are those that make for success in that sort of office; blunt downright speech, caution, and honesty. He is not a member of the I.L.P., and inclines to the moderate Right wing of the Party. He was its leader in the House from 1918—1921. In that capacity he was a failure and the prestige of the Party sunk to a very low level.

MINISTER OF HEALTH, MR. WHEATLEY.

The most advanced Labour member in the Cabinet. The Scottish contingent of advanced Socialists point to him as their one representative in office. He is an expert on Housing, and as he lived until he was 22 in a one-roomed apartment with a family if eleven he might be expected to hold very strong views on the subject. He is a popular writer for the well known Glasgow Labour weekly "Forward," and a Roman Catholic.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE, MR. NOEL BUXTON.

Mr. Noel Buxton is the son of a landowner. He was born in 1869 and entered Parliament in 1905 as a Liberal. He is an expert on Near Eastern problems, and in 1914 he was sent to the Balkans to further Allied interests. In Bucharest he was dangerously wounded in the jaw by a political assassin. He has grown a beard to hide the scars. He joined the Labour Party in 1919 and is an authority on the problems of agricultural labour. He is an active member of the Independent Labour Party, and one of Labour's most valuable acquisitions.

MINISTER OF LABOUR, MR. TOM SHAW.

Starting life as a half-timer in a cotton mill at the age of 10 Mr. Shaw won his way to a responsible position in his trade union and entered Parliament as the Member for Preston in 1918. Interesting himself in the international side of cotton union activities he learnt German and French, which he now speaks fluently. He has travelled a lot, and is the friend of many moderate trade union and Labour leaders on the continent. He was one of the Labour members who visited Russia at the invitation of the Bolsheviks and he brought back an unfavourable report of what he saw there. He is a Free Trade propagandist, and a bitter opponent of "direct action."

EDUCATION MINISTER, MR. C. P. TREVELYAN.

A descendant of Lord Macaulay. He entered Parliament as a Liberal in 1899 and was made Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education. He resigned from the Government on the outbreak of war and associated himself with MacDonald in pacifist propaganda. He strongly opposed conscription. One of the Party's super-intellectuals. Supposed to have a great future before him.

MR. PHILIP SNOWDEN
Chancellor of the Exchequer

POSTMASTER GENERAL, MR. VERNON HARTSHORN.

Ten years ago Vernon was one of the turbulent spirits of the South Wales coal fields. But unlike most of his associates of those days he took the patriotic side in the war and in the responsibilities of office on the Coal Controller's Advisory Committee he shed his predilection for short cuts and hot air. He worked as a lad in the pit and his rise to Parliament followed the usual course for a miner's member. He is a local preacher and a more brilliant speaker than most mining members of Parliament. It would be difficult to say what his qualifications are for the office of Postmaster-General but it was necessary to put several T. U. representatives in the Cabinet somewhere and it may be supposed that MacDonald thought this office might be the lumping ground for one as well as any other.

CHANCELLOR OF THE DUCHY, COLONEL WEDGWOOD.

One of the few men in the Cabinet who matter, Wedgwood is the son of a master potter and in his early years he was a naval architect and engineer. He was the Captain of an Elswick Battery in the S. A. War. During the European War he saw service on nearly every front. He was Commander of a squadron of armoured cars in Flanders. He fought at Gallipoli, in British East Africa, and Siberia. He used to be an extreme radical, and propagandist for the land tax, which was his pet political scheme for the cure of all our social ills. He has written several books on pottery and politics. At present he is greatly interested in Indian politics, and is performing a useful service to those members of the Labour Party who imagine that the exclusive rôle of the British in India is that of "heartless oppressors." After the war he left the Liberal Party for Labour and joined the I.L.P.

FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS, MR. F. W. JOWETT.

Mr. Jowett began work as an half timer in a Bradford cotton mill at the age of eight. He is an active member of the L.L.P., an expert in municipal government, and a Socialist of the old "Merrie England" school. During the war he was a pacifist. This latter circumstance with the known moderation of his views probably explains his presence in the Cabinet.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, MR. PATRICK HASTINGS, K.C.

One of the busiest Counsel at the Bar, to which he was called in 1904, Fought in the war. 42 years of age. Labour Member for Wallsend. Moderate Labour man.

SOLICITOR GENERAL, MR. H. H. SLESSER.

Age 43. Legal advisor to the Trade Union Congress and Labour Party. Advisory Counsel to Miners' and Engineers' Unions. Drafted the Nationalization of Mines Bill, which was submitted to the Royal Commission on Mines. Has contested two Parliamentary constituencies without success. A seat will have to be found for him. Moderate Labour man.

THE UNDER SECRETARIES.

MR. ARTHUR PONSONBY.

Mr. Arthur Ponsonby—Among the 18 Under Secretaries and Parliamentary Secretaries who have been appointed the most notable is Mr. Arthur Ponsonby the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He is the son of a Private Secretary to Queen Victoria and for five years was one of Her Late Majesty's pages. He entered the Diplomatic Service, but revolted against Court life and joined the Liberal Party. His action is more understandable to the general public since Lytton Strachey wrote his revealing life of Queen Victoria. Some time ago he joined the I.L.P. and the Labour Party. He is a strong supporter of the Labour Party's foreign policy.

MAJOR ATTLEE, the Under Secretary for War is the son of a President of the Incorporated Law Society. He is a barrister, an earnest member of the Inde-

BRITAIN'S FIRST LABOUR GOVERNMENT

A Happy Surprise to the Nation: Biographical Notes on Its Members with Some Estimates of Their Peculiarities

By Our Labour Correspondent

Manchester, Jan. 25.

On the night when the Conservative Party was defeated in Parliament one of its old True Blue members is said to have unhappily groaned, "The awful thought is creeping over me that Labour may form a very efficient Government." Mr. MacDonald's Cabinet is not likely to do much to console this pessimist, for it contains not a few very able men. Among those who will have most to do with the shaping of Labour's policy are Lord Haldane, Mr. Sidney Webb, Mr. Noel Buxton, Colonel Wedgwood, Brigadier-General Thomson, Philip Snowden, and Mr. Wheatley. The "intellectuals" among the others will have their uses, but the trade union residue, despite their well known names, are only so much ballast. Their selection is a concession to the rank and file of the movement and to the fact that trade unionists pay the best part of Labour's political bill.

The names have come as a sharp surprise to the millions of people who know little more of Labour's political activities in Parliament than the ill bred interjections of that vulgar buffoon, Mr. Jack Jones. These are always well reported by the popular press. Nervous people will be consoled to see that Robert Smillie and George Lansbury are not included. They were offered positions but refused them. Had they accepted the Cabinet would have been faced in a more acute form with a problem that has already caused a difference of opinion. This is the question of Cabinet salaries. Smillie and Lansbury share the opinion of the rank and file of the movement and think that the new Cabinet Ministers should refuse the great Cabinet salaries. Had they entered the Cabinet they would have done so. But most of the present Cabinet have no sympathy with such Quixotry, particularly the trade union element. The argument of the Clydeside Socialists who are pressing this is that thousands of poor Labour enthusiasts deprived themselves of bare necessities to put Labour into power and they have a right to demand that the men they raised from the mines and the mills shall not live like plutocrats. To have acceded to this agitation would have been a wise tactical move on the part of the Cabinet and encouraged its supporters.

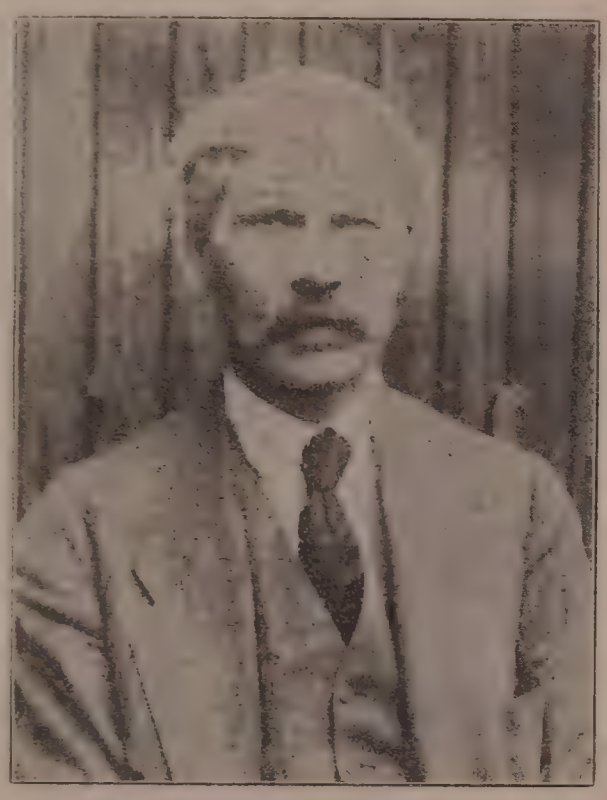
A CINEMA SENSATION MISSED.

The composition of the Cabinet is, of course, of much less importance under the present circumstances than it would be if Labour had a majority in the House over all other parties. It is compelled to limit itself to very modest proposals or be defeated by the withdrawal of Liberal support. The strength of the Opposition will also do a great deal towards binding its warring elements together. Unhappily for the cinema industry there will be little likelihood of Sir Frederick Banbury fulfilling his threat of leading the Coldstream Guards into the House to drive out an insurgent Labour Party. In some respects it is rather a pity, for the spectacle of this crusty, old City member chasing Colonel Wedgwood, D.S.O., Brigadier General Thomson, D.S.O., Major Atlee, Lord Haldane, and Mr. Patrick Hastings, K.C., across Palace Yard would have been not uninteresting.

A careful study of the Cabinet should also do something to disillusion those credulous simpletons who believe the "Daily Mail" assertion that British Labour is controlled by "alien Communists and criminals." Nor do they seem to have that profusion of whisker one would expect in satellites of the Socialistische Arbeiter Internationale. Yet in the opinion of Lord Rothermere this body supplies them with the whole of their policy.

THE PACIFIST ELEMENT.

The chief feature of the Cabinet is its pronounced Pacifist complexion. It is much stronger in personalities who take a strong [illegible] abolition of war than in members who are chiefly concerned with the curing of domestic ills, and the bringing about of a social revolution. Eighteen members of it are also members of the Independent Labour Party, Mr. MacDonald's pet organization. This Party has about 30,000 members, publishes a Labour weekly "The New Leader," takes a great interest in foreign affairs, in which its policy is invariably anti-British, and pursues a middle course in social reform. Seven Cabinet seats have been found for recent converts from the Liberal Party. MacDonald always warmly welcomes this kind of recruit and is concerned to make the change over a paying proposition. Out of 44 Ministerial appointments only 17 have been alloted to trade union officials. There would not have been this number only it was necessary to placate the miners. The only member in an important office who holds extreme Socialistic views and could by any stretch of imagination be called a revolutionary is Mr. Wheatley, a typical member of the new Scottish contingent. But there are one or two similar types among the Under Secretaries, notably Mr. Stinwell, a Jewish revolutionary.



Mr. Ramsay MacDonald
Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary

The following are some notes on members of the Cabinet.

PREMIER AND FOREIGN SECRETARY, MR. RAMSAY MACDONALD.

Born in 1866 at Lossiemouth, Scotland, the present Prime Minister of Great British was brought up by his grandmother. After a brief schooling he worked in the fields, but the village dominie took an interest in him and urged him to study and become a pupil teacher. At the age of 20 he came to London and found a situation addressing envelopes at 12s. 6d a week. He studied in his spare time, and obtained a post as private secretary to a Liberal M.P. This was the first rung on the ladder of fame. A few years later he threw in his lot with the Socialists, where his talents attracted immediate attention. He unsuccessfully stood for Parliament in the Labour interest in 1895, and 1900, but won a seat in the 1906 election. His wife was the daughter of Dr. Gladstone, and a very gifted and much beloved woman. She took a deep interest in the lives of charwomen and barmaids. She died in 1911, and there is a beautiful memorial to her memory in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

In 1914, MacDonald took up a strong anti-war attitude, and became the most hated man in Great Britain. His pacifist writings and speeches were definitely anti-British if not pro-German. He never deviated from this attitude through the whole course of the war. A trade union crew refused to sail with him on board when he desired to attend a Socialist conference in Russia In the general election of 1918 he was overwhelmingly defeated, and again at a by-election in Woolwich. But as wages went down and schemes for reconstruction were abandoned through the press anti-waste agitation his prestige gradually increased again. A foul attack on him by Bottomley in "John Bull" won him much sympathy from people who disagreed with his political opinions. He entered Parliament in the 1922 election and with the assistance of the Clydeside Labour members won the leadership of the Labour Party from Clynes by a narrow majority. His Parliamentary skill gave the Party new life.

Apart from his unquestioned intellectual gifts the secret of his success lies in his peculiar position. A feature of the Labour Left is its pacifism. Mr. MacDonald is a pacifist but not an extremist in the Socialistic sense. Yet he has no affinity with the trade unionist Right. In the eternal struggle that goes on in the Party between the Right and Left, both about evenly matched, each side is able to find points of agreement with MacDonald. Add to this his brilliant debating power, his intellectual gifts, and his aloofness from the petty intrigues of his followers and the secret of his prestige is revealed. He is respected by his followers but he is not loved, as for instance, Mr Lansbury and Mr. Smillie are. Nor is he popular with the rank and file of the movement. He is a bitter enemy of the Bolshevists. They swept away the Social Democratic Constitution he planned for his friends the Georgians.

LORD PRIVY SEAL AND LEADER IN THE COMMONS, RT. HON. J. R. CLYNES.

There is no more popular Labour leader than Mr. Clynes. His father was an Irish labourer, and at the age of 10 the present Lord Privy Seal of Great Britain was working as a little piecer in an Oldham cotton mill. In his teens he took an active part in organizing the Piecers' Union. Navvies and labourers were his next interest and he did much pioneer work in organizing them. He is the President of the National Union of General Workers.

He entered Parliament in 1906, and joined the first Coalition Government in the Labour interest in 1917. He succeeded Lord Rhondda as Food Controller in 1918. He is an Hon. D.C.L. of Durham and Oxford.

Mr. Clynes' popularity owes its existence to the fact that his moderation does not arise so much from an ambition to "get on," or from a desire to obtain a lucrative Government appointment as from an instinctive distrust of extreme measures and revolutionaries. He once refused a safe Government job at three times his trade union salary. His success in important Government offices arises from a rare ability to refrain from meddling, and the wit to know that the permanent official usually knows his job better than an amateur. He took the patriotic side during the war, has no more brains than the average old-fashioned trade union member, but has a much easier manner. He will have little influence in the Cabinet, but his presence there will please the man in the street and reassure anxious supporters of the older political parties.

The Rt. Hon J. R. Clynes
Lord Privy Seal

CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, MR. PHILIP SNOWDEN.

Born in 1864, the son of an operative weaver, Mr. Snowden entered the Civil Service in 1886 and retired seven years later to take up lecturing and journalism for a living. He attributes every evil from which man suffers, from war to venereal disease, to Capitalism. The devil was not more real to the late "General" Booth than Capitalism to Philip, we say "was" advisedly, for Parliament rubbed some of the angularities off this proletarian Savonarola. During the war he was more pro-German than MacDonald. He favours a bureaucratic State Socialism of the most pestilent kind. A bicycle accident in his youth made him a cripple for life, and he can only walk with the aid of two sticks. He entered Parliament in 1906, and returned to it in 1922, when the working classes realized that it was the intention of the Coalition to make them pay for the war. With Philip Snowden as Chancellor of the Exchequer it is consoling to remember that the Liberals can always turn Labour out if it should be so ill-advised as to try any Socialistic experiments.

LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD HALDANE

For more than 20 years Lord-Haldane has been connected with the Fabians but it is only since the war that he has shown definite Labour leanings. The bitter attacks made on him by the Conservatives during the early years of the war, and the very lukewarm defence made by his Liberal colleagues have probably done not a little to disillusion him with the older political parties. He has been in Parliament from 1885 to 1915, and resigned during the Cabinet crisis in May 1915. He introduced the Territorial Force, and was Secretary of State for War from 1906—1912. He is supposed to be an opponent of the Capital Levy but is in sympathy with Labour's desire for more drastic measures of social reform.

The Rt. Hon. J. R. Thomas
Colonial Secretary

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, LORD PARMOOR.

Better known as Sir Arthur Cripps, Vicar General of Canterbury and York, an authority on ecclesiastical law, and a well known Unionist it is difficult to understand why Lord Parmoor has been selected for his present office by Mr. MacDonald. He will be the Party's leader in the House of Lords, and is expected to advise Mr. MacDonald on foreign affairs.

S. V. C. GYMNASIUM

A Fine Hall and Equipment Seldom in Use: Material Not Taken Out of Cases

It is only to be expected that public bodies should experience an almost uninterrupted run of criticism, much of it coming from interested persons or over-enthusiastic idealists, but some of it undoubtedly genuine, purposeful and useful. The Shanghai Municipal Council is by no means an exception to the rule, but nevertheless there are times when the Council accedes to what is said to be a public necessity or desire, makes the necessary arrangements and spends the ratepayers' money, and then finds itself let down. The S.V.C. Gymnasium is a case in point.

As things are at present, the S.V.C. Gymnasium is a colossal failure, but one cannot say that the blame should be laid to the account of the Municipal Councillors, either collectively or individually, except that perhaps, in their capacity as private citizens, they might have made more strenuous efforts to persuade the younger men in their employ, or with whom they associate, to make more use of the Gymnasium. The same charge, however, equally can be made against any resident in Shanghai with such a degree of influence. In the days when the Volunteers shared the Town Hall with flower shows, charity bazaars, choral efforts, prize distributions and Ratepayers' Meetings and when the Municipal Council and those who aid it in doing what everybody else could do much better—but will not attempt—were housed in various widely separated and mostly dilapidated buildings, it was the general argument that it was hopeless to expect the Volunteers to become a really efficient and co-ordinated body until they were given permanent, separate and properly equipped headquarters of their own, these to include club rooms to which Volunteers would be attracted because of the Volunteer atmosphere and associations, and, almost more important than anything, a gymnasium where they could learn those arts of fighting not taught by the drill book and where they could make and keep themselves physically fit. The Councillors made a note of the fact and included all such things in the design of the new Administration Building. The very first part of the building to be opened was the S.V.C. drill hall, and before many of the administrative offices were finished there was also opened, with much flattering and congratulatory talk, the S.V.C. club and gymnasium.

GOOD MONEY WASTED.

It is not the present purpose to say much about the club. It was doubtful from the first whether it was a real necessity, for the Settlement is comfortably supplied with social clubs, but it is a fact that no necessity for additional accommodation as yet has arisen. As to the gymnasium, it is doubtful whether 150 different men have been in it for purposes of exercise since it was opened. It is not a big place, certainly, but it is well designed and it is quite big enough for the purposes of the S.V.C. on the latter's present establishment. The fitting up of the place leaves nothing to be desired. There is all the secondary accommodation one expects to find in a modern gymnasium and there is equipment sufficient for a much larger place.

The equipment is the saddest chapter in the story. In the Settlement's yearly budget a few hundred, or even a few thousand taels will not make a great difference either way, but in these hard times no one cares to see even Tls. 100 spent without any return whatever. When the Municipal Council equipped the Gymnasium they did it thoroughly and every credit is due to whoever was responsible for the selection of the material. And there it lies, very little of it worn or marked by the hands, feet and bodies of healthy young athletes, a few pieces broken because of mismanagement by unskilled people, and the greater part of it mildewed, rusty, or dust-covered. There are long lockers and shelves from the floor to the ceiling packed with every imaginable kind of athletic apparatus and clothing which has not been touched since the day it was first put there. There are stacks of spring-bayonet rifles which have never been handled and many which never have been taken out of their cases. There are dozens of expensive masks and body guards with never a scratch on the leather nor the smallest piece of enamel chipped off them.

AN OPPORTUNITY MISSED.

Some time ago, an attempt was made in these columns to revive the old Fencing Club, and there happen to be in Shanghai two fully qualified Russian officers of high rank and the best testimonials who for a long time have been anxious to start a fencing school—which would be an admirable institution in Shanghai, especially as providing the best exercise for ladies—but they have been unable to get the apparatus. In the S.V.C. Gymnasium there are foils, single-sticks, masks, jackets, gauntlets and everything that is required, but no one to use them.

Shanghai goes in large numbers to watch "Kids," "Babes" and "Terrors" from the Philippines hammer each other in the boxing ring, but when half a dozen enthusiastic Volunteers, noting the fine assortment of gloves, medicine balls, punching balls, etc., provided by the Municipal Council, attempted to form an S.V.C. Boxing Club in the Gymnasium, their effort fell flat and now the club is no more. These statements all are vouched for by a representative of the "North-China Daily News" who has visited the Gymnasium on several occasions to see for himself.

A TINY BAND OF ENTHUSIASTS.

It is quite possible that, had the Municipal Council, besides building a fine gymnasium and equipping it with almost everything in the way of apparatus that could be desired, also engaged a fully qualified instructor and given wide advertisement to the fact, many would have gone along to gaze at a being so rare in Shanghai, and, having seen him on the "ands, dahn," "rahnd the bar, hup," etc., would have stayed that they might learn to do likewise. There was one such in the Settlement, keen to take on such a job, having failed to secure sufficient support for a scheme to establish a gymnastic club on which he had been working for years, but he was allowed to go. However, that is not the only reason for the failure of the Gymnasium.

There is at least one amongst the Volunteers who bears the hall mark of a gymnasium athlete. Anyone who has had experience of gymnasiums could tell him at a glance. For several years he practised in the London Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium and though he has not got an instructor's certificate, that probably is only because he has not tried for it. He may not be qualified, but he is competent to instruct, as can be vouched for by the writer, who has seen him at work. Naturally the S.V.C. Gymnasium attracted him from the start and when he saw how things were going—or, perhaps it ought to be said, were not going—he took it upon himself to pull the thing together. He had the backing of a few men as keen as himself, but lacking in experience, and they have done everything possible by regular attendance themselves and working as a class, and by bringing in their friends as often as they could, to awaken enthusiasm. On Mondays and Thursdays every week they still attend as a class, and they drop in for independent practice as often as they can, but they do not deny that they have failed to interest any others. It is a great pity, for the writer saw five of them and their instructor at work one evening and they performed so well, though of the five there was only one who could not be called a novice, that he cheerfully stayed for over an hour. Had he been under 40 years, or had there been someone there who could use the foils, his own jacket and boots would have come off.

POSSIBLE INSTRUCTORS.

It was the same with the short-lived S.V.C. Boxing Club. They also had at their head a young fellow so clever with the gloves that, despite all the fame of the imported professional "Kids" and "Babes," probably he could dust them round the ring for a while if only they fought for sport and not for dollars. He also had with him half-a-dozen enthusiasts and they tried hard to interest others in the S.V.C., but they also failed. Bayonet fighting and single-stick work never have been tried yet, because no competent instructor has come forward. Yet amongst the Orderly Room staff and the many veterans of the Great War now in Shanghai there must be several who have acquired sufficient knowledge to teach at least the preliminaries, though of course they are not likely to volunteer their services if they are to get no better support than the other two to whom reference has been made. Should there be no competent instructor permanently residing in the Settlement, one could be certain the Senior Naval Officer, with the readiness the officers of H.M. Navy always show in helping any of us when we are at a loss and they have the remedy, would make such arrangements that there always would be available a competent instructor from one or other of the men-o'-war in harbour. If that were done, and the pupils stuck to their work, they could be relied upon to become very efficient swordsmen in a very short while, for there is nothing that will teach guards and parries more quickly than the good beef-fed arm of a British sailorman laying on with a single-stick.

HOW TO EXCITE INTEREST.

The first thing to be done, however, is to arouse interest in the Gymnasium and to secure the regular attendance of sufficient men to justify amateur instructors giving up their time or professionals being paid for the coaching. Before the writer had more intimate knowledge of the actual state of affairs, it was suggested that a grand assault-at-arms should be arranged, to include boxing and gymnastic competitions between units, with the idea that many men not at present attending the gymnasium, but who have sufficient pride in their respective units, would get into practice with a view to evenging defeats or retaining honours. But that cannot be done with six gymnasts and six boxers!

If one could suggest any course of action either the Commandant or the Civil Commandant could take to popularize the Gymnasium undoubtedly they would be more than pleased, for its failure cannot be laid to their account. As the few men who do use the place also have failed to impress their comrades, there is little else to suggest save that there might be a concerted effort by unit commanders and by employers who have an interest in the Corps to persuade young Volunteers that it would be worth their while to spend a little more time in the Gymnasium and a little less at tea dances and mahjong. One such lecture will not be enough: it should be repeated.

WHAT BAYONETS ARE FOR.

The neglect of the Gymnasium inclines one to ask the younger members of the S.V.C. whether they really take their work in the Corps seriously—that is to say, whether they think a defensive force for the Settlement is necessary, whether that was the reason for their enrolling, and whether they consider they now are doing all that is necessary to make themselves competent soldiers for the work they one day may have to do. Bayonets have various uses. Corks are carried on a few of them when the colours are paraded, they give lance-corporals an air of authority when they do orderly duties during camp, and the other fellow's bayonet is a fine thing with which to open a bully-beef tin. No great amount of practice is needed to use the bayonet for these purposes.

One of the principle reasons, however, for which the bayonet was invented was its use as a weapon of offence and defence, particularly the former. It is quite possible that not a few engagements have been won by the mere sight of the bayonet, for a line of wild-eyed, fiercely yelling men bearing down behind a row of bayonets is not a comforting spectacle to those on the pointed side of the argument. To use the bayonet in this way is a harder task.

A LONDON SCOTTISH STORY.

The story has been told before in Shanghai, but it may be repeated. Some years before the war, the London Scottish went out to Wimbledon Common for one of their periodical field days, but before they commenced operations Col. Malcolm rode out in front and told the men that when they got to the stage when they wound up with a spectacular charge upon the old windmill, with pipes sounding and all the rest of it, he did not want to see them perform in the way that had been customary for half a century, that is to say, race up to the grass plot in front of the windmill and then sit down and wait for the battalion travelling canteen to arrive. Instead, they were to charge for all they were worth, cheering themselves hoarse, and when they arrived at the grass plot they were to go through the motions of bayonetting imaginary enemies. When the charge was over there were scarcely 100 men in the whole battalion with breath and strength sufficient to wield a rifle and fixed bayonet. The Colonel rode up again, a grim smile on his face, and simply remarked:—"The gymnasium is open every Tuesday and Friday." The next Tuesday it was scarcely possible to move in the gymnasium. Colonel Malcolm probably felt well satisfied with what subsequently happened at Messines.

It is not easy to use the bayonet as a fighting weapon without a great deal of practice, but it is a very handy arm when used by an expert. Physical fitness is necessary to make a beginning with its use and the S.V.C. Gymnasium offers the opportunity to become fit and keep fit. Practice then is required in the points, parries and guards and there are stacks of spring bayonets in the gymnasium with which these can be practised.

BE FIT.

The foregoing has been mainly an appeal to the soldier to perfect himself as a soldier. There is a joy, however, in feeling physically fit at any time and one may repeat the advice given recently by Sir Skinner Turner, chief Judge of H. M. Supreme Court, when speaking at a school prize distribution:—

"Remember one great maxim—'Be fit.' You cannot do your work in school or in your calling in after life unless you are fit in mind. Fitness of mind and body, coupled together and working together, will lead to that success in life which you will deserve by your efforts to get it."

It cannot said in this case, as it was some while ago with regard to ponies, yachts and sports clubs, that they cost too much for the average young man. There is no expense about the S.V.C. Gymnasium. If these articles persuade any Volunteers to call at the gymnasium some evening in order to see for themselves the facts are as stated, their purpose will have been served, for gymnasium work is to the young as contagious as measles. If a few young Volunteers will go and see the work that is being done by the handful who do use the Gymnasium, it will not be very difficult to persuade them to essay the same.

BRITAIN'S LABOUR CABINET

Mr. Ammon's Fight for Fame

By Sonam.

An important omission from your Labour correspondent's biographical notes on the members of Britain's First Labour Government is Mr. C. G. Ammon. The story of Charlie Ammon's fight for fame is of interest, for it reveals the real reason why "Labour may form a very efficient Government."

For nearly 27 years Mr. Ammon toiled as a letter sorter in a dusty sorting office and, in spite of the constant strain upon eyes and nerves, found sufficient energy to become the driving force of the social reformers who were struggling to improve the standard of living in the Bermondsey slums.

Forty-eight hours a week did he strive to satisfy the demands of supervising officials at the South Eastern District Office, many of whom were only too ready to take advantage of any negligence or lack of energy in the performance of his official duties. Evenings were spent in organizing the local branch of the Independent Labour Party; annual holidays were opportunities for visiting the great centres of industrial welfare work such as Port Sunlight; Sunday's relaxation took the form of holding services and preaching sermons in an obscure mission in South Bermondsey, where he lived.

Other demands upon this apparently inexhaustible source of energy included: the editorship of the "Post," the trade union organ of the Fawcett Association; articles to leading magazines and newspapers; preparation of cases, as a member of deputations of postal employees, to the P.M.G.; active support to the local candidate for Parliament, and so on and on.

A lean, wiry figure of medium height that would not attract attention but for the determined jaw and deep-set luminous eyes which, to an intelligent observer, speak most eloquently and reveal the strength of the Labour Party, —energy and determination. Such is one of Britain's First Labour Government, and of such material, many of the new names.

The period for erecting temporary buildings in the fire stricken areas in Tokio and Kanagawa prefectures which was to have expired at the end of this month has been extended six months by action of the Cabinet Council and will be authorized by Imperial ordinance.

VEGETABLY SPEAKING

As I was walking on Avenue Joffre
I saw the treasures it did offer:
In every barrow, truck, and cart
Were vegetables for the mart.

I turned into the Roi Albert
And there the carrots waved their hair,
And all along Great Western Road
The egg-plants gleamed a purple load.

But when I came to Bubbling Well
'Twas cabbages they tried to sell,
While beans from many an earthy furrow
Trundled the Road of Edinburgh.

From Hongkew Park to Siccawei
The spinach tossed its luscious spray.
I spied the onion and the leek
Upon the banks of Soochow Creek.

I saw both white and sweet potato
Along the street of Lt. Pétiot,
And something very like a chard
In single file on Rue Ratard.

The bamboo shoots on Route Dupleix,
The beets on Burkill seemed to say
From Bund to Jessfield, up and down,
Shanghai's indeed a Growing Town.

pendent Labour Party and an energetic propagandist against war and secret treaties. He was wounded in the attempt to relieve Kut, and commanded the covering corps at Suvla in the Galipoli expedition. He is a post-war recruit to Labour and is regarded as one of its intellectuals.

Frank Hodges, the Civil Lord of the Admiralty, is a young man of 34. Early in life he worked in the mine, and was later educated at Ruskin College. He was a conspicuous figure in the mining strike of 1921 and is supposed to have a great future before him. Politically he is a Centre man in the Labour Party. A more intellectual type than the average mining M.P.

Mr. Leach, the Under Secretary to the Ministry, is a wealthy Bradford mill owner who has long been a supporter of the Labour Party.

Mr. Rhys Davies, the Under Secretary to the Home Department has been a farm labourer, a miner, a co-operative employee, and a trade union official. He should go far, as he has a command of language surpassing that of Lloyd George, tremendous ambition, and few political scruples.

Mr Arthur Greenwood, Parliamentary Secretary to the Health Ministry was formerly lecturer on economics to the University of Leeds. He is in charge of the Research department at Eccleston Square, the Labour headquarters, and is a very able man.

Miss Margaret Bondfield Parliamentary Secretary to the Labour Ministry, is the recognized leader of the women's trade union movement in Great Britain. She worked for 11 years as a shop assistant and co-operated with Lady Dilke in the difficult task of organizing working [illegible]. Last year she was appointed Chairman to the Parliamentary Committee of the Trade Union Congress. She has just entered Parliament for Northampton. She is 51 years old and one of the best liked leaders of the Labour movement.

A new Tsar of all the Russias has been secretly crowned. Paris papers state that the coronation of the Grand Duke Cyril, cousin of the late Tsar Nicholas II., took place at St. Cloud last month, where his Highness was living in exile. The ceremony, performed behind the closely shuttered windows of the residence of the Grand Duke's cousin, Grand Duke Boris, was one of the strangest in history. It is said that Russian monarchists generally have pledged their support to Cyril, hoping that he will win back the throne when the Soviet Government falls.

IMPROVED CHINESE COTTON

Results of Mill Tests on Staple Produced by the University of Nanking: Encouraging Features: A Review of the Present Situation

That new and hitherto undreamed of possibilities have been opened up in the growing of cottons of superior quality in China has been made evident by the results of recent spinning tests carried on simultaneously by three of the leading cotton mills in Shanghai on commercial samples of the improved cotton being grown by the University of Nanking. These results are the more interesting in the face of an otherwise most deplorable cotton situation in China. The mills are paying record breaking prices and receiving in return the most inferior product on the world's markets. Bad enough as it is with its short coarse and uneven fibres, yet every bale arrives reeking and often mildewed with moisture and sometimes adulterated with sand, seed, or other objectionable product. The press of late has been filled with somewhat facetious articles bearing upon the cotton situation, some writers taking the stand that a good cotton in China like a good government is non-existent and never will exist.

This hopeless attitude has been partly justified by the many failures to introduce an American cotton without its immediate deterioration and by the seemingly wide breach between the low quality native cottons and the American Middling.

RESULTS AFTER FOUR YEARS.

The Department of Cotton Improvement of the University of Nanking with the support of the Cotton Millowners' Association of China and the Cotton Anti-Adulteration Association, however, has been conducting extensive acclimatization work on two American varieties and selection for improvement of the Chinese plant along lines that have been proved successful in the work of the Department of Agriculture in America. The results of the work after four years of intensive effort have been evident to those who could examine the product in the laboratory or by those who saw the fields and picked the cotton from the open bolls as the members of the Cotton Millowners' Association of China who visited Nanking in early November can bear witness.

It remained, for actual performance throughout the various mill operations to determine the actual worth and possibilities of the improved cottons. Tests were made of each of the three types that have been established; the acclimatized Trice (American), the acclimatized Acala (American), and the new variety of Chinese cotton known as "Million Dollar." A few extracts from each of the reports may be quoted to advantage.

From mill testing the bale of acclimatized Trice American cotton we take the following quotation:

"Herewith the results of the tests and samples of roving yarn, grey cloth and bleached cloth made from the cotton grown at Nanking.

"The Cotton gave splendid working results. Good colour, free from sand, leaf, seed and water. Better than many deliveries of good Middling American."

IMPORTANT FIGURES.

Data taken from the figures on losses in handling through the breaking, opening and scutching operations compared with sample of cotton from America classed as Strict Middling (Liverpool) are as follows:

Waste Loss	200 lb. Samples from America	300 lb samples Trice Cotton from University of Nanking.
Through bale breaker and Creighton opener	5.50 lb.	4.00 lb.
Hopper feed porcupine and opener	7.75	11.93
Scutcher	3.75	4.50
Total	17.00	20.43
Loss per cent.	8.50	6.81

In comparison of tests in strength of yarn of 20's counts made from the Nanking Trice with Good Middling American, Fully Middling American and 50 per cent. American and 50 per cent. Cambodia mixture, the record was as follows:

Counts.	Class of Cotton.	Strength.
20's Warp	G. M. American	75 lb.
20's Warp	F. M. American	70 lb.
20's Warp	50% American	65 lb.
20's Warp	50% Cambodia	65 lb.
20's Warp	Nanking Trice	72 lb.

These results indicate that the American cotton acclimatized at Nanking gave less waste in handling and had strength equivalent to the best grades of cotton imported from America.

THE VERDICT ON TRICE.

The report of the study of the Acala American cotton was even more favourable as this variety is superior to Trice. A few quotations from the elaborate and careful study of this cotton are as follows:

"In carrying out the test for spinning 2/42's yarn we found the cotton to fulfil all the requisite requirements much more than Good Middling. In fact we think it could be used more advantageously for spinning higher counts than 42's.

"Owing to the length and strength of Acala cotton we have been able to widen the gauge of the rollers and to speed up the rollers thus increasing production. Relative productions of Acala and ordinary mixings were as follows:—

Quality	Weight per lea	twist per inch	Strength per lea	Production per 11 hours
	Grains		lbs	oz.
Ordinary mixing	24.4	28.0	34	2.6
Acala	23.6	31.3	36	3.6

"It is easy to see from the above figures that Acala weighed less—using less quantity—required a lower number of twist, had greater strength and greater production which are all in its favour. Besides, having a lower number of twist, the yarn is soft to the touch and more beautiful.

"The results, as above written, show Acala to be a very fine cotton and if all the defects are remedied as no doubt they could be done, we think still better results could be looked for."

"MILLION DOLLAR" COTTON.

The most interesting report of all is the record of the results of the new variety of improved Chinese cotton known as the "Million Dollar." It has been rather universally accepted as a fact that no cotton indigenous to China can compare in respect to length, fineness, strength, colour or value to the American product. Without mixing with superior cottons from India or America it is seldom spun into anything but the coarser counts ranging from 10s. to 16s.

The following extract from the spinning departments report of the mill making this test is therefore significant:

"Herewith report respecting the spinning of sample Chinese cotton.

"In the first instance this cotton supersedes our ordinary Chinese cotton in texture, length, quality, and colour, and was able to spin much finer counts with increased draft. Revolutions of front roller and revolutions of spindles were greatly increased, those predominant factors resulting with such a cotton as the sample in far superior yarns, considerable increase in production, less waste, and less labour required, and we are confident that if it were possible to have this class quality of cotton all through it would reduce the cost of labour 50 per cent.

"Having spun samples of counts, 14's warp and 17's weft for weaving and counts 20's, 28's, 32's, 36's, and 42's, for reeling, we conclude that counts 32's could be spun commercially and profitably and would not recommend finer counts than 32's, being confident that this would hold its own second to none if put on the market."

Warp 14's	96	14.20	180	8,300	11"
Weft 17's	81	15.29	148	7,000	13"
20's	59	16.57	135	7,000	13"
28's	43	20.97	106	7,000	13"
32's	37	22.72	92	7,000	13"
36's	30	25.86	92	7,000	13"
42's	23	29.10	78	7,000	13"

Weft	17's	50	21.19	102	7,000	13"

SUPERIOR TO AMERICAN.

The samples delivered from the this last test convey in a manner more vivid than figures or statements the contrasting quality of this new variety with common stocks on account of its extraordinary whiteness, lustre, and smoothness both in the yarn and cloth. In these respects the appearance is manifestly superior even to the American cotton.

The variety of Chinese cotton from which the raw stock was supplied is an absolutely new strain bred at the University of Nanking from a single plant discovered near Woosung in the Autumn of 1919. This was only one, although the best one of over 40,000 selections made in an effort to secure such an improved strain and which as the mill test above demonstrates has been actually accomplished.

From the few seeds saved from first plant, seven plants were grown in 1920, the following year several hundred, and the progeny carefully multiplied again until in 1924 there will be sufficient seed for over 200 mow of this variety, and the year following should see 10 to 20 times that area.

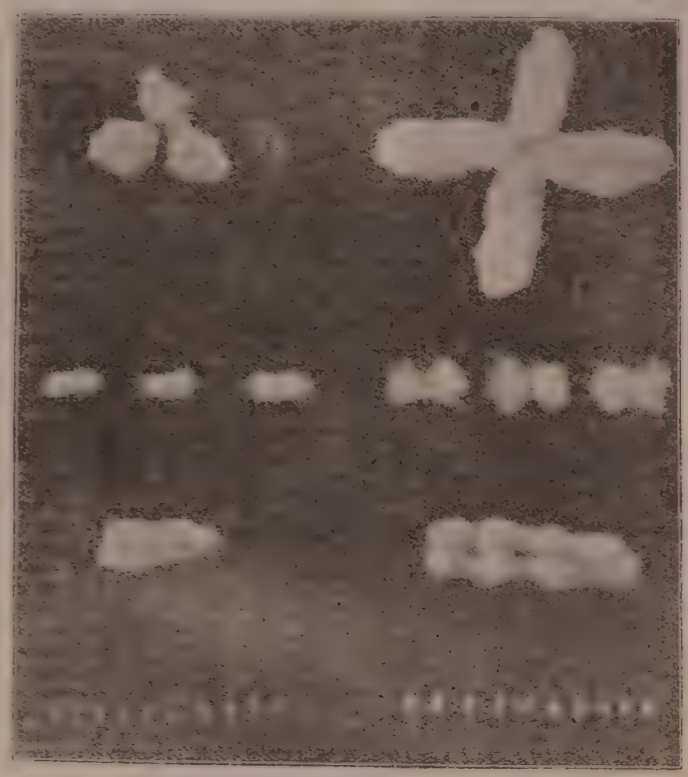
An indigenous cotton of high standard should be of considerable significance for a number of reasons, chief of which is that the American cottons which prove quite adaptable to the interior cannot be grown successfully in the great delta region of Yangtze, which is the most important cotton producing area of China.

DEGENERATION OVERCOME.

The tests of the two varieties of American cotton indicated are from stocks now in the fourth year of their propagation. The fact is thoroughly demonstrated that the problem of degeneration has been overcome through intensive selection and that throughout a large area in China cottons equal to and even superior to the Good Middling Upland of America can be successfully grown.

The rapidity with which these improved cottons will become a commercial factor on the market will depend in a large measure on how carefully these selected seed supplies may be multiplied without loss. To this end an effort is being made to organize pure seed growing communities with co-operating farmers. About 10 tons of seed will be so distributed at the planting time of next Spring.

The complete reports of the three mills making the test contain many more details of interest and serve to verify further the merits of these improved cottons, and can be seen by any one in the office of Mr. R. J. McNicol of the Mill Department of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., Ld. who is Chairman of the Cotton Millowners' Association.



COMPARISON BETWEEN IMPROVED CHINESE COTTON AND ORDINARY CHINESE COTTON.

COMPARISON BETWEEN ACCLIMATIZED AMERICAN COTTON AND DETERIORATED AMERICAN COTTON.

Deteriorated — Acclimatized

it clear enough. The new nationalistic spirit will be a tremendous force for reform, putting an effective check upon officialdom, whenever it is focussed upon internal affairs. The Powers can help to turn this force inwards by refusing to accept make-believe, refusing to concur in false appraisements and by insisting upon judging official China strictly upon its merits.

THE PEOPLE THINKING.

Schools, newspapers, such meagre means of communication as exist, chambers of commerce, all manner of societies, secret and public students unions and the like are all teaching great masses of the people to observe and think. Public opinion has not won many triumphs in China but it has won some and it is a growing force, feared more every day by officials of all classes. In its growth public political opinion has run off on many wild tangents and is now such a erratic, uncertain force that it is scarcely worth taking into consideration in most big issues. But its growth is none the less hopeful. A man must think and express himself to learn to think. Wisdom comes largely through mistakes corrected, never through apathy and silence. Public opinion in China as it grows is surging through several main courses. The main tide is in the direction of peace.

It is being officially encouraged through precept into an anti-foreign channel and being driven just as surely through adversity into an anti-official channel. A great part of the banditry in China, uncomfortable as it is for everyone, must be accepted as an expression of popular anti-official opinion, since a great part of it is purely amateur outlawry. There can be no doubt that a great majority of the bandits now in the field are protestants against intolerable conditions who would be good citizens under a good government. When an official has ruined trade, has taxed the people to the limit of their resources and has then allowed his soldiers and the professional brigands to loot what is left, the weak crawl into the ditches and die, while the strong take to the hils with their grass knives and clubs and declare war on authority. By letting this kind of public opinion gather strength and momentum the officials are guaranteeing China peace of a sort through a fundamental upheaval. Those Chinese who want another kind of peace through a more moderate expression of public opinion had better lend their efforts to guiding it.

THE SCHOOLS.

There is no limit to what could be done through the schools nor to what probably will be done through them in the next generation, if not in this, towards inculcating a sane patriotism. It is impossible to run a school in which history is taught without purveying politics, and every Chinese school is bubbling over with political theory. But it is neither well balanced nor sound. The schools have leaped from conservative Confucianism to the most radical extremes. They take great delight in all the new political theories and do mental calisthenics with them; and then, when they are about ready to leave school, they have acquired enough poise to look back upon all their political discussions as so much fireworks and in turning to something practical find that the most practical thing they can do is to become atached to some political clique, become an official and make a quick and easy fortune. They look out over the commercial fields, see how they are limited and shadowed by officialdom and decide that "still the best thing is to be an official," as the writer has heard so many discouraged youngsters say in that identical phrase.

What has to be taught in the schools, if they are to serve the ends of peace and good government within a seasonable time, is that an official in any government worth the name is not a parasite but a servant and a hard worked and very moderately paid servant, and that any other kind of an official is either a highwayman or a sneak thief. The teachers of China are an essentially upright, idealistic lot of men. As a body they are bitterly opposed to China's political trend, but as a body they have flown off to all the wildest "isms" for refuge and have evolved among themselves no sane conception of patriotism. The students follow their lead. There is every evidence, however, that the teachers like all other thinking Chinese, are about to pendulate back to conservatism. They may then swing forward again to a mild radicalism, and then back to a moderate conservatism which is where they belong. When they find their position and know it, they will be ready to go ahead and the students will, as usual, follow their lead. There are, by the way, enough foreigners teaching in China to do some effective propaganda among their colleagues and to set an example.

THE ONE ESSENTIAL.

The form of Government, in the writer's opinion has no great bearing upon the peace problem. The personnel has little more bearing. The one great esential to peace is that some effective control be put upon Government in China. It does not matter so very much whether the supreme authority is vested in an Emperor or in the people at large, so long as the supreme authority enjoys sufficient check upon the high officials, and the little officials, and the soldiers, and the unruly elements among the people which need to be ruled, to reinculcate discipline. The writer has had some hard things to say of Chinese officialdom. He would probably have much harder things to say of the Government of his own country if there were no more effective checks upon its politicians, officials and soldiers than are exercised in this country, because the Anglo-Saxon is a much more violent and dangerous person when he runs amok than the Chinese. A Government is like the engines and shafts of a ship. When everything is bolted in place and all the parts are running tightly in their bearings they drive the ship and all its cargo, crew and passengers, safely over rough seas. But when steering gears do not steer, when rudders break away, when big shafts break adrift and thresh about in the hold, when oil catches fire and boilers explode, the big engines become the most terrible instruments of destruction, endangering not only the ship and all in it, but all other navigation as well. The Chinese Government is an engine out of control. The ruts and bolts are all out of the thing and the officials are loose parts, out of gear, and dangerous in proportion to their weight.

Most of the remedies suggested for China's ills presuppose a Chinese officialdom amenable to discipline. Others, like intervention are not available. Others, like the oft-suggested restoration of a monarchy, are like suggestions to put salt on a bird's tail. They presuppose the existence of an adequate disciplinary force which if it did exist, would not have to worry about the medium of government but could choose what it would.

MULE NOT TIGER.

The writer thinks that those who are trying to bring peace in China by charting the course of the cart of state are wasting much mental energy. The essential task is to catch the wayward, braying mule that has got loose, to bridle him and rehitch him to the cart. Time enough then to talk of drivers and roads. The one comforting thought is that it is not a hungry tiger that has to be caught but really only a silly mule, docile at heart and intoxicated with liberty.

Whether peace in China is going to come through exhaustion or the exercise of force, or whether peace through violence and exhaustion are going to be forestalled by a worked out peace, no one can even guess. The writer can only express the assurance in his own mind that if all the foreign and domestic forces available—meaning moral forces largely—were intelligently focussed upon the one job of limiting, hampering, embarrassig and disciplining Chinese officialdom at every possible turn and from every possible angle, peace could be worked out long before any one would be prepared to fight it out.

The End.

MOTOR TRAFFIC IN PEKING

Where Might is Right and Tuchuns Laugh at Legations

By Rodney Gilbert

Peking, Feb. 22.

Street traffic in Peking though seldom as congested as the tiffin time traffic in Shanghai's business quarter has been the subject of much discussion among motorists here since General Feng Yu-hsiang's encounter with the Legation Quarter police last Friday night and is now pronounced an utterly hopeless problem in the light of the General's contention that he is above regulations and subject to no control. It has come to be more clearly recognized than ever that official traffic is always in the right and subject to no discipline whatever, while unofficial traffic is always in the wrong. Under such conditions the Peking traffic police exercise a partial control which is more confusing and often more exasperating and dangerous than none at all and in congested traffic they are no more than so many more obstacles to run around.

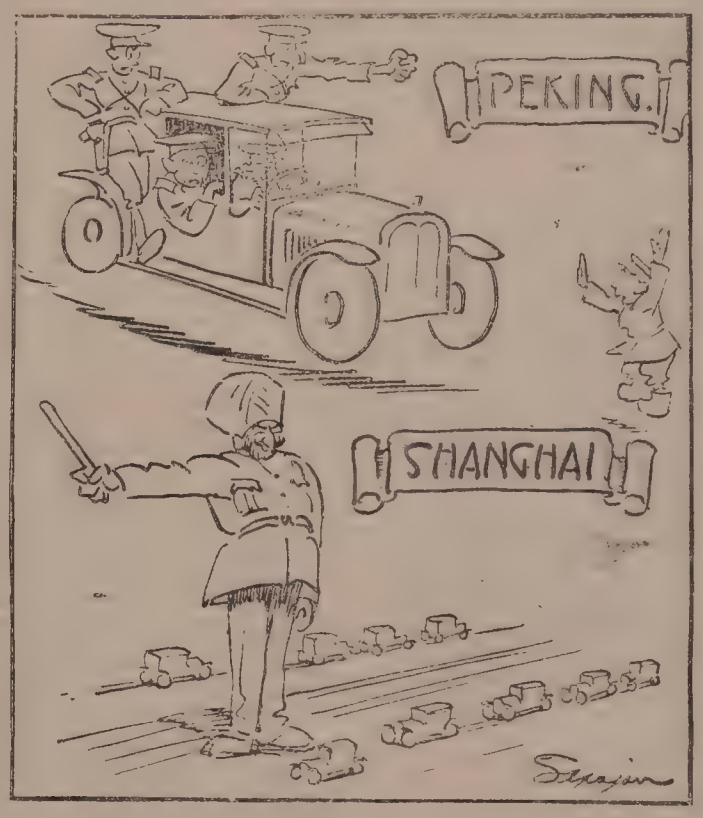
CHINA SAFE FOR AUTOCRACY

General Feng, who was on his way to dine with the American Minister was stopped in the Legation Quarter because his headlights were too bright. What happened in the ensuing scuffle is a matter for controversy in the press still, but the important point is that the Christian General is still grieved and indignant because anyone had the courage to stop his car on any account. It seems wholly beyond his comprehension that anyone, irrespective of office and titles, should be amenable to discipline by a person as insignificant as a policeman. It is this attitude, shared by every high Chinese official, which makes many problems in China so difficult of solution and which renders the traffic problem in Peking utterly hopeless.

There is no rule governing traffic in Peking except the one unwritten rule that the unofficial motorist who hits anything must pay, no matter whose fault it is, while the official never heeds, much less pays, for damage done by his car. In the old days before motor cars there was no traffic regulation but there were rules of the road which effectually regulated such slow moving traffic as there was. Everyone kept to the left. The man carrying a burden had right of way over a pedestrian travelling empty handed. The heavier and more unwieldly burden had the right of way over the lighter, as did the heavier and more unwieldly vehicle over the lighter. Official traffic took precedence over all other, but official traffic was also slow moving and accompanied by a noise and display which fully heralded it and gave everyone ample time to get out of the way.

AN EXAMPLE TO BANDITS.

These simple rules were unwritten, like the constitution in these days, but effective. Peking now has its motor car code as it has its constitution, which no one ever bothers to study and which no one in an official position thinks it worth while to heed. The car with a loud siren, blinding light and armed outriders, which travels at a dangerous speed through narrow streets packed with traffic, ignoring all signals from the police, will get there; while the car which obeys police signals and the common rules of road decency will get nowhere. One would think that the question of safety would dictate certain rules but it does not. The whole question of getting through is one of bluff. When pedestrians and rickshaw men see or hear a car charging through traffic with a show of importance they assume that it is an official car and get out of the way because they know that if they are run over or if their vehicles are smashed they will only be cursed for getting in the way. The policeman moreover makes every effort to hold up more modest traffic and give such a car the right of way because he knows that if there is an accident directly traceable to the official chauffeur's carelessness or ruthlessness, the chauffeur will not be reprimanded and that the humble traffic man who tries to call him to account will suffer in proportion to the energy he displays in enforcing the laws.



The Majesty of the Law and the Majesty of the Tuchun

THE LAW OF THE PISTOL.

Theoretically officials and their cars are subject to precisely the same rules as any other wayfarer. It would be better if they were formally exempted and had their cars marked with some distinctive sign. As it is the police make only the feeblest effort to enforce any rule because they never know whom they can check and who will take pains to have them reprimanded or discharged for daring to interfere. A chief secretary in a petty government bureau travelling in a battered hired car will take more trouble to demonstrate to the unfortunate policeman that he is above the law than a Tuchun. The only way to get anywhere therefore is to barge ahead and bluff. Everyone does it, even the rickshas, so that the traffic policeman is either in a perpetual frenzy and spends all of his time on duty exchanging abuse with carters, coolies, indifferent and absent minded pedestrians and reckless chauffeurs, or he is wholly apathetic and simply stands in the highway, sticking his arm out in any direction that a motor driver indicates, irrespective of what may be blocking the street or coming the other way.

There is no uniformity about lights at night. Those with no lights do not slacken their speed. Scores travel about with one lamp lighted and the other out, so that it is impossible to tell the exact position of the car. Well kept cars are equipped with dazzlingly brilliant lights supplemented by a spot light which the playful chauffeur turns upon approaching cars. Other traffic bugs the kerbs or ventures into the fairway at a decided risk.

Heavily loaded carts are not allowed on paved highways but have side routes assigned to them. This rule the military carts violate with impunity. They travel in long unbroken lines, sometimes fifty or a hundred of them, on the main thoroughfares, ruin the roads and hold up all traffic while they are passing. They stop their teams on crossings to fix harness or buy something from a stand and no traffic man dares order them to move on.

DUMMY POLICEMEN.

The driver's difficulties in Peking are complicated by the fact that the people have not yet adjusted their traffic sense to the new conditions which have arisen with the addition of ten thousand rickshas, several thousand carriages and nearly fifteen hundred motor cars to the old cart and wheelbarrow parade. Very few of the police seem to appreciate that gauging speed has anything to do with traffic control; and their one-arm signals, even when obeyed, are no guarantee of safety. A traffic man stands at a cross-road and, in response to a car coming from the east, points west, he himself facing north. A car coming from the north also wants to go west, sees the policeman's arm out and comes on. The two cars come together, veer off desperately, strike at an angle of forty-five degrees, kill the policeman between them and wreck a little ricsha traffic. The chauffeurs denounce each other vociferously. Other policemen rush up and would arrest them both. A crowd of five hundred people gathers to witness the show and all traffic is blocked. If neither is an official car both chauffeurs are carried off and the cars are left standing in the middle of the road with broken fenders interlocked. If both are official cars, the passengers present their cards, the cars are got home somehow and nothing more is ever heard of the affair.

A LEGATION QUARTER IN NAME.

Officials are so unused to discipline in traffic, as in all other things in China, that they cannot conceive of anyone attempting to enforce regulations against them. This is what happens to be wrong with Feng Yü-hsiang. It is a state of mind for which the diplomats who control the Legation Quarter have no right to make the slightest allowance if they intend to enforce any regulations at all upon anyone. The only cure at their disposal for such a state of mind as the Christian General's is to prohibit him the use of the Quarter and to enforce the prohibition rigourously. The higher the offender's position, the more promptly should such action be taken. Another way of impressing upon men like Feng Yü-hsiang that there are still people who respect discipline is to enforce the regulation which the Chinese now ignore prohibiting Chinese soldiers, whether armed or unarmed, from passing through the Quarter. At this writing literally hundreds of idle uniformed men trail through the Legation Quarter daily, absolutely unchecked. They monopolize the narrow sidewalks, edge pedestrians into the streets and otherwise assert their right to behave there as they do elsewhere. The diplomatic attitude is to ignore such symptoms until they are forced to put up barricades at the entrance and mount guns to prevent armed forces from parading in, just as it is their policy to ignore general conditions in China until they have to ask for gunboats and railway intervention.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

Why Not a Conference of Foreigners to Coerce their Governments? The Rightfulness of Defending Treaties

By Rodney Gilbert.

A strict embargo upon money and credit through concerted action is even more important than an embargo upon arms. In all the political cliques which rule one or another part of China to the discomfiture of the Chinese producer and the foreign trader, it is money that makes the wheels go round. A predatory official group "on its uppers" falls to pieces over night and its leaders become pariahs whom anyone is free to stone. Loyalty in Chinese political circles can only be bought with money. The same is true in the army and in Chinese public life generally. Every dollar released directly or indirectly to an official clique prolongs its life and buys somewhere in China considerably more than a dollar's worth of disorder. Peace is dependent upon discipline and if there is anything in which China needs discipline and in which officialdom is badly spoiled it is finance. The money-lender and the liberal creditor are responsible for a very big share of China's troubles.

KILLING THE GOLDEN GOOSE.

China has contrived to put her own embargo upon both foreign and domestic credit by defaulting widely and discrediting her bonds on all markets. She has made it apparent to all past and would-be lenders that a security which cannot be foreclosed upon is no security at all. The time seems to be coming when Chinese officialdom will have to subsist and carry on its depredations on Chinese revenues, which is wholesome because there is a limit to China's possible revenues. If there is a strict foreign and domestic embargo upon loans and if China is at the same time held strictly to her obligations, exhaustion will improve conditions if nothing else does. When officialdom feels the urgent need of more money, and none is coming from without, officialdom trims the popular fleece a little shorter. The Chinese sheep will stand awfully short trimming if he has anything like fair grazing and enjoys a little peace of mind, but if you shave him to the skin and at the same time interrupt his feeding, he will die like any other sheep and cut off the supply of wool and mutton. You cannot promote increasing disorder in China by imposing heavier taxes and exactions without reducing production below the point where taxes are collectable.

THE RAKE'S PROGRESS.

Chinese officialdom is running precisely along this course. Its ranks are already swollen to enormous proportions by those whom it has deprived of other means of livelihood; and everyone whom it attracts to its ranks is a producer less to loot. The bandits and the soldiers, like the officials, increase in direct proportion to their destructiveness. Every increase means a shorter life for the whole organization. This cannot go on very long. Men like Marshal Tuan Chi-jui say that the breaking point is actually within sight. China's resources of energy, patience and underground wealth may be inexhaustible but her available resources are not tremendous. Her industrial equipment is particularly weak and every increase in the rapacious official horde not only exhausts more of her output but strains and breaks down more of the existing machinery.

Peace by exhaustion is not a pleasant solution for the business man in China to contemplate and there may be alternatives to it, but peace of any sort is certainly pleasanter to look forward to than indefinitely protracted chaos. And chaos is certainly protracted and made more chaotic every time the outsider comes into the arena on one side or the other with more arms, money, credit or "face," because under present conditions all of these commodities are available to the enemy only.

THE EVILS OF RECOGNITION.

Recognition of any government in China today is as subversive of order as the lending of money or the sale of arms. The recognition of Peking, Canton or any other administration in China by the Powers is nothing but a blessing upon organized trouble-making, organized exploitation of the people and upon the hypocrisy which veils these high endeavours under a transparent curtain of administrative forms. The return upon such recognition is absolutely nothing but increased official courage and assurance in the repudiation of agreements, the breach of treaties, defaulting on debts and the unatoned outrages which are perpetrated almost daily upon the persons and property of foreigners.

Against the sentiments of the majority of foreigners in China and against the will of the majority of the Chinese people, the representatives of fifteen Powers entered into a most undignified bargain with a new administration in Peking a few months ago. They traded all the "face" which the world has to offer to any official group in China for a signature to a document which the new administration had neither the will nor the power to execute. The results of this huge folly are commenstrate with its size. Since then we have had nearly one hundred outrageous assaults upon foreigners, mostly within Peking's nominal jurisdiction, a stalemate on the Gold Franc question, a flood of unparalleled impertinence from Canton, a treaty brusquely set aside in Shantung and a vastly increased volume of noise about China's sovereign right to boot the foreigner into limbo. How anything else can be expected is beyond the writer's comprehension. We withhold no inducement to good behaviour. We pick out a politico-military group which has been guilty of every possible excess and irregularity; which we know does not want peace unless it means undisputed right of exploitation; which we know regards reunification as nothing but the extension of its predatory field to the geographical limits; we give this organization everything it wants, particularly in the way of "face," including the world's mandate to rule hundreds of millions of people who have had nothing to say about it except to groan under the weight of its hand; and we then profess to be astonished that it does not behave like a representative republican government solicitous for the welfare of its people and for its international obligations. The absurdity of it is beyond words and the danger of it, judging by recent and present omens, is beyond speculation.

AN EMBARGO ON FACE.

The foreigner can have nothing much to say about the restoration of peace and order in China until he has brought his Home Government as well as his diplomatic representatives in China to an understanding of the vital importance of an embargo upon "face." To this end foreign opinion in this country should be organized so that it can tell the Occident what is wrong with China and what can be done in the way of helping China back to order and discipline in a voice so loud that the sleepiest foreign office must sit up and listen. It must be remembered that Legations are usually swamped with routine and are little inclined to take the initiative in new fields of policy because this means energy and thought diverted from routine which promptly begins to pile up like dust in an unswept corner. It must also be remembered that the diplomat who makes radical suggestions to his Government at home before the ground has been paved by an unmistakeable expression of popular feeling elicits much more suspicion than sympathy, so his natural tendency is to write reservedly and advise guardedly so that no one on the other side of the world who relies upon his reports may get the idea that he is rash or erratic.

The way to get action on any measure in China is to ask for it as clearly and persistently as possible and then to seek diplomatic support. A Minister in China is more the pastor of his flock than in Western lands and therefore more its representative. He is not likely to ask his Government for anything which his flock does not seem to want or need, nor is he likely to advise contrary to the clearly expressed will or opinion of the flock. What foreigners need in China to advertise their wants, preserve their rights and put a check upon the predatory Chinese official class is an international organization speaking with one voice and representing all classes.

A FOREIGNERS' CONFERENCE.

There has been much talk of a Chinese peace conference to be called from among those very promotors of trouble who want no brand of peace but their own, which they know they cannot bring away from any sort of a conference. A much more productive conference would be one of all nationalities and classes of foreigners in China, because they do want peace and they do not want any peculiar brand of it but the peace which comes from good Government and enables people to farm, trade, manufacture and travel without fear. Such an organization of opinion is needed to map out a scheme of defence of foreign rights designed to discipline China's unbridled officialdom and a system of such checks upon this same officialdom as would hamper and cramp it in its predatory enterprises. We sometimes get disgusted with the Chinese people and growl because they are so inarticulate and so incapable of organizing in their own defence. We really should have little to say on this score until opinion is organized and articulate with us.

Organized foreign opinion in China could deal with such questions as the embargoes which the writer has discussed. It could insist upon the withdrawal of recognition from Governments which give nothing in return but contempt and could see that recognition was withheld until something was evolved which not only called itself a Government but actually functioned as a Government throughout China.

Organized foreign opinion could insist upon joint diplomatic action in every case where a treaty right or a bargain was violated, making it impossible for this or that Power to hang back and curry favour in the hope of pushing secret special interests.

It could insist upon the postponement of all conferences and investigations by committees such as the proposed surtax conference and the commission which is to study China's judicial system with a view to the abolition of extraterritoriality.

It could take up every obscure case of treaty violation and insist upon proper adjustment, amends and penalties. Nothing weakens foreign prestige and the security of foreign life and property under this pseudo-republicanism which we recognize so much as the gradual, persistent encroachment which the Chinese official is always making upon recognized foreign rights. The Diplomatic Body's heaviest burden of sin is the huge total of its sins of commission—its failures to make a stand on every issue when it was possible to make a stand and its failures to exact reparation or punishment when it was not only possible but when the Chinese expected it. If the foreigner is to maintain any position in China, foreign opinion must learn to express itself in chorus upon every least infringement of rights and to demand action.

WHAT CHINESE RESPECT.

Chinese public opinion is now educated up to a keen resentment of aggression, but anyone who knows the Chinese also knows that the official caste cannot promote an anti-foreign movement against a defence of existing rights, seasoned by time and endorsed by tradition. Every successful act of encroachment is applauded, but resistance to encroachment does not elicit malice. It elicits instead respect, if not admiration. The Chinese farmer who can plough three feet on the wrong side of his neighbour's boundary and "get away with it" applauds his own cleverness and audacity but feels nothing but contempt for the timid or stupid neighbour who does not detect nor resent the trespass. The neighbour who will sally forth upon the slightest encroachment, curse him roundly and hurl him and his plough and his animals back over his own boundary he respects and thinks worth cultivating.

Intervention in China would be bitterly resented but no action, no matter how drastic, in defence of an acknowledged foreign right, would ever move the Chinese people to resentful demonstrations. It will be noted for instance that the display of gunboats recently made in Canton in defence of the integrity of the Customs collectorate brought forth no strikes and no boycotts—nothing but spleen from the Kuomingtang which would be directing an Anglo-American boycott now if it could.

Organized foreign opinion could make short work of the question of the use of the settlements, concessions and leased territories by criminal ex-officials who use them as refuges from justice or as bases for trouble-making enterprise in the hinterland. This is a question which cries out for settlement, which gives Chinese agitators every reason for complaint and which undoubtedly has a direct bearing upon the peace of China.

As the writer said at the opening of this discussion the foreigner's part in the restoration of order must be largely a negative, disciplinary part, but if his part were played intelligently and honestly there is no doubt that he could put many a hobble upon China's refractory official mount which would enable this slow-moving nation to catch up with it and put its own halters on it within a somewhat shorter time. The essence of foreign action must however be cooperation It is a case of united we stand (and perhaps make ourselves useful), while divided we slide and drift, and possibly fall.

THE PEOPLE AWAKENING.

While foreigners in China and their Home Governments if wisely guided may play a fairly big part in bringing form out of chaos in China, the biggest portion of the task must under any conditions devolve upon the Chinese. It would be futile to prophesy how they are going to do it. They are so fond of peace and so resourceful in keeping their social relations within the bounds of propriety, that it is hard to believe that with the outside world sympathetic, they will not work out or fight out something as good if not better than what they lost in 1911. New institutions and new forces are growing up in China which must inevitably work towards peace and order when they get on the right track and know that they are on it. An increased interest in public affairs, largely stimulated by adversity; a growing and more intelligent public opinion founded upon this new interest; a new national spirit, founded largely upon fear of foreign aggression; a new spirit of cooperation within the commercial circle, tending largely to self defence; the growth of the banks, the sanity of the bankers and their influence upon public affairs; the existence and power of even such abused institutions as the students' unions; and finally the general and unanimous yearning for peace and a chance to get back to work echoed in empty phrases by the official caste—all these are developing forces which now seem to be working in no particular direction but which must eventually combine to work towards discipline and peace.

NEW NATIONALISTIC SPIRIT.

The fostering of all of these forces and their guidance into right channels ought to be the task of every sincere Chinese patriot. Peace could be brought much nearer through intelligent propaganda within the circles which now control those forces. One of the most promising of all the potential checks upon Government in China is the new nationalistic spirit which at this moment is the least sanely directed. Because it is new and unformed it is capable of education and direction. Until very recently no element of the Chinese people ever conceived of their country as a nation in the modern Western sense. They have thought of it as the Middle Country, as the civilized nucleus of a vast surrounding web of barbarism. They have thought of it as T'ien Hsia (Under Heaven), meaning thereby all of humanity under the sky that was worth taking into consideration. They have thought of themselves as a family, with the Emperor in the place of the revered ancestor and his appointed officials as his sons and grandsons and themselves as the remote and reverent descendants in various generations.

The official attitude under all dyuasties has been that the land and all that was in it was the Emperor's and the people his chattels with no rights but those which he chose to bestow. Land deeds were perpetual leases, taxes were rents, officials were in no sense representatives of the people but agents of the one supreme source of authority. Since the people had no rights inherent (in theory at any rate) they also had no duties inherent. They paid their rents when they were collected and they joined armies of conquest or defence when they were rounded up and ordered to bear arms. Such conceptions of the individual's rights and the individual's obligations to the state have not been altered over night in any Occidental country and the surprise of it is that they are altering so quickly in China.

MY COUNTRY 'TIS OF THEE.

Under the spur of real or imagined foreign aggression great masses of the Chinese people, including all the intellectals, have come to believe that the country is theirs to protect, if Peking, or the Government, or the President, or whatever has taken the place of the Emperor, will not or cannot protect it. Organization and cooperation for defence is as new, if not a newer idea, in China as a whole than socialism is in the Occident. Most of us who have been in China a few years know how this idea grew under the stimulus of Japan's military diplomacy during the war years. With the radical change in Japanese policy after the Washington conference this particular stimulus was withdrawn but there was no stopping the growth of the idea. From a purely defensive conception of the duty of the individual to the state, the nationalistic movement has been an aggressive movement towards the liberation of the state from real or imaginary foreign shackles.

This new development is born of shame rather than pride. It is the increased knowledge of China's relatively humble position among the nations which is stimulating it. We have all felt the force of this movement and have been annoyed by it because at the moment it is one-sided and unintelligent, but it is not a movement to be discouraged because with increased thought and increased knowledge it is bound to run along new channels and make things very lively for the predatory official.

GOOD BEHAVIOUR THE PRICE.

When the Chinese people finally get it into their heads that a nation's rights are conditional upon good behaviour like the individual's, that a nation's international standing depends just as much upon its discharge of fundamental obligations as the individual's social standing does, that China is humble, is scolded, is patronized and is penalized like the individual who misbehaves because she does not discharge her obligations, the fiery nationalists will begin to conceive of a broader sense of duties towards their country and will realize that since it is theirs it is their right to make it worthy of the rights and courtesies usually extended to independent nations. They will come to realize that they as the owners of a nation are responsible for assaults upon its integrity, its sovereign rights, its prestige, its wealth and its liberties from within as well as from without. The Chinese are proud of China's past, with very good reason. But they are not proud of their country now and by the inevitable rule of contraries they are therefore most insistent that it be respected and granted every privilege.

It has not occurred to many of them yet that this is no fair basis for international relations, but they are going to see the point whenever Occidental policy makes

SPRING PREMONITIONS

"The Joyous Book of Spring Lies Open"

By Elizabeth Pepys.

The most ecstatic moment in a play or a concert for many of us comes before the curtain rises or the conductor raises his baton, when the bell rings to announce the beginning of the drama, or twittery tunings-up presage the opening number. Anything may be in store for us then and nothing is too good to be true.

Something of that feeling comes to us as even in mid-winter we begin to outline spring wardrobes and to assemble from the various fashion sheets the hints which will most closely approximate the needs of one's own outfit. Advance news notes are always a bit unsettling. A woman scans the telegrams announcing the high waist line with suspicion. Where did it originate? Is this a genuine demand or something some eccentric designer is trying to "put over?" What do the pictures say?

The pictures. That is the acid test. It may be easy for some mocking arbiter of fashion to fling out a prophecy regarding the length or circumference of skirts which will be cabled round the world, but it is only the greatly daring who will act on such advices unless they are reinforced by illustrations of models posing in creations which fulfil the predictions.

INCOMING FULNESS.

Some of these style tips have looked too far into the future to receive immediate endorsement but they are justified eventually. Take the prognosis that skirts would be full. For a long time we continued to scoffingly reject such a forecast, but little by little the tide of fashion has changed and we see fulness creeping in everywhere.

To be sure this it not done ostentatiously, and the straight and narrow still prevails but for those who read the writing on the walls of the designers' ateliers there is every indication of approaching voluminosity. Dinner gowns still remain slim and dignified, their conservative elegance contrasting with the sprightly frocks originated for dancings which are butterfly-light and graceful.

The vogue of the moment appears to be floating draperies which sway gracefully in the dance. They take the shape of pointed or straight panels, or even of ribbony strips and although their tips may almost touch the floor they are so light and diaphonous that the general effect is one of abreviated fluffiness. Another type of dancing frock which has been very popular is the brocade or embossed velvet made with a circular skirt which bands the hips tightly and flares out at the ankles, a heavy hem of fur around the edge of the skirt giving it a rippling, fluted grace. Marabou is also used to get this effect.

FRILLS AGAIN.

Inserts of sunburst pleating are used in furtherance of this idea by Jean Patou and in one of his models four sunburst panels, trimmed with silver beads, hang over a shorter underskirt and give a bewitching movement. Another way of introducing this fulness is found by Drecoll who runs a finely pleated frill round the skirt of a sheer black lace gown and then up the front to the low waist line, thus compromising with the slender effect and yet securing comfortable width for dancing.

Tulle ruching set on overskirts or tunics is another way of using fulness, for tulle is back again and is being worn in combination with satin. In some of the Chanel frocks long streamers float from the shoulders and the pleated apron or transparent capes also carry out the desired effect of free movement. If this pretty idea wins general recognition over here the Astor and the Carlton dancing floors will look as if filled with rose and cherry petals, swaying to cadenced breezes.

SHANGHAI FAIRY TALE

The Three Wishes in the 1924 Edition

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Once upon a time there was a bright little girl named Peaches. At least that was not her name but that was what she was called and if we could only reproduce her complexion herewith it would be apparent at once that no other appellation could be for one instant moment tolerated.

Because Peaches possessed in addition to her complexion a curious and hospitable mind she not only read all sorts of books listed as the best sellers but all manner of works on deep and abstruse subjects, such as 'In Tune with the Infinite" and "As A Man Thinketh" and "Dream Psychoses" and "Woman—A Vindication" and the like.

On Mondays she went to the Quest Society and on Tuesdays to one or the other of the Women's Associations or both, and on Wednesdays to her little group of earnest thinkers, while on Thursdays she visited the Theosophical Lodge and usually Fridays there was a Literary Department or a Musical Tea to keep her busy while Saturdays between the Paper Hunts and the programmes of the China Society of Science and Arts she was rushed to death.

Sometimes of course there was not a single meeting to attend, although to do Shanghai justice, we must admit that this seldom occurred. On such occasions she was driven to attending tea dancings, but preferably with some intellectual companion. Her particular interest was in the Development of the Mind by Concentration, assisted by Affirmation, and by an acquaintance with Coue's methods, she believed that anything might be accomplished.

When the envious asked her the secret of her complexion she smiled sweetly and murmured "I concentrate;" but though all her dearest friends not only concentrated but visited the same Beauty Parlours they did not meet with her success.

When Peaches' rich but stingy aunt Jane came to visit in Shanghai her niece determined to use her as a demonstration of the value of concentration. She sent her thought waves on the beauty of generosity, of the idealism of giving, of the suitability of a certain diamond and platinum watch as a gift for a deserving niece. But aunt Jane was unresponsive.

Since her aged relative was so old-fashioned, Peaches had recourse to direct—very direct—action. "Do you ever wish for things, aunt Jane?" she queried, concentrating meantime on generosity. "No," snapped the aunt in question, "when I want a thing I go after it."

"It must be wonderful to have that ability," sighed Peaches admiringly, "I can only affirm the truth."

"What truth?"

Startled, but seizing the opportunity, Peaches responded, "I repeat to myself: Aunt Jane loves me: she is going to give me three wishes."

"For the land's sake, I should call it affirming a lie, part of it any way. But what do you want from me?"

Thinking to win kudos for her moderation Peaches began: "Well, it's been a long hard winter, and goodness knows I need a new hat and—"

But she got no further for aunt Jane broke in: "Want a new hat for one wish do you? Well, I'll give you that."

"O thank you auntie, thank you so much. There's just the sweetest little cloche at Mahriah's."

"O, I've got the hat already. I bought it at a sale to help along the cause, and I don't really need it. It's too young for me anyway and will look much better on you. —Boy bring one piecee new hat this side."

"But aunty," objected Peaches feebly, "I don't believe I could wear a hat you picked out. Of course I'd like the hat very much, but" (brightening) "you see my hair is bobbed."

"O no, Janie, you've got as much hair as I have this very minute, besides, if it's too big you can put a strip of newspaper in, under the lining. Waste not, want not." And she held up before her horrified niece one of those inexcusable bits of millinery which cause one to wonder why they were created in the first place and who could ever wear them in the second.

"But aunt Jane," remonstrated Peaches, "I never could wear that colour in the world. It would make me look like nothing at all."

"Sakes alive, it would look a whole lot better than some of the wild things I see you wearing, so don't say I didn't give you your wish."

"A nice wish," flamed Peaches, casting discretion to the winds, "I wish, I wish I could throw it at your head!"

"Well of all things, if you are not a disgrace to your mother's bringing up! I'll give you that wish, just to see if you're as ill-mannered as you sound."

"It takes more than you to scare me, aunt Jane. I do want to throw it back at you and I won't suppress the desire any longer, so look out for yourself," and the hat went spinning through the air.

"Since that's how you feel about me and my gifts," began aunt Jane grimly, picking up her despised offering and starting to stalk out of the room.

"O aunty, forgive my hateful temper," pleaded Peaches, feeling better after her explosion. But aunt Jane kept on. "Aunty, it was only expressing my volitional personality. Really, it is all the fault of this Freud-Jung psychology stuff. Give me my third wish. I wish you would forgive me."

"Psychology nothing," sniffed the offended yet relenting aunt Jane, "I'll give you your third wish, and then you'll be just like the man who wished for a black pudding and then wished that on his wife's nose and had to take his last wish to wish it off again."

CHAINS

The Arduosness of Freedom

People ask very often and very vocally for liberty. But when, by some strange stroke of luck, they happen to get it, they find themselves more often than not very seriously embarrassed by the acquisition. For freedom is difficult, is arduous; it demands from those who possess it the practice of many virtues. Slavery, on the other hand (provided always that it is not called by its proper name and that it is not too intoleraby harsh), is easy and agreeable and demands from the slave the exercise of no virtue but that of obedience. A slave can be an automaton; but a free man, if he is really to enjoy his liberty, must be an individual human being. The task, as we have said before, is arduous.

Chains, then, are a comfort and almost a necessity. The aim of the social reformer should not be to abolish chains—he could not do is if he tried—, but rather to see that human beings are provided with a pleasing and picturesque variety of fetters. Plenty of chains of different patterns are needed if the world is to remain the interesting and delightful place which, in spite of everything, it has always been.

FASHION'S DELIGHTFUL SLAVERY.

Now, it is precisely this pleasing variety in the patterns of chains that we seem nowadays to be losing. Chains in aur modern world tend to be of standard pattern. Democratic education, rotary printing-machines, fast trains, telegraphy, the camera—these products of human progress are rapidly giving to the universal slavery of man a sameness, an air of uniformity. Consider, for oxample, that delightful slavery which is called Fashion. Ease of communication has brought it about that practically all the men and women in Europe and the two Americas dress exactly alike.

AS SPRINGLIKE AS THE FIRST DAFFODIL.

Local and distinctively national dress has practically vanished from our Western world. The distinctive uniforms of classes and trades are disappearing under the inbuence of democratic ideas.

Where is the English peasant's smock, the capenter's square cap? Labourer and artisan dress in shabby imitation of their richer brothers. There are still countries in Europe where women of the lower classes never wear hats. But, even in France and Italy, the custom is beginning to die, and cheap and tawdry millinery will soon be as common there as it is here. Even the distinguishing uniforms suitable to the different ages of women seem now to be disappearing. There was a time when one could distinguish at a glance and from a distance, by the clothes alone, the grandmother from the mother and the mother from the daughter. Today, we have changed all that; grandmother and granddaughter wear the same sack frock on the same slim figure, the same round hat pulled disguisingly down over the eyes.

STANDARDIZED RECREATION.

But it is not only in the world of fashion that we have arrived at uniformity in slavery. All our conventions of thought, of social habit, of pleasure, are becoming standardized. Gone, for example, are the local dances, the people's songs. The gramophone has imposed on the whole world the same fox-trots, the same American tunes. Past is the time when England was regarded as eccentric in its love of sports. To day, the French, the Germans, the Italians, all the peoples of Europe, play football and golf and tennis, box and run races; sports are everywhere the same, and everybody is equally enthusiastic about them. The cinema gives us all one brand of drama, the penny press one set of ideas. Providentially, we still speak a number of different languages; othewise the whole of Europe would be reading only English literature.

This is a melancholy state of things; the more so since there seems, so far as one can see, no possibility of remedying it. Violent means are wholly unsuccessful. Russia, for example, has certainly got rid of most of the politer European slaveries; but none will envy her the native brand of slavery which she has substituted for them. A consciously cultivated nationalism might do something to variegate our chains; but the dangers of nationalism are to be seen only too clearly in Ireland, or, indeed, in almost any of the smaller new countries of Europe. It is better to have uniform chains than hatreds and wars. No, it looks as though we have got to reconcile ourselves to this uniformity of slavery; we must make the best of our Ford chains. The worst of it is that the world may come to look dreadfully dull to our modern eyes.—"Vogue."

Each generation wants its own new books of quotations. The old quotations become too hackneyed and the words cease to inform the mind or inspire the soul. Each age wants its own voice, and yet the older voices which used the universal tongue are always heeded. "Hoyt's Cyclopœdia of Practical Quotations" has been revised and enlarged, and now contains an armoury of over 30,000 phrases covering a wide range of interests. This great volume is published by Funk and Wagnalls, of 14, Salisbury Square, London, E. C. 4.

Of all the thousands of craft employed during the Great War none had so thrilling a life as the Q-ships, commonly known as "Mystery Ships." They carried out the most hazardous service, they had most thrilling experiences, and their fights with enemy submarines are the finest episodes of naval warfare in any age. Lord Jellicoe once remarked that in the mystery ship there had been displayed a spirit of endurance, discipline and courage the like of which the world has never seen before, and added that he did not think the English people realized the wonderful work which these ships had done in the war. In "Q-Ships and Their Story" Mr. E. Keble Chatterton tells for the first time the complete history of these splendid vessels. The book is published by Sidgwick & Jackson at 12s. 6d.

THE REWARD OF LABOUR

By Achilles.

"Lonely Furrow." By Maud Diver. (John Murray: 7/6).

"For all your labour you get strength, not fruit," is an apt epigram for Maud Diver to have chosen for her book. Before you have read its 500 pages, the short quotation on the title-page seems rather meaningless: you do not really pay much attention to it: it resembles some of these long dissertations on such subjects as the Comity of Nations, excellent but rather mouldy, hackneyed, call it what you will, wearing whiskers, 'already-said.' But when you realize the theme of the book, and, especially, when you near its conclusion, the purport of the words and their connexion with this volume become apparent.

The hero of "Lonely Furrow," after 19 years of married life, has the good—or is it doubtful?—fortune to meet the nature which exactly complements his own. Nineteen years of domestic misunderstanding and marital 'Sturm und Drang' have been insufficient to make womankind a closed book to this man for the rest of his life. So, when one charming Vanessa, a widow, meets him she refuses to admit that he looks like a married man when pressed. "Frankly—no." How did she detect the symptoms? She did'nt—or else he was very clever at hiding them. Obviously his wife did not play the part of Constant-Companion-Comforter, ready at hand. Her constancy consisted chiefly in remaining consistently at home in England. Six years it had now been since she had seen him last, and always procrastination on her part when he urged her to come East. Her companionship was at a discount, because even when together she would poison it by grumbling at the sphere of the world in which he earned his living. She affected a pose of Nationalism, and thought in the way of the conceited Ignorant that we should not be interfering in India at all. The comfort such a woman could give a husband with a great deal of feeling and soul, which had continually perforce to lie fallow, was infinitesimal. Her letters alone brought a little of it, and they too were tinged with a shade of patronising pity for the spouse who alienated himself in India. Vitally important, they brought to him news of his second daughter Eve who was sacred to the father.

His marriage had been a mistake: these twain who wedded were but mildly attracted to each other when each was in the single state, the attraction being nothing but that healthy and simple kind, usually very faint, often only courteous, which is repeatedly possible between any admirable 'lady's man' and a prepossessing damsel. The meeting of soul with soul bringing great light, bringing 'new depth to shades, new brilliance to colours, vividness to all sensations, and vitality to all thoughts,' is possible only once a life-time ("Beware of imitations") if that.

When it occurred the Colonel was given exquisite joy, part torture: for a fine man of his calibre could not be disloyal to his wife, being above duplicity of thought and defilement of deed, facing facts, above all the fact that adultery (in any form) is an ugly word.

But apart from this quite charming poem of Affinity meeting Affinity, and the delightful description of the father's delight in his little daughter Eve, we are particularly entertained in this book by the phases of Indian life which it opens out for our inspection. There is a perceptible strain of sadness in these assemblies and discussions of Anglo-Indians. We feel their sense of whimsical helplessness at the thought of how the Raj is not respected as before, not supported by the Authorities as of yore. The Chief Commissioner's dinner-party is one of the best bits of the yarn. A journalist of some repute from home is present. What surprises him is that British officials should still be in the saddle with educated India clamouring for their withdrawal. The theoretical champion of the natives cries:—"Well its their country, that's my argument." "Which of theirs, should you say?" the Colonel inquires, and treats the journalist to a brief lecture which laughed at the idea that the Raj was going to let himself be squeezed out of the country by a handful of lawyer intellectuals. "We've no right to indulge in an orgy of self-denial at the expense of millions here who need us. We've made deplorable mistakes. But we've done our level best—up to our lights."

The reward of labour was, for the excellent Colonel, strength, consisting of a "Completely fashioned Will," nobility and generosity, in both his great enterprises of life, his work in India with the natives whom he understood and loved, and his sternest task of all, the courageous acknowledgement of the fact that the Seventh Commandment is not to be broken. Still we have Laws we revere. Fruit there was not, except the fruit of mutual satisfaction that they had observed the canons and dictates of Truth, and not debased them.

It is a recommendable book for all who have friends in India, or even in the East, and for those who like a romance, beautifully and at the same time cleverly and calmly told, it will be welcome reading.

"Modern Democracy in China." By Mingchien. Joshua Bau, Ph. D. pp. 467, pub. by the Commercial Press.

"The proper study of mankind" in China, just now, is the State, and Dr. Bau has made a noteworthy contribution in this well packed book. For 150 pages he reviews modern Chinese history and politics, for the next 200 he discusses the problems of constitutional government, and concludes by printing seven important political documents for reference.

The Manchu dynasty fell in 1911 for its repeated failure to maintain the dignity and security of China. It is the test that has accounted for the changes of government in France during the last 130 years. But the last 13 years in China have provided no government at all, and the Ship of State is drifting helplessly with no one on the bridge that has powers of control. Now the basis of government in China has always been public opinion. "There is no doubt that China has been a great democracy for centuries with the monarchical autocracy superimposed" (p. 115, quoting H. B. Morse). The first problem is to get that public opinion into working order for which the requisities are detailed in chapter 11, namely the education of the people, their fuller political experience, the polarization of parties, the growth of public spirit, the establishment of a citizen soldiery, and a system of communications. From which it is evident that the foundation for a Republic in China has not yet been well and truly laid.

As to the superstructure Dr. Bau has some very useful things to say in a series of chaptchs, constituting Book II where he balances and compares cabinet and presidential systems federal and unitory types of government, and goes on to discuss the composition and powers of the legislature, the election and scope of executive, the status and functions of the judiciary, passing on to questions of local self-government, budget procedure, political parties and so on.

Dr. Bau passes various sound criticism on the Provisional Constitution from which China now suffers. "The tussle for power and the shifting of responsibilities between the President and the Premier make the system neither a cabinet nor a presidential system, but one of dual executive with responsibilities and powers not clearly defined.' Moreover "the two Houses of the Legislature are entirely too numerous and unwieldy." Again "there is no provision for the bringing about of harmony between the executive and the legislature. For the lack of decision China has been in the whirlpool that centres in civil war ever since Yuan Shih-kai and the Kuomintang defied each other. Finally there is no stipulation in the Provisional Constitution defining the relation between the Central Government and the Provinces." (p. 93-103). This testing of the crucial points of government is well supported by instances drawn from the history of the last decade.

But obviously the chief disease in China is the abuse of military powers by the Tuchuns of various provinces, though it would probably be more correct to call it the chief symptom of the sick man of the East. The glaring misappropriation of China's funds and powers with the consequent disunion and disorder is a scandal that must be ended before a constitution can be properly balanced and the political constituency fully educated.

Dr. Bau recommends for an immediate step the appointment of a strong Chief Executive, preferably in the person of the President, gathering into his hands the necessary proportion of the military and financial powers now scattered in the hands of Tuchuns and Super-Tuchuns, disbanding the superfluous troops and creating a national army for defence." (p. 147). How to accomplish his election is the almost insoluble problem of the Chinese constitution.

These extracts will give some idea of the scope of this thoughtful and readable book. In point of style there are mistakes inevitably, the word "yet" being sometimes turned to strange uses (pp. 114, 122, 125) and there are some misprints. The book, however, as a whole, should be a handbook for students and provide watchword for politicians.

JACKSON OF MUKDEN

"Jackson of Mukden." By Mrs. Dugald Christie. Pp. 155. Price 3/6, pub. by Hodder & Stoughton.

It was on January 25 in the first year of the Chinese Republic that Arthur Jackson died fighting the fatal pneumonic plague at Mukden. It is probably a record without precedent that a man's fame should attain to a biography after only 10 weeks' service; and in fact this book follows another "life" by Dr. Costain. The biographical matter has of course to be spread out thin to make it cover the required size of the "Master Missionary Service," including such giants as Livingstone of Africa and Chalmers of New Guinea.

But for two reasons this chatty biography was worth publishing. First it proves that life is a matter of quality rather than length. This young athlete and accomplished doctor of 26 years old did what he could, he gave his life in its prime, and proved that youth can win its crown as well as age.

Secondly it shows how a life can count for most when it is given away. It was the self-sacrifice that made so deep an impression on colleague and Chinese alike. The Viceroy had been reckoned anti-foreign, but Dr. Jackson's death in trying to save a train-load of coolies moved him to the depths. In his eulogy, delivered in the presence of the notables, he cried out, "O spirit of Dr. Jackson, we pray you intercede for the 20 million people of Manchuria, and ask the Lord of Heaven to take away this pestilence. . . Noble Spirit, who sacrificed your life for us, help us still, and look down in kindness upon us all!" Not content with mere words he gave $5,000 to the Medical College and $10,000 for the use of Dr. Jackson's family, and when his hero's mother desired this sum to be also handed to the College he exclaimed with deep emotion, "What a mother and what a son!" and he doubled his gift.

Such incidents are no bigger than the breaking of the alabaster box, and the whole neighbourhood is filled with the fragrance.

THRUST UPON HIM!

"The Day's Journey." By W. B. Maxwell. Thornton Butterworth. 7/6 net.

Mr. Maxwell suffers in these days a severe handicap. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has recently published his opinion that he has "long thought W. B. Maxwell the greatest of British novelists." Now that was not a kind thing to do. For, whether one may have any faith in Sir Arthur's judgment in such matters or not, such a saying is bound to infect the minds of readers of Mr. Maxwell's books either with expectations doomed to certain disappointment or with a prejudice that must mar, if not kill, any enjoyment of his work. For the same reason it was unwise of the publishers to use the foolish saying as an advertisement, at any rate in England. In America it would not matter. There every book which appears is introduced by the publishers as "the greatest" or "the most remarkable" or "the most vital" or some other ridiculous superlative. The American public is used to this kind of fare and knows exactly how much salt to take with it. The American sense of humour does not include a sense of the ridiculous; and Americans love exaggeration and superlatives for their own sake. So much is this a national trait that in order to get an idea into their minds you must go beyond it in expression in the certain knowledge that whatever you say will be salted down before belief. But the English are a simpler folk who are apt to believe that you mean exactly what you say. And so it was not kind to risk making Mr. Maxwell ridiculous in the eyes of his English readers by the use in advertisement of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's superlative nonsense. The word "risk" is written in the hope that the harm done may not be irreparable. This review indeed is intended as an humble effort in the direction of repair. All novels, and in fact all literature, should be criticized (as they should be written and also advertised) ex-vacuo. But such is the poison of this plaguy comparison talk, this "greatest" stuff, that it sets even the hardened reviewer to thinking of other novelists instead of concentrating upon the one under review. A vision of Conrad thrusts in for comparison where no comparison is possible. One sees that master's wonderful people and impossible happenings set forth in the magic of their creator's words to appear more true, more alive than one's own family at home. All of it utterly unlike anything one ever saw or heard in daily life. Wrenching the mind back to Mr. Maxwell one sees that his people and their doings are so like what we see around us daily as to rise at times almost to the devastating dreariness of life itself. The futility of comparison! Whereto could it lead? Back to the age-old discussions of such silly labels as "idealism" and "realism" and their comparative values in literary art. For Heaven's sake let us get out of the bog.

No. Greatness in literature is a matter for which we have no certain test except the perspective of time, survival of the years. But it may be interesting to note that no book that could by any stretch of the imagination be called realism has lived, up to date.

It must not be supposed that this is to put Mr. Maxwell's work under that unfortunate label. In so far as there is a tendency to exactly reproduce the actualities of everyday life, he fails. For such exact reproduction is, not bad art, but not art at all. In this novel the work is marred by this tendency and is only saved by this tendency and idealisation of the love of the two men, his principal characters. Too much stress is laid upon their all-too-lifelike bickerings, but their love for one another throughout their lives ("the Day's Journey") is shown idealized and with a masterly avoidance of sloppiness. This it is that makes the book as a whole very satisfying, very good reading.

CONSOLIDATED LOAN SERVICE

Inspector-General's Report for 1923: Payments Met But Amortization Short

WARNINGS OF LAST YEAR FULLY REALIZED

The Shanghai Bankers' Association send us the following memorandum from Sir Francis Aglen, showing how his prediction of a year ago of a deficiency of funds for the Consolidated Loan Service has been amply justified:—

The year 1923 opened with all obligations to December 31, 1922, either met or fully covered, as was shown in the statement appended to the Inspector-General's Memorandum of January 14, 1923, handed to the Shanghai Bankers' Association. In that Memorandum the Inspector-General also showed that in order fully to meet the Loan Service for the year 1923 a sum of $21,584,531 additional to the balance carried forward from 1922 would have to be found. In estimating the possibility of finding this sum the Inspector-General stated that there was no probability that payments from the Salt Revenue and from the Ministry of Communications, due under the Loan Regulations and amounting to $20,000,000, would be resumed. In consequence the Sinking Fund would have to depend entirely upon the sums available from the Customs revenue surplus. Attention was drawn to the fact that, owing to increased cost of foreign obligations caused chiefly by the drop in exchange and by increased Customs administrative charges, the surplus available for 1923 would be diminished by an amount estimated at $14,524,187. The dollar equivalent of the actual sum absorbed owing to these causes was, in round numbers, $13,900,000.

SURPLUS SHORT OF EXPECTATION.

In venturing to give an estimate of the probable surplus for the year 1923, the Inspector General stated that, making due allowance for the effect of the revised import tariff, the surplus could not be expected to yield more than $17,358,813. The actual surplus was Shanghai Tls. 11,762,083.62, equivalent at average rate of exchange to $16,223,563. Of the above sum $12,291,976.32 were devoted to Consolidated Loan service for 1923, making with $5,436,348.08 carried over from the 1922 surplus a total of $17,728,324.40 from Customs Revenue available for meeting the 1923 liability. The balance of the 1923 revenue surplus has, in accordance with previous practice, been carried over partly to meet foreign loan obligations maturing early in the year 1924 and partly to cover interest coupons of the Consolidated Loans maturing in February and March, 1924, as it is impossible, without invading the priority of foreign loan and Indemnity obligations, to draw on current revenue for the sinking fund of the Consolidated Loans during the first three months of any year.

AMORTIZATION $9,249,611 SHORT.

Two statements are appended to this report, (1) showing the cash transactions during the year 1923 and (2) giving the total liability for the year 1923 and showing how far with the funds available, and after making due provision for foreign and Consolidated loan payments falling due in the first three months of 1924, the Inspector General has been able to meet it. (Owing to want of space these tables have to be omitted, but the upshot of them is shown in the next sentence.—Ed.)

It will be seen that all coupons and drawn bonds due but not yet presented for payment up to the end of 1922 have been covered in full, that all interest payments due in 1923 according to schedule have been met or duly covered in full, and that amortization due in 1923 has fallen into arrears to the extent of $9,249,611.

A PREDICTION FULFILLED.

The warning conveyed in the Inspector General's Memorandum of January, 1923, that, without the support of the Salt and other revenues allocated to the sinking fund, it would be impossible fully to maintain the Consolidated Loan Service is thus seen to have been justified, and, until further loan service funds are released by the extinction of the 3rd Year Loan, amortization of the Consolidated Loans must be expected to lag still farther behind.

Provided, however, that no violent fluctuation in exchange takes place, and that Customs revenue receipts do not fall appreciably below their present level, all interest payments during 1924 are reasonably assured.

Inspector General of Customs.

International Conferences Said to Have Been Postponed: China's Fault

Peking, Mra. 4.

A telegraphic message from Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires to the Court of St. James, received by the Waichiaopu, reports that the British Government has notified the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires that, owing to the chaotic situation in China, the despatch of an international commission of inquiry into China's judicial system, which was agreed upon at the Washington Conference, will be postponed; this, as a result of negotiations among the Powers concerned.

According to another report from the Chinese Minister to France, the French Government has decided not to assent to the international conference on China's tariff, on the ground that China has failed to discharge her treaty obligation with regard to the gold franc question.—Eastern News Agency.

CHINA AND SOVIET RUSSIA

Conditions of Recognition: C.-E. Railway Rights: Control in Mongolia

ABOLITION OF RUSSIAN TREATY RIGHTS

Peking, Mar. 2.

Chinese newspapers report that Dr. C. T. Wang has submitted a report to the Cabinet which will be considered on Tuesday. It is stated to contain a proposed plan to bring about completion of the preliminary negotiations between Russia and China.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, March 3.

The "Ching Pao" reports that, following a meeting between Dr. C. T. Wang and M. Karakhan on Saturday, a petition has been submitted to the President recommending recognition of Soviet Russia. The petition will be forwarded to the Cabinet for consideration at the meeting on Tuesday.

It is stated that the attitude of the Fengtien authorities is favourable and, consequently, it is anticipated that the Sino-Russian negotiations will make rapid progress.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Mar. 3.

In the course of frequent interviews with Dr. C. T. Wang, M. Karakhan, Soviet Envoy in the Far East, while agreeing in principle to the withdrawal of Russian troops from Outer Mongolia, has made several exceptions and reserved his definite announcement as to the exact date for the evacuation. Besides, M. Karakhan is, it is reported, persisting in the continuance of the treaty entered into between the Soviet Government and Mongolia. As for the Chinese Eastern Railway question, M. Karakhan has given up his claim to the management of the railway, but he is still strongly insisting upon many conditions, including one that no White should be employed in the administration of the Railway and another that China should agree to turn over those shares of the Railway which belong to Soviet Russia.

Later.

The Rosta News Agency here to-day reports that with regard to the opening of Sino-Russian negotiations, M. Karakhan, Soviet Envoy in the Far East, will not change his attitude and that whether the proposed negotiations will be held at all or not solely depends upon the determination of China. The same Agency also adds that Soviet Russia will never agree to China's claim to the indemnity and that full particulars of the informal negotiations conducted between Dr. C. T. Wang and M. Karakhan will be published before long.—Eastern News Agency.

Peking, Mar. 4.

It is semi-officially announced that the Sino-Russian negotiations are making good progress.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CRUX OF RECOGNITION.

Peking, Mar. 5.

Considerable interest is attached locally to the outcome of the negotiations between China and Russia. Foreign circles point out that Sino-Russian official negotiations cannot start until China recognizes the Soviet and recognition, unless expressly qualified in that connexion, would restore Russian exterritorial rights and also give the Soviet the right to take over the Legation, whereupon the question of the Soviet representative's relations with the Diplomatic Body would immediately arise. In view of the fact that many countries represented dip-

BIRTHS

BELL.—On February 23, 1924, at Dr. Fearn's Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Bell, of 636 Avenue Joffre, a son. (Tientsin papers please copy).

DANIELS.—On February 23, 1924, at Dr. Fearn's Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. Willem Daniels, a daughter.

FORREST.—On February 28, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. W. G. H. Forrest, a daughter.

HEINTZLEMAN.—On February 24, 1924, at Hankow, to Ida Mary, wife of Mr. P. S. Heintzleman, U. S. Consul General, Hankow, a daughter.

MADAR.—On February 23, 1924, at 283 Dixwell Road, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Madar, a daughter.

RICHARDSON.—On February 25, 1924, at the Maternity Building, St. Marie's Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. George Oliver Richardson, a son, Robert Simmons.

SOLARI.—On February 26, 1924, at the Maternity Building, St. Marie's Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mme. Roger A. Solari, a son, Roger Georges.

ZANE.—On February 23, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Fong Zane, a son.

MARRIAGES

CHASSELS—MARTIN.—On February 28, 1924, at H.B.M. Consulate-General, Shanghai, before Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., and afterwards at the Union Church by the Rev. A. N. Rowland, M.A., Thomas Rae Chassels to Margaret Muir Martin.

EDGAR ALEXANDER.—On February 18, 1924, at Union Church, Hongkong, by the Rev. J. McConachie, James Edgar, D.V.S.M., M.R.C.V.S., elder son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Edgar, Whithone, Wigtownshire, Scotland, to Isabel, eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Alexander, Sandown Park, Wavertree, England.

DEATHS

BRINER.—On Sunday morning, February 24, 1924, at No. 77 Scott Road, Shanghai, Robert Paul, dearly beloved youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. U. Briner, aged 14 months.

FARROW.—On January 3, 1924, at Bournemouth, England, Elizabeth Farrow, aged 82 years, late of Shanghai.

HYKES.—On February 27, 1924, at Chengchow, Honan, Mrs. Rebe S. Hykes, widow of the Rev. J. R. Hykes, D.D. Deeply regretted.

MANDEL.—On February 26, 1924, at the General Hospital, Shanghai, Harry Mandel, aged 49. Born Cleveland, Ohio.

PALMER.—On February 23, 1924, at the General Hospital, Shanghai, Alfred Palmer (Master Mariner, Jensien Transport Co.), aged 63 years.

RICHARDS.—On February 26, 1924, at 112 Chapoo Road, Shanghai, Elizabeth, the beloved wife of J. A. Richards (Yangtsze Pilot), aged 40 years.

SCOTT.—On February 24, 1924, at No. 123 Rue Massenet, Shanghai, Janet Katherine Scott, of acute appendicitis, aged seven years, eight months and 19 days, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Scott.

SMITH.—On January 9, 1924, at Goodmayes, Essex, England, William Smith, Retired Master Mariner, and late of Shanghai, aged 78.

IN MEMORIAM

BELYEA.—In loving memory of Alex. U. Belyea, who departed from this life on February 26, 1923.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

CHARITY AND WORK

Mar. 3.

A WRITER in a recent issue of the "Contemporary Review" has a searching article on the "Financing of Charities" in England. He estimates the amount of capital invested for charitable purposes—apart from the value of house property, offices, alms houses, orphan homes, etc.—at nearly £100,000,000. The annual income of charities from voluntary sources he reckons at £13,000,000. Both sums tend to increase from year to year. These charitable funds belong to societies which issue annual reports and so can be tabulated. They do not include what may be called casual charity, individual gifts of which no record is kept nor the amounts collected by the begging fraternity on the streets or by house to house solicitation. These contributions, though separately small, must, in the aggregate, amount to a vast sum.

Sir James Denham, who was a friend of King Edward VII, tells in his reminiscenses of a crossing sweeper to whom he was in the habit of giving a contribution from time to time during a long course of years. Naturally enough, a friendly word was spoken now and then by the wealthy man to the humble sweeper and one day the latter "took the liberty" of informing Sir James that he was giving up his pitch. "Business was not what it used to be" and he finally asked whether his wealthy patron would honour him by taking dinner with him to mark the end of their acquaintance. Sir James good-humouredly agreed to do so and was rather struck by the fact that the address given was in a wealthy neighbourhood. He found himself knocking at the door of a mansion, was admitted by a footman and entertained to one of the best dinners he had ever eaten. The crossing sweeper was evidently as wealthy as his honoured guest. Now, it is not at all likely that many beggars have the good fortune of the one who entertained the friend of a king. Nor is it at all certain that the whole of the crossing sweeper's wealth was amassed by his labours with the broom. But, making allowance for all these considerations, there is yet enough in the story to lead us to believe that a good beggar is master of one of the best paying professions in existence. He has spells of good and seasons of bad luck but he has no business losses, is never out of work, and must be constitutionally ill-adapted to that station in life to which he was called, if he does not make, at least, a comfortable living at the trade. "And now abideth these three, Faith, Hope and Charity, and the greatest of these is Charity."

But charity is fallen on evil days. She is no longer the chief of the three Graces. A "charity child" or "charity school" are words of sinister significance and processions of unemployed, we believe, usually carried banners with some such motto as "D— your charity; give us justice." And justice as the working man now construes it means that he is entitled to a day's wage whether he works for it or not. At the first blush the claim seems preposterous enough, but do not let us rashly conclude that it is utterly unreasonable. Here stands Tom Jones with strong, willing hands. Through no fault of his own they are idle hands and he asks nothing better of the world than that these idle hands should be filled with work. The day is past when the world might say, "It is no concern of mine. I am not my brother's keeper. If you cannot find work then, go starve." Tom Jones would probably reply, "But a little while ago you had a war. I did not think it was my concern, but you assured me that this was my country and it was up to me to fight for it and die for it—" And so on. And there is a Labour Ministry in England that thinks very much as Tom Jones thinks. The present Government does not propose to let Tom starve nor even to compel him to take too many reefs in his waist belt. His head is to be kept well above water. The wife and family too must be looked after. They may not have roast beef for Sunday dinner, but neither will they have to clem through the hungry days. You may say "lucky Tom" to have escaped being born in the good old days when all these unpleasant things happened to the unfortunate out-o'-work. Yes, but there is a corollary to all this and the corollary is that the government that feeds the unemployed man and his family has also the right to say to that man, "See, here is a pick and a shovel. Go to, earn your living." Free feeding for hungry mouths? Yes, but also compulsory labour for idle hands. Shall we live to see the day when there will be no more wealthy crossing sweepers? No more whining mendicants but work for all and food for all? We do not know but it is worth our while to "wait and see."

RIVER CONSERVANCY IN KUANGTUNG

Mar. 4.

EVEN those who have no first-hand knowledge of Kuangtung and its unequalled network of rivers and waterways may take an interest in the annual reports of the Board of Conservancy Works, of which Major Olivecrona is engineer-in-chief. In reading these reports it is difficult to know whether the more to admire the engineers' pertinacity "carrying on" under the most discouraging conditions; or to condemn the folly of the Chinese authorities, whose political animosities squander money which could be turned to such infinite advantage for the people of Kuangtung. In the latest report, from July 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923, Major Olivecrona strikes an alarming note. During the year the Board received $416,901 from the Commissioner of Customs and only $4,402 from the local Government. (In passing, these figures supply a further reason, if one were needed, for not allowing the Kuangtung authorities to commandeer the Customs revenue.) After paying for the year's work there remained a little over $58,000 which will be spent on the East and North River Works and to support the Board up to the end of the year:

No new undertakings can be begun. If no fresh grant is forthcoming or a monthly support guaranteed for the near future, sufficient to cover the running expenses for upkeep, it will be necessary to dismiss the staff and suspend the functioning of the Board at the termination of this year. Such a measure would mean the breaking up of the continuity of the Board's work and the scattering of valuable records and plans collected during eight years of painstaking effort. It would also include the deterioration of the various flood protective works erected which in order to remain effective need constant supervision and maintenance.

Demise for river conservancy in Kuangtung would indeed be tragic. Not having heard that the Board has actually ceased functioning, we hope that the Customs have again come to the rescue. From other quarters there is little hope.

Of the year's work detailed in the report, perhaps the most visible benefit is that derived from the construction of the Masai floodgate, completion of the Tung On dyke and repair of certain other dykes—all in the East River region. The report says:

Though the entire scheme for flood protection in the East river is far from completion, much land has already been recovered for cultivation, which was formerly lying idle for lack of adequate protection against floods. The country to the northeast of the Masai floodgate now appears like a vast garden of green, so different from the sight of barren sand fields with scanty grass covering before the dyke was built.

Incidentally, the effect of political upheaval is shown here in a further direction, the average cost of earth-work and cognate charges having risen from 19.28 cents per cubic metre in 1920-21 to 23.49 cents in 1922-23. The Lupao control sluice, on the North River (about fourteen miles above Samshui), is another work of great promise. The North River, pouring through the Lupao and other creeks, is mainly to blame for the periodical floods in the Canton River. (In 1915 Shameen and the whole of Canton city were under water for six days.) The Lupao control sluice is designed to keep the overflow from the North River and save the creek from carrying more water than it should. Meanwhile the Board has schemes for the raising and strengthening of dykes on the North River. But this would cost $11,000,000 and where is that to be found?

We find mention in the report of another project on the East River, which, at a cost of $1,500,000, would protect against inundation 600 square kilometres of land. Also an elaborate and much-needed plan for the improvement of the Front Reach of Canton River, estimated cost $9,670,000. But there are no funds. Perhaps the most striking part of the report is the foreword by Mr. K. T. Tong, director general of the Board. He pays a glowing eulogy to the "persistence and loyalty" of the engineering staff. But Owing to lack of funds I have not been able to follow my inclination to commence new work, but have had to confine my efforts to the completion of work begun by my predecessors. A number of petitions for help to reconstruct broken dykes have lately been filed. It gives me great pain to have to reply in the negative. But the Board's funds are now nearly all exhausted.

And more in a like strain. One gathers that Mr. Tong is not a politician and, against the day when politicians cease to rule the roost deduces comfort from the thought.

THE ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE

Mar. 5.

THE correspondence between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Poincaré is most welcome, both in itself and for the fullness of publicity accorded it. When in private life two friends are divided by mutual grievances, if they truly wish their friendship to continue, the first thing they must do is to say frankly what they have against each other. There is no reason why the same rule should not apply to nations, but it rarely does so. In the case of Great Britain and France there has been a great deal of journalistic pin-pricking on both sides of the Channel, but no effective attempt by Ministers to state the grounds of complaint clearly. Last September Mr. Stanley Baldwin and M. Poincairé met in Paris and after a long conversation issued a communiqué to the effect that there was no essential difference of opinion between the two Governments. But possibilities of good result were stultified by Lord Curzon's speech, not long afterwards, at the Imperial Conference, which undoubtedly gave great offence in France, especially to M. Poincaré. In this connexion, it may be said that the proverb about one man being allowed to steal a horse while another may not look over a wall is especially true in France, where individual charms count for much indeed. Lord Curzon and Mr. Lloyd George are detested in France; towards Mr. MacDonald she seems well disposed. And certainly the warm welcome accorded to his letter by the Press of Paris shows that he has managed to say what he wanted to say, on the most delicate subject imaginable, without giving offence.

It would be hard luck indeed if he had done so. He admits, we read, "that the German menace to France is real and the French have some real justification for seeking more tangible safeguards instead of the lapsed Anglo-American joint guarantee. The French are also disappointed with regard to reparations." And with these few words the British Prime Minister epitomizes the whole of the French case. There is no doubt that France was bitterly aggrieved by the failure of the guarantee, which indeed is an episode that neither British nor Americans can think of with much pleasure; and it has seemed to her that every effort has been made by her Allies—not only the British—to get Germany off the payment of reparations, which, in the French view, not only deprives France of her just expectations, but hastens the day when Germany will be able to make another assault upon her. On the other hand, it cannot be ignored that the measures which France has been taking to protect herself and make Germany pay were calculated to excite the suspicion in Britain, where trade is bad and unemployment agonizing, which Mr. Ramsay MacDonald recounts. And while that suspicion, like its counterpart in France, may be erroneous, it colours public opinion to an extent which no Minister of State can leave out of his reckoning. Not least is British feeling ruffled by the French Government's attitude in respect of the war debts due from France to Britain, on which the British taxpayer is actually paying the interest due. There was never any suggestion when these debts were contracted that repayment was conditional on Germany paying her reparations, and the assumption of this condition by the French Government does not make a good impression in Britain, especially when there appears to be plenty of money in France to lend to the Little Entente. M. Poincaré's reply on this particular question does not, it must be confessed, read very convincingly.

The French Prime Minister's letter, as a whole, is as cordial as it would naturally be expected to be, but we cannot honestly think that it shows any departure, or intention of such, from the policy he has repeatedly enunciated. His allusions to the League of Nations, in particular, do not in the least justify the enthusiasm with which its friends have received them: they are no doubt perfectly sincere, but under the present conditions in Europe absolutely academic. The League is no arbiter of Europe while Germany and Russia remain out of it and until the former shows more sincerity in fulfulling her share of the Peace Treaty and the latter gives satisfaction to her claimants abroad, thereby really signifying her desire to re-enter the comity of nations, outside the League they will remain. The fundamental difficulty between Great Britain and France is that Germany should be made to pay. In this respect we do not suppose that the vast majority of the British people feel differently from the French. It is no question of nurturing the angry feelings of war time, of keeping alive old grudges, but simply that Germany agreed, in return for peace, to pay for the damage she did; and that, so far from appearing to make an honest attempt to do so, she seems to have been trying only by every means in her power to prove that she cannot. There is very much in the behaviour of the German Government since the war to support the French contention that there is no difference between it now and what it was in Hohenzollern days.

APATHY OF THE ELECTORATE

Mar. 6.

SOME eight hundred odd out of a total of over two thousand electors participated in this week's Municipal Election. This is not what one would call a representative proportion, and when an analysis of the election is made the facts are worse than ever. On the first day of the poll no more than two hundred and fifty people registered their votes, and only the final hours brought forth the real voting power of the community. Considering how we stand in relation to native China, these figures are not by any means lomatically in Peking have not yet recognized the Soviet, the last question would be interesting.

Chinese official circles state that China has not yet decided on her course towards Russia while Chinese papers assert that recognition by China is imminent and that negotiations will follow as in the case of some other Powers. It is unofficially pointed out, however, that China's position vis-à-vis of Russia differs from most others, inasmuch as China has no pressing claims for settlement, whereas the case is reversed with Russia, who has much to gain by a generous settlement.—Reuter's Pacific Service

THE CHINESE EASTERN RAILWAY.

Harbin, Mar. 5.

Dr. C. C. Wang, President of the Chinese-Eastern Railway, has returned from Peking. The situation is now quieter. Mr. J. Raindre, Director of the Russo-Asiatic Bank, has left for Peking. No settlement of the land question has yet been arranged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Mar. 6.

Contrary to expectation, the Cabinet this morning did not discuss Sino-Russian affairs. The position seems to be that Dr. C. T. Wang has not yet discussed his report with the President, as he will do before the report is sent to the Cabinet.

SOVIET MISSION'S ATTITUDE.

It is semi-officially asserted that the main point at issue remains the question whether recognition will be accorded to be followed by official discussions of the various questions to be settled between the two countries, or whether unofficial negotiations are to reach an agreement in principle on certain important points.

It is understood that the Soviet representative firmly maintains his original demand for recognition as a preliminary measure. It was hinted to-day that no immediate result is likely owing to the uncompromising attitude of the Russian Mission.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

According to a telegram received by the "Sinwanpao" from Peking, China will recognize Soviet Russia on three conditions. These are:—

1. Russia to recognize Chinese rights over the Chinese-Eastern Railway, the railway to be used for commercial purposes only. China to redeem the railway from the Russian capitalists, and before this is done a committee of five Chinese and five Russians to be appointed to go into the matter.

2. Russia to recognize Mongolia as part of Chinese territory; and China will put a stop to the activities of the "Whites" in Mongolia; after China has made the necessary preparations for defence, Russia to withdraw from Mongolia.

3. (a) China to assume jurisdiction over Russians in China.

(b) The abolition of all Russian concessions in China.

(c) The cancellation of all Chinese-Russian agreements.

(d) Neither Russia nor China to propagate their doctrines in each other's territories.

(e) Russia to return the Boxer indemnity.

(f) A new Customs tariff to be arranged.

(g) China to restore the property and estates of Russians.

THE TRADEMARK LAW

Diplomatic Body's Protest Still Unanswered and Repeated

Peking, Feb. 29.

The Doyen of the Diplomatic Body has lodged a protest with the Waichiaopu on the ground that the Chinese Government is intending to enforce the Chinese Trademark Act without giving its consideration to the conditions the Diplomatic Body have set forth in their recognition of the proposed Act, and has at the same time requested the Chinese Government to agree to the conditions on the part of the Diplomatic Body.

MR. PALMER'S REPORT ON THE YANGTZE

Possibilities of Conservancy to Improve Channels for Steamers to Hankow: An Enterprise Not Worth the Cost: Question of Flood Prevention

In the autumn of 1921, it will be remembered, an international commission of engineers met in Shanghai to consider the future necessities of the Port. Growing out of this undertaking arose the larger idea of conservancy of the Yangtze and in December of that year Mr. F. Palmer, the British member of the Port of Shanghai Commission, with Mr. Von Heidenstam and Mr. Yang Pao-ling, submitted to Peking certain recommendations. On the strength of these the Chinese Government set up a representative body, presided over by Mr. Kao Ling-wei, to take charge of all questions concerning the improvement of the Yangtze, which, in turn, appointed a technical committee. A Survey Department was organized under the charge of Mr. G. G. Stroebe, an engineer of considerable experience in the P. W. D. of the Philippine Government, to carry out a system of accurate levels between Hankow and Woosung, to make hydrological measurements at suitable controlling points on the river; and to prepare topographical surveys of such places as may, from time, be required.

Finally in September and October last Mr. Palmer returned to the Far East and made an inspection of the Yangtze as far as Wanhsien. His report on this inspection is now available for publication and we give below a summary of its main conclusions.

CHINESE SURVEYORS' GOOD WORK.

The report opens with a warm tribute to "the vast amount of valuable work which has been performed by the Department in such a short space of time—the more praiseworthy because, at its inception, the operations of the Department included the training of men unused to scientific work of this particular nature. The Chinese officers entrusted with the work have shown such zeal and enthusiasm in carrying out their duties, at all times and under all conditions of weather, that they have now reached a degree of competence, which has probably never before been reached in this country, and approaching the best standards of any other place in the world." Helpful and wholehearted cooperation was also received from other bodies specializing in similar work.

Mr. Palmer then proceeds to give a brief description of the course of the Yangtze, taking it under three sections, i.e. Ichang to Chungking, Ichang to Hankow, Hankow to Woosung. Of the first no great improvement can be considered even possible, apart from additional marking of channels already contemplated. As regards the Ichang-Hankow stretch Mr. Palmer remarks that "the survey staff engaged has been, and still is, much too small to afford the fullest information in regard to channels." But the value of the trade above Hankow and the manner in which it is actually handled exclude the necessity of any expensive scheme of improvement.

FROM HANKOW TO WOOSUNG.

Remains the reach from Hankow to Woosung and the possibilities of so improving it as to facilitate access to Hankow by vessels of deep draft all the year round. Mr. Palmer begins by giving a minute description of this important waterway, enumerating the points where difficulties occur and paying a tribute to the work of Mr. Carrel and the river inspectors under him in keeping navigators informed as to depths and directions. And he then discusses the three questions: (1) What improvement is possible: (2) What would it cost; (3) Would it pay?

WHEN DOES OBSTRUCTION OCCUR?

He has no difficulty in concluding that to make Hankow accessible all the year round to ocean-going steamers with drafts of 20 to 25 ft. is out of the question. Turning then to river steamers, Mr. Palmer says:—"The diagrams of Restricted Navigation Depths will show that in the years 1917-18, 1918-19, 1919-22 and 1922-23, it was not possible to take to Hankow vessels:—

"(1) Drawing 10 ft. during periods varying from 0 to 54 days, with an average of 23 days.

"(2) Drawing 12 ft. during periods varying from 0 to 91 days, with an average of 54 days, and

"In 1920-21 there was no difficulty for the 10 ft. draft steamers, but for those drawing 12 ft. there were 16 restricted days and for those drawing 15 ft. there were 76 restricted days. In 1918-19, all these drafts were unrestricted."

Improvement being considered desirable, though not perhaps necessary, would the cost of the necessary training works pay?

AVAILABLE FUNDS AND COST.

In 1922 the total value of trade of all Yangtze ports above Shanghai was Hk. Tls. 482,402,000. Revenue derived by the Customs, including payments at Shanghai for up river goods, was about Hk. Tls. 10,900,000: assuming a surtax of five per cent., river traffic would have produced a revenue of Hk. Tls. 545,000. This would allow a capital expenditure of Hk. Tls. 5,450,000.

In the very short time that the Yangtze River Commission has existed, it has obviously been impossible to obtain information enough to get an exact idea of costs. But speaking very generally, Mr. Palmer finds reason to believe "that the sum required to remove one of the obstructions to 15 ft draft navigation, could not be less than three and a half million Hk. Tls. There are today at least eight places between Wuhu and Hankow where such obstructions occur. On the whole it may be assumed that a capital expenditure of probably twenty-five millions Hk. Tls. would have to be faced, to obtain freedom from restrictions to vessels drawing 15 feet."

ATTERNATIVE OF DREDNING.

Training works being obviously out of court, Mr. Palmer considers the possibility of dredging, on which, after enumerating certain necessary factors he concludes:—

"The capital cost might amount to about Hk. Tls. 2,500,000 and the running costs to about Hk. Tls. 350,000 per annum. Fixed charges with interest at 6 per cent., amortization at 4 per cent., would amount to 10 per cent. so that the total annual cost might be in the neighbourhood of Hk. Tls. 600,000. Even this figure is in excess of the possible Revenue from the surtax of 5 per cent. already alluded to, on the 1922 basis trade, and to produce a balanced budget, including say 10 per cent. on the running costs for overhead charges, it would be necessary to increase the surtax to at least 7 per cent. on the Maritime Customs collections derived from the trade of all Yangtze Ports above Shanghai."

TRADE BENEFIT TLS. 168,000.

To what extent, now, would trade actually be benefited? This question involves consideration of the number of months each year when the larger river steamers now coming into use have to lighter in order to reach Hankow. Mr. Palmer says:

"Generally speaking, shipowners reckon upon an average of three months of, more or less, restricted depth, and during this period, charges are increased to cover cost of lightering part of the cargoes, and the higher cost of carrying the other part, which comes about because of the vessels being only partly laden. It is the reduction of winter charges to the level of summer charges, which constitutes the benefits which would accrue to the trade, as the result of the removal of all restrictions for, say, 15 ft draft vessels between Wuhu and Hankow."

Going further into the matter with the shipping companies Mr. Palmer found that "of the quantities of imports and exports between Shanghai and Kiukiang-Hankow, carried during the months of November, December and January, over the past six years, the average total per month amounted to about 250,000 tons. Of this quantity, only a portion had to be lightered, and the balance was carried, at somewhat higher cost, of course, in the lightered steamers. The total amount realized by the increase of charges in the winter months, was said to be Hk. Tls. 168,000 per annum, and this figure agreed remarkably closely with estimates which had been separately prepared by the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce and also by the Technical Committee.

"This, then, is the value of the benefits to be obtained by removing restrictions to 15 ft draft vessels, and it follows that if the annual cost of the dredging works amounts to a sum exceeding this figure (Hk. Tls. 168,000), it is not economically possible to carry them out. It has been shown that the annual cost may reach Hk Tls. 600,000 per annum, and, therefore, there can be no commercial justification for providing a minimum depth suitable for 15 ft steamers, throughout the period of restriction."

In a word the game is not worth the candle.

FLOOD PREVENTION.

The report concludes with some extremely interesting remarks on flood prevention. In this respect the Yangtze "is remarkably free from such disastrous floods as those which have frequently occurred in the Yellow River." None the less floods occur and Mr. Palmer touches lightly upon the question of adequate dykes to prevent them. "There appears to be only one method (he says) of obtaining a revenue sufficient to meet the interest and maintenance charges on a work of such magnitude, and that is by the imposition of a small tax upon the protected area. It would amount to only a trifling charge on each mow saved from flooding, but whether such a tax can be imposed and collected, is a matter on which the Government is best able to form an opinion."

Inquiry into the extent of damage by floods would have to take into account the value derived from deposited silt. The whole question opens up a vast field of survey. And the report concludes with these winged words.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS' INTEREST.

"How such a proposal (i.e. the requisite survey) could be developed without interfering with Provincial Control, is a matter on which the writer is not competent to offer even a suggestion, but it is selfevident that nothing could be done, no scheme prepared, without the whole-hearted cooperation of the provinces traversed, by the Yangtze. The composition of the commission includes representatives of all the provinces through which the river flows. The Governors of Hupeh, Anhui and Kiangsu, who were good enough to receive the Technical Committee during the recent inspection, were extremely cordial and in sympathy with the possible improvement of the River. The improvement which naturally would appeal most to those responsible for the lives and welfare of the people, would be, not so much the preparation of better navigable channels, but rather the alleviation of these losses of life and property which occur with such frequency, if not indeed year by year—losses which must be a matter of almost continual consideration by the local authorities; and it is felt that no encroachment upon provincial rights would be involved in seeking at least that co-operation which would allow of proposals being formulated. Nothing done in the way of survey work would affect those rights, and, therefore, the time may be ripe to endeavour to obtain the data required for a comprehensive view of the whole situation."

Peking, Feb. 29.—The Chinese Chamber of Commerce at Vladivostok has telegraphed to the Government requesting that Mr. Shou Heng-chun, newly appointed Consul-General at that port, should leave for Vladivostok as soon as possible.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PRESIDENT TSAO'S HEALTH

Absurd Rumour of His Death Denied: Spread by Shanghai Propagandists?

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Mar. 6.

Sensational reports that President Tsao Kun has died are wholly untrue, but it has been verified that he is suffering from a lingering illness. The stories of his demise are denied by Palace guests.

The whole propaganda has most likely emanated from Chinese Banks, which are speculating in bonds. Shanghai bond quotations to-day are remarkably contrary to local indications, which suggest jugglery by Shanghai banks.

CHINESE NAVY DISPUTE SETTLEMENT

Peking, Mar. 3.

A solution of the naval dispute seems to have been reached by the arrangement under which Admiral Wen Shou-teh's squadron at Chefoo will be placed under the direction, but not under the control, of Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei and that correspondence from the former will pass through Admiral Tu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TSAO JUI'S POST IN CHIHLI

Peking, Feb. 27.

Mr. Tsao Jui was informed of his appointment as Tupan of Government Mining Enterprises in Chihli yesterday, and informed that he will not be required to go to Mukden on the peace mission. Mr. Yun Chang will take Mr. Tsao's place in the mission.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE SPOILS OF FUKIEN

Peking, Feb. 28.

General Sun Chuan-fang left Foochow with his staff for Yenping on the 27th instant. He will establish his headquarters at Yenping. General Sun seems to have found himself undermined at Foochow by General Wang Yung-chuan, who has pushed out of all the important offices the followers of General Sun and replaced them with his own men. It is not expected that General Sun will remain quietly at Yenping, which is situated a little north of the centre of Fukien Province. General Wang Yung-chuan was stationed at Yenping-fu before he went to Foochow at the invitation of the Central Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BRITAIN AND THE BOXER INDEMNITY

Londor, Mar. 5.

In the House of Commons today, asked whether steps had been taken with regard to remission of the Boxer Indemnity and whether, with a view to the promotion of more friendly relations with China, arrangements for utilization of the Indemnity payments could be expedited, Mr. Arthur Ponsonby, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that legislation would be necessary to give effect to the policy of the Government. A bill had been drafted and would be introduced shortly.—Reuter.

A police constable on duty at the S.N.R. station on Monday, chancing to take special interest in some parcels being carted in, found that they contained a useful quantity of opium. This the officer appropriated, as well as the man in charge of it, whence arose turmoil in which the policeman lost a few buttons from his tunic and a piece of finger, bitten off by an assailant. The Chinese press reports that the smuggler and his opium were rescued from official grasp by "a Railway Constable and 20 porters," but this must be doubted. It cannot be that the S.N.R. is taking on contraband as a "side line."

of phrase in which some earnest writers would seem almost to revel; but this has never been done except with the utmost care not to alter or weaken the writer's purpose. In the main, we frankly think that a wise secrecy is a far better course to adopt than the modern shouting from the house-tops, which puts ideas into the heads of young people that they would otherwise never entertain, frequently with results the very last the reformers ever imagined.

POSTAL MATTERS

Mar. 8.

The Administration of the local Post Office has circularized box-holders with a request that "to enable this office to check the work of the staff sorting box-holders' mails and thereby to increase the efficiency of the service . . . a record be kept, say for one week, of all mistakes in sorting, and that the completed record be sent to the Postal Commissioner with such general comments or suggestions as past experience may prompt." This further evidence of the desire of our postal officials to increase the efficiency of the service under their direction is highly commendable, and there is little doubt that the subscribers to the boxes, or the majority of them, will co-operate to the end desired. A matter that is much more important than the sorting of the mail matter when it reaches Shanghai, however, is the question of getting it here at all. For many months the arrivals of mails, from both Europe and Hongkong, have been annoyingly irregular and have caused no little inconvenience. We will take the last week or so, in regard to the Hongkong mails to Shanghai, as an example. We will deal with newspapers, which always are posted promptly at Hongkong, and usually arrive here from three to five days and occasionally two, after publication. On the morning of March 1, there was a local delivery (at the boxes) of the Hongkong morning papers of February 26 and 27 So far as we can trace, the next delivery of Hongkong papers was on the late afternoon of March 6, when those of March 1 were received. At just before noon yesterday those of February 28 and 29 were available. Obviously there is something wrong in regard to this. There was no delivery between March 1 and March 6 and yet on every day in that period boats arrived at Shanghai from Hongkong. There was the Nanchang on the 2nd, the London Maru on the 3rd, the City of Cairo on the 4th, and the Tingsang, the Bengloe and the Derfflinger on the 5th, to mention some; and it appears strange that with all these, and other boats, coming from Hongkong, no steps should have been taken to send mails on some of them, and so avoid a hiatus of practically five days. This, of course, is a matter more affecting the postal authorities at Hongkong than our own local officials; but it seems that if strong representations were made from this end the Hongkong postal people might conceivably do something in regard to the Shanghai mail. As to the mails from Europe, we can at least congratulate ourselves that matters cannot get much worse; no mails now ever appears to be "expected": people apparently just accept them with thankfulness whenever ultimately they arrive.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Keeping a War Going

When the crisis of 1914 let loose on the public a whole host of war critics, economists and specialists in other directions, it was freely stated that no modern war could last for more than three months as by that time the nations would be bankrupt. Lord Kitchener was the first man to dispute this, but when he mentioned that he was preparing for a three-years' war few believed him. The war lasted for over four years, and it was man power and not finance which brought it to an end. To-day we read of the devices which Dr. Sun Yat-sen has to adopt in Canton to keep his armies in the field, and it may be questioned how they will compare with the acts of the great Powers in raising loans. Dr. Sun has introduced something in the nature of a property levy and has increased taxation enormously in order to pay his mercenaries, but in the way of actual loans from outside sources he has had little. The support of over-seas Chinese on which he has relied much hitherto can hardly be sufficient for the financing of a prolonged war, and so his extraneous sources of help must be greatly limited. The question then comes to be, how long can he carry on his war under his present system of taxation? Were it not for the example of the European Powers people would be inclined to suggest that his campaign must collapse at any moment, but although, as we have seen, there is a vast difference in ways of raising money, we must not be too certain. The national bankruptcy notion is an exploded one, and Dr. Sun may prove that the theory of a limit to taxation possibilities is equally fallacious.

Ludendorff's New Role

The spectacle of General von Ludendorff practising the arts of oratory before the tribunal of Munich will prove strange to many who have studied the man through his work at the head of the German armies and by a perusal of his books. A bold and skilful soldier, he impressed one as a man having a very full sense of the terrific responsibilities he had to shoulder during the war, and in his writings he discussed his work in that connexion on the whole dispassionately, though naturally his non-German readers will often be at variance with him both as to the correctness of his facts and conclusions. One thing, however, they could hardly accuse him of, any theatrical pose, although perhaps his later writings may have had a more spectacular tendency. Now, however, he stands up in the Munich court and talks not so much as one addressing a judicial tribunal as an audience, a mob even. In impassioned language he tells of the wrongs done to Bavaria and of the treachery of others in respect of himself, and therein we see a new Ludendorff. All the bitterness of his soul upon this second defeat emerges in his address, and brother soldiers and politicians alike come in for his reprobation. If the view of many Germans is correct, this may be the last phase of Ludendorff, and hence his bitterness. He has still the most ambitious conceptions of what the German Reich may be, but after the toil and turmoil of years added to age, it is doubted whether he is the man to carry them out. The belief is held in many quarters that the work is of a nature to be undertaken only by a younger man, and Germans believe that they know who this man is. Hence the side-stepping of Ludendorff, and his change of poise, coming as a realization of it, in an effort to rally the forces of his nationals to his own banner.

Trademarks and Food

At a time when the agitation over the Chinese Trademark Law is at its height, it has been extraordinarily useful to have had a case in the Mixed Court bearing on the subject in a specially important manner, this because it involved a question of human food. A Chinese grocer has just been fined $50 for an infringement of the trademarks of certain brands of condensed milk, and it transpired in the course of the hearing that one of the parties connected with the sale of the milk knew that the article in question was not good. Yet it subsequently appeared for sale under the label of well-known brands of tinned milk, and no doubt deceived a number of people. We need not expatiate on the danger to health resulting from the use of inferior tinned foodstuffs, but realizing how easy it is in this country to palm off a colourable imitation for the genuine article, a case like this should cause the whole of the foreign communities and not alone the merchants to insist upon the strictest safeguards for the trademarks. In the case of Shanghai there is a very considerable business done in the way of auctioning damaged and bankrupt cargo, and the auctioneer, of course, can give no guarantee as to its condition nor can he dictate as to whom he shall sell it. When cheap lots of goods fall into unscrupulous hands, the ease with which an outwardly presentable article can be faked out of a bad one must stand as a constant temptation, which will be increased if there is any laxity in the administration of the trademark law. Keeping this in view it becomes more than ever necessary that the greatest safeguards should be obtained and no effort should be relaxed until cast-iron guarantees have been obtained. These are only possible along some such lines as the Mackay Treaty has laid down.

The Dynamite Depot

The question of the explosives magazine on which we publish a letter to-day from one of our readers and a further account of the precautions taken as regards the magazine would appear to be one of, "taking time by the fetlock." In other words, the arrangements which were perfectly effective a few years ago are not necessarily so as the harbour becomes more congested and buildings and wharves lengthen out towards Woosung. We have no desire to raise a scare, but we think that Mr. Gundry has done well in calling attention to the matter. Sooner or later it is inevitable that a comprehensive scheme of harbour reorganization will be put into effect and it at least appears unlikely that that would permit an explosives magazine to remain where it now is. Then will come the question of obtaining a suitable site, which will certainly be none the easier if left till the last minute. Such a site should also be big enough to spread the explosive among a number of small magazines instead of storing them all in one building.

From Out of Oblivion

The meeting of the Grand Duke Nicholas and General Wrangel, mentioned in to-day's telegrams, carries the mind back in the first place four years and then several years farther. These were names once on the tip of everybody's tongue, but latterly almost forgotten by all but Russians probably. Now they have emerged out of the past and they recall the struggles against Germans and Austrians and subsequently of White Russian against Bolsheviks. Being on the grand scale the work of Nicholas comes readily to mind, but General Wrangel is hardly in the same category. In 1919 General Denikin was operating against the Bolsheviks from a base on the Black Sea, and General Wrangel was his cavalry leader. Towards the end of the year, while Admiral Koltchak still held the field in Siberia, two wonderful enterprises took place—a dash on Moscow by Denikin and another on Petrograd by Yudenitch. Both just failed of success, though they gave the Bolsheviks a tremendous fright, but with their climax came the decisive turn of the tide. Koltchak's force was soon swept to the eastern confines of Siberia and its leader slain, while Yudenitch and Denikin were hurled back on their respective bases, the latter's army being particularly severely handled by the Red forces. A defeated man, Denikin gave up the game, and Wrangel took his place. The position of his army, now a mere remnant, was parlous in the extreme, having a bare strip of coast line in the Crimea which it could call its own. Wrangel, however, succeeded in bringing order out of chaos, and turning on the Bolsheviks was able to force them back and finally to evacuate his force with success. Since then his army has been domiciled in Jugo-Slavia, but now apparently it is again in an unhappy position, or will be shortly if that country recognizes Russia. It will have to move elsewhere, a yet further tragedy for men who put up a good fight.

Finger Prints

The news that the local Chinese police are at least tentatively considering the adoption of the finger-print system of identification is a hopeful sign, although we must not expect too much. In the annals of criminology in the Far East the Shanghai Municipal Police will always rank high as an efficient preventive and detective agency because at an early state they introduced this system and were instrumental in persuading other ports to adopt it, thus starting a network around the criminal classes who live and work among foreign communities. An offer was made a few years ago to the local Chinese police to train them in the system, but Hsu Kuo-liang, then at head of affairs, intimated that he was interesting himself in a different system, and the matter fell into abeyance. It was much to be regretted that such an attitude was taken, for complete success can only be attained by uniformity throughout the whole of the police forces which may have to deal at different times with the same criminals. Now that the local Chinese police have shown themselves interested in the finger-print system, the position has very much greater possibilities and every effort should be made to ensure that they adopt it in its entirety and carry it out with the scrupulous care which is necessary in dealing with it. If the system can be set working in practicable fashion it will mean a great limitation of the area in which the criminal finds himself free to work, and not only will the Treaty Ports and Peking be linked up but a start made with Chinese territory as a whole. It must be remembered, however, that results will not be seen for some time, and until a full and highly qualified staff is working at it, the tangible results will be small.

Yangtze Conservancy

The greatest interest attaches to Mr. Palmer's report on the possibility of improving the Yangtze, of which we publish a lengthy summary to-day. Our only regret is that we have not space to print it in full. The report is a model of its kind, terse, clear, comprehensive, illuminating in every respect and assisted by excellent maps and diagrams. Briefly, Mr. Palmer's conclusion is that to make the Yangtze accessible all the year round even for the deepest river steamers (ocean-going ships are out of the question) is hardly necessary and certainly would not pay. The extra cost to trade involved by low water seasons is calculated at Tls. 168,000. Against this, the cost of dredging alone would run into Tls. 600,000 annually, which is more than such taxation as the river trade could be expected to bear would yield; while the cost of training works would run into many millions. There remains the possibility of flood prevention, on which Mr. Palmer has something important to say about provincial cooperation. It is a welcome feature of the report that it abounds in testimony to the readiness of all the Chinese authorities to assist in every way. It is to be inferred that they are alive to the desirability of doing something and while the particular project of Yangtze conservancy proves impracticable, there are kindred needs towards which this spirit is of very happy augury.

Britannia's Trident

Some Chinese descriptions of things foreign are at times peculiarly apt, if occasionally unflattering. One such was given at the Hongkong Criminal Sessions last week, when before Mr. Justice Gompertz and a jury, the trial took place of four men who were charged with having been concerned in the recent piracy of the str. Ka-ngo. In the course of evidence, a pig-dealer, who was one of the unfortunate passengers on the vessel, stated that more than $4,000 was taken from him. Some of the money was "man-with-a-pole-in-his-hand dollars." On His Lordship inquiring what such dollars were, the Attorney-General, the Hon. Mr. J. H. Kemp, K.C., replied blandly, "He means Britannia, my Lord." A cheerful way of describing the trident, but probably etymologically sound, for it is almost certain that when Neptune first set up in business he had nothing more ambitious than a sharp pointed branch in his possession with which he worked along the creeks of his particular district. Probably it was not until he could increase the capital of his concern that he was able to employ the village blacksmith (related no doubt to Tubal Cain) to embroider his weapon with the now traditional prongs.

Unfortunate Rumours

The rumours which have been recently in circulation regarding the health of President Tsao Kun are in places having an adverse effect on business. Yesterday certain Chinese business circles in Shanghai had the rumour that he was really ill, and as a result one or two merchants refused to do business, fearing political complications should his condition take a more serious turn. Happily this was not generally the case, and on the whole business went on along its wonted lines. Nevertheless attention must be given to such rumours as these, for they show how greatly the unfortunate political condition of China is affecting legitimate trade. The Chinese merchants know only too well how, if Tsao Kun vacated the Presidential throne, there would be such a reshuffling of the political cards as to create a crisis in the country, and the man holding the strong hand would almost immediately be faced with a combination not only of opponents but of erstwhile partners as well. Tsao Kun may not be, in his adversaries' opinion, an ideal President, but the fact that he is in office preserves the status quo, and in these days that is about the best we can hope for. There is every reason to believe that he is recovering from his recent indisposition, and the class of rumour to which we have referred should be allayed as speedily as possible, Chinese in responsible positions especially doing this work.

Kreisler in China

In the "Strand Magazine" Kreisler has been giving his views on the places he has visited, and he includes China among them. The deplorable condition of the country has certainly impressed him, for he tells his readers of the brigandage which is rampant, and if he exaggerates it is pardonable in a stranger. Mentioning the raids he has heard of he explains that he was lucky not to have been among the 200 foreigners who were carried off the day after he left Peking. Doubtless he is here referring to Lincheng, and although he puts the number of foreign captives altogether too high in this case, he is hardly to be blamed. There were the greater part of half a hundred, and the experiences they went through deserve to make the incident as permanent and striking an example of what misrule has reduced China to as if there had been the number he states. The great thing is that he conveys to people an impression of the state of the country, and although no one here will suggest that his visit here was at all in the nature of an adventure, no opportunity should be lost in keeping the governments of the Powers au fait with the situation here. And Kreisler has helped along these lines.

satisfactory: in fact we ought to have been in a position to show that every man and woman possessed of a vote had taken advantage of the occasion to register his or her opinion. Had it been only a one-day poll the results might have been very different, for there was one candidate greatly favoured by a particular section, generally considered the reforming section of the community, and it is fairly certain that his supporters turned out in strength at the earliest possible moment to help his chances at the poll. The fact that they were unsuccessful does not in any way detract from the value of the work they do in a municipal sense for the community, and it should be an indication to the other electors that it is high time that they likewise took an active interest in municipal affairs. After all, it is scandalous that people should content themselves with merely paying rates, and having discharged this duty should not think it worth while going to the poll to vote for the people they would wish to see on the Council. Furthermore it is hardly complimentary to the men who stand for office.

In connexion with this election a note may be made with reference to a system entirely different from that designated by the Land Regulations and distinctly alien from the British idea on which the Shanghai system is apparently based. In Belgium attendance at the polling booth is, we are informed, compulsory, and a fine or imprisonment awaits the elector unable to produce a doctor's certificate or certificate of absence from his electoral area. The elector is not compelled to vote: he may return a blank paper: but the law makes him at least appear to take an interest in the proceedings. This may not be in accordance with Anglo-Saxon ideas but it has obvious advantages. In the case of Shanghai a very great number of people did not vote for no better reason than that they forgot all about the election; and if they did not, they went a good way along a worse path: they assumed that vested interests would carry a preponderance of votes so as to secure a continuance of the present control of affairs, and thus attendance at the poll was slack. There was never a greater mistake, and in view of the first day's figures which we have quoted, it becomes certain that only the last hour voters turned the scale against the unsuccessful candidate. In this event of there having been a smaller poll, Mr. Hughes would quite probably have been elected, and it would have been matter of congratulation on the part of many bodies if he had been. Mr. Hughes was not in any sense nominated by the Ratepayers' Association. But his none the less well known connexion with that body would have been by no means without its utility. It implies no lack of confidence in the Council or of appreciation of its work to say that a certain measure of criticism and even of opposition is a good thing in municipal affairs and Mr. Hughes would have been able to put that point of view as perhaps it is not always realized.

We have quoted the Belgian example in the hope of arousing the thousand odd electors who did not vote to a sense of their duty. We may go further. This year there was no actual election for the French Municipal Council, but the candidates, standing as they did for a programme of economy, asked for the franchises of the residents as a matter of confidence in their policy. Should it not be the same here, and is it not worth while to express confidence in an administration by the casting of a vote? Assuredly it is: and if it is the sentiment of the community that the administration is being carried on along the lines which the public deems best, the only safe way to prevent an alteration is by turning out in force to the polls and voting wholeheartedly. For, it must be remembered, if there is what might be called a reforming section in the community, with candidate to the fore, the members of that section will certainly be at the polling booths in strength, and in Shanghai, probably more than any place else, we have the possibility of seeing a candidate elected by a minority vote. In saying this we would wish to associate ourselves with the Ratepayers Association in an appreciation of the public spirit of Mr. Hughes in offering himself for election. On a slightly smaller poll he would have become a member of the Council, though the majority of the people who took the trouble to vote were against him. Had he been elected, Mr. Hughes would no doubt have made a wholly admirable member of our Council: but the moral to be drawn is that while the present electoral apathy prevails we may find ourselves saddled with members who are not such as that in any sense.

THE DEPOSITION OF THE CALIPH

Mar. 7.

In our day no event has occurred so calculated to disturb religion in the world as the deposition of the Caliph. How far-reaching its consequences will be we cannot foretell, but to say the least the hundreds of millions of followers of the Prophet must to-day be in a state of perturbation if not demoralization. Under the leadership of Mustapha Kemal the Turks have played a bold part since the war, but the assembly at Angora, the new capital of Turkey, has done nothing so bold or rash as this. There is no question as to what the assembly means, for in the most spectacular manner it has deposed the Caliph from his throne in a physical no less than a spiritual sense, and the Caliph has betaken himself to Switzerland. Surely a strange place to find the spiritual head of Islam, and little wonder that one of the leading Indian Mohammedans should describe it as a disaster. From time immemorial Mohammedans have looked on Constantinople with probably even more veneration than followers of the Roman Catholic religion have looked on Rome, and their Caliph has been more sacred than the Pope. Why this should be so will be seen from a glance at the history of Islam, and it will also be seen that the millions to whom we have referred looked up to the reigning sovereign in Constantinople not because he was Sultan of Turkey but that he was the Caliph, the spiritual head of the Moslems, the successor of Mohammed.

In the Arabic the dignitary we know as the Caliph, or occasionally the Caliphah, is Khalifah, meaning "The Successor." Egyptians refer to him as the Khaleefeh. The Sultans of Turkey derive this title of Caliph from the assignment made by the then Abbasid Caliph to Selim I, the second Sultan in succession to Mohammed II, the conqueror of Constantinople. Mohammed, the founder of the Islamic faith, with the object of preserving the integrity of his religious community, had made arrangements by which his authority passed to a successor. His ancestors had long been guardians of the sacred shrine of the Kaaba, from which Mecca derives its sanctity, and of Medina which contains his Mausoleum and which is held in equal veneration. It is believed among all the sects of Islam that these cities can never pass under non-Moslem guardianship without convulsing the Moslem world, and we here get a hint of how revolutionary is the step which Angora has taken. Next in order of veneration come Irak or Mesopotamia where lie buried the holy Imams (priests), and Stamboul (part of Constantinople) sanctified in Moslem eyes by the remains of holy men and champions of the faith who had lived and died there.

Having, as it were, indicated the religious geography of Islam, we must continue upon its history, and at this point it should be mentioned that Islam is divided into two principal sects: the Sunni and the Shiah Mohammedans. There are probably 350,000,000 Mohammedans in the world, but the Shiahs can hardly exceed 30,000,000, and they are mostly in Persia. In connexion with this branch a special note has to be made. The validity of Islam depends on the existence of a representative of the Prophet who is the spiritual head of the Faithful, the latter being designated Imam or Caliph. To-day, however, the Shiahs only have their Caliph spiritually present at the prayers of the Faithful, though originally this was not so. The Shiah Caliphs were descended from Fatima, a daughter of Mohammed, who had married Ali, the Shiah Caliph then reigning. Passing over his immediate descendants we find that the sixth Shiah Caliph, had a special following of his own which when he died broke away from the direct succession and gave adhesion to Ismail, his son, and so the Caliphate of the Shiahs disappeared in a physical sense. The other great sect, the Sunnis, still insist upon the actual physical existence of the Caliph to preside and officiate when possible, and supporters of the Ottoman Caliphate claim that his succession has never been broken. On his deathbed Mohammed had appointed Abu Bekr as his successor, and he in turn nominated Omar who died by the hand of an assassin. Before his death, however, Omar selected an electoral committee who designated Osman, and after him Ali, blood relations of the Prophet.

We need not deal here with the dreams of world conquest which animated the first holders of the Caliphate, and space will only permit a short review of its history. In 756 intense rivalry between two families for the Caliphate existed, the Omayyads and the Abbasids. For a time the Omayyads were in power, but were later overthrown by the Abbasids who thereafter held the position for five hundred years, ruling Islam from Bagdad. For a certain period after 1258 the Caliphate was in abeyance, but in 1261 the Sultan of Egypt was invested with the office. This phase is accounted for by the destruction of Bagdad by a Tartar-Turcoman force, when the Caliph, his son and the principal members of his family perished. As one of the house of Abbas the Sultan of Egypt was invited to take the Caliphate, and his investiture was attended with great pomp and ceremony. The Abbasid Caliphate lasted from 1261 to 1516, when it was transferred to Selim I, Sultan of Turkey, who incorporated Egypt in the Ottoman Empire. It was thus that Constantinople, or we should say Stamboul (the real name of Stamboul is Islambol) became the headquarters of Islam, the name "Islambol" meaning City of Islam. So it has remained until to-day, when we seem to find ourselves on the threshold of a new phase.

It has frequently been argued that the Sultans of Turkey are not the rightful Caliphs, and as this may have an important bearing on the case in the near future the point should receive a certain amount of attention. One of the great Moslem writers of modern times, the Rt. Hon. Syed Ameer Ali, whose name has been mentioned in the telegrams dealing with the matter, writing in the "Contemporary Review" in June, 1915, unhesitatingly stated that the Ottoman Sultans were the rightful Caliphs, but the Moslem schools in India have generally refused to accept this view. This fact will also help to throw some light on the aspects of the case which are bound to be presented in the course of the next few weeks. A further matter of interest is the part which Abdul Hamid, the late Sultan of Turkey and deposed Caliph, has played in bringing about the present state of affairs. In one of the mosques in Constantinople there were sacred books which contained writings stating the qualifications for the Caliphate. Abdul Hamid gave orders for their removal, an act which caused great discontent. One of the Ulema (learned heads of the Moslem religion) is on record as having said: "Does Abdul Hamid consider we are fools, and that we do not know all the extracts by heart? Does he think because they are taken away we shall cease to teach them?" There the matter dropped. Abdul Hamid had also set up a printing press in the Yildiz, his palace at Constantinople, and issued literature of a propagandist character which he circulated in India with the intention of stirring up trouble against Great Britain. Hearing of this the British Ambassador informed the Sultan that this could only be regarded as an unfriendly act and that he must discontinue the practice or take the consequences. The Sultan agreed to stop the work, but immediately afterwards devoted his energies in the same way to Afghanistan. It appeared, however, that the Turkish Caliph had made little impression on the Indian Moslems, and so the British Government did not interfere further with his pastime.

Noting these facts we need not mourn the disappearance of Abdul Hamid, but we must have grave misgivings concerning the disappearance of the Caliphate, which is apparently what the assembly at Angora to-day aims at.

MORAL WELFARE IN SHANGHAI

Mar. 8.

The able, dispassionate and illuminating report by Major Hilton-Johnson in this week's Municipal Gazette must not pass without comment, notwithstanding that distaste for discussing an unsavoury subject in print is increased by the hopelessness of finding any remedy by legislation. Major Hilton-Johnson finds that from a purely police point of view the elimination of brothels has meant less street rowdyism, but the loss of what were once valuable news-centres for the police. The last consideration is, of course, quite unconnected with the moral aspects of the question. In respect of these, it is conclusively shown that the policy forced on the Council by the Moral Welfare League is a failure so far as elimination of loose women and improvement of public morality is concerned; nor, we think, can it at all be contended that suppression of houses has, to use a favourite M. W. L. phrase, driven vice underground or made it less accessible. On the contrary, solicitation has certainly increased; hotels and lodging-houses make a regular income out of a business they once never used; the number of girls in the trade are thought to have increased, because they make more money when working for themselves than for a house-mistress; and their activities have spread all over the Settlement instead of being confined to two or three areas. In respect of public health, the report of the Shanghai Medical Society published in January shows that there is certainly no improvement, if indeed matters are not actually worse.

Most, if not all, of these consequences were anticipated when the Council was committed to the policy of 1920; and the concluding statement in the Acting Secretary's letter, published with Major Hilton-Johnson's report, that the Council cannot carry out the doctors' recommendations, "unless as a result of a further resolution by the ratepayers" reads uncommonly like a hint for the next annual meeting. But can we go back? And if so to what? Before any ratepayer brings forward a resolution, he will have to think carefully what we can and would wish to do. The public feeling is, we think, opposed to a system of licensed and medically supervised houses, such as is practised in some countries; and there appear to be strong arguments for the contention that even in respect of public health this system is ineffective. Yet by no other means that we can see can the girls, once scattered over the town, be trapped and brought back to special areas.

There is a further point on which we would touch. Both doctors and M.W.L. plead for abundant publicity. So far as contagious disease is concerned and if the publication is directed to quarters where it is needed, we agree. But much of the publicity that has been used, the appalling plain-spokenness which is a modern commonplace of books, plays and newspapers, we are convinced does far more harm than good. One of our correspondents kindly accused us the other day of editing letters to suit our own views. We confess to having cut out the grosser nastinesses

NAVIGATION IN THE UPPER YANGTZE

The Salving of the Shutung: New Boats and Low Water: The Cigarette Tax

Ichang, Feb. 22.

Messrs. Butterfield & Swires' Marine Superintendent from Hankow arrived here, and went on to the place where the Shutung was lying disabled. He took up salvage gear with him, and must have put in some very fine work at that out-of-the-way spot, as in about a month's time he had the vessel ready to come down here under her own steam. She arrived here yesterday, and will proceed to Shanghai for her annual overhaul, and also to be thoroughly repaired after her mishap above the Ching Tan.

The navigation of the Upper Yangtze has again been opened, although the water is still very low. The Pakiang left on February 16 for Wanhsien, and has returned after having made a trip in lower water than has ever been attempted before. Much credit is due to Captain Turner and the River Inspector for this trip, especially as they made it without any pilots. The pilots are apparently still receiving threatening letters, and they have become so scared that they refused to take up the Pakiang while the water was still so low. However, they have been given a lesson which shows them that they are not quite so indispensable as they believed.

The new steamer Shuho left for Chungking on February 17 and the Yihsing is preparing to sail, although the water is still below zero.

CIGARETTE DEALERS SCORE A POINT.

The cigarette sellers have apparently won in their fight against the new tax. As a result of the storming of the Tax Office recently by 200 dealers, the man in charge has gone away, and now cigarettes are being sold without the stamps. It is probable that instructions from the Peking Government, following the protest against the tax, have had a good effect.

Gen. Chao Yung-hua, the cashiered commander of the 18th Mixed Brigade, and Commissioner of Defence for Shinan and Ichang, has been able to make his position good with the higher authorities. He has returned here and now holds the office of Provost-Marshal of the Szechuan, Kueichow and Hupeh troops, and has opened his office in the same yamên that he occupied before. It is understood that he has a very small number of troops under him.

Two days ago there was a total eclipse of the moon, which was perfectly visible here. The firing of crackers, beating of gongs, and sounding of "worship bells" was to be heard everywhere until the Heavenly Dog disgorged the moon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE SOVIET AND THE REFUGEES

Reported Snub for League of Nations' Representative

A curious report comes from Harbin concerning the Soviet attitude towards repatriation of Russian refugees. According to a report published on Tuesday by "New Shanghai Life," Dr. Greig, the League of Nations' representative specially appointed to study the problem of the Russian refugee in China and suggest a solution, met with a rebuff upon his arrival at Harbin. He proposed to call upon the Soviet representative, M. Rakitin, but the latter, it is said, refused to receive him. The official Russian view is said to be that the question of the Russian refugee is exclusively a Russian affair and the Soviet does not intend foreigners to deal with it, particularly a representative of the League of Nations—an institution which Russia has not yet recognized.

BRIGANDAGE IN YUNNAN

Peking, Mar. 1.

Brigandage is rife in Yunnan, and reports from the province state that it is impossible to travel between Talifu and Tengyueh without military escort. At Likiang two American missionary ladies barely escaped capture by brigands in December.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MURDERED RAILWAY OFFICIAL

Kiaochou-Tsinan Rly. Engineer's Assailants Arrested: Leader Former Locomotive Engineer

Tsingtao, Feb. 29.

Three bandits and the wife of the leader of the gang which kidnapped Mr. S. S. Keh, district mechanical engineer of the Kiaochou-Tsinanfu Railway, who was taken from his home at Changtien on December 2, and subsequently murdered, have been apprehended by the police at Tsinan. One of the trio is Kao Liang chen, a former engineer of the railway, who played a prominent part in the affair, which came to a tragic ending when the railroad official's body was found within a stone's throw of the railway station in Tsinan on January 29.

Through the efforts of the police, whose movements were directed by Capt. Le Da-shen, it has been discovered that Mr. Keh, whose whereabouts had been a mystery from the time of his capture until the finding of his body with a bullet through the heart, was kept imprisoned and under armed guard in a little room in the rear of a Japanese shop in in Tsinan. This merchant was to receive one-tenth of the ransom as his share. As the ransom was paid the latter profited to the extent of $1,500.

The leader of the bandit gang, the police have learned, was Li Kuei-woo, a resident of Tsinan who had not been suspected previously of playing the part of brigand chief, but passed for a business man.

The police learned of the bandit rendezvous at Li's residence and suddenly broke into the place, capturing the trio, and their chief's wife although the head of the gang managed to escape by a back exit. Four revolvers and rounds were found in their possession.

REVENGE ALLEGED MOTIVE.

The Keh case probably attracted more attention than the kidnapping of any other Chinese for many years. Revenge was one of the motives, as the former locomotive engineer, who allied himself with the bandits, had been discharged by the murdered official because of careless performance of his duties.

The family of the slain engineer have just been voted compensation by the railway, arrangements having been made to pay to Mrs. Keh and the five children the sum of $305 monthly for the next 15 years, at the termination of which time the eldest son will have attained his majority.

JAPANESE DRUG TRAFFICKERS.

The second seizure of contraband landed from a Japanese vessel, within the past ten days, occurred on Wednesday when the police arrested a Japanese merchant leaving the steamship Yuan Tien with 1,000 ounces of opium in his possession. This merchant, who had his place of business here, had been making frequent trips between here and Japan and the police believe him to have smuggled in large quantities of the forbidden narcotic.

The opium was confiscated by the police and the Japanese was turned over to the Japanese consular authorities and has been lodged in the latter's gaol.

A week ago five Japanese women from Tsingtao's underworld were caught red-handed while trying to land 25 revolvers and 20,000 rounds of ammunition from the Kasuga Maru. They are in gaol awaiting deportation to Japan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

An earthquake lasting 20 seconds was felt in Wuhu at 3.20 p.m. on Sunday.

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

Reception in Peking to Mr. Percival Landon, Writer and Traveller

Peking, Feb. 29.

Mr. Percival Landon, well-known writer and traveller, was the guest of honour at the first tiffin held this year under the auspices of the Anglo-American Association. Sir Francis Aglen, Chairman, presided over a large attendance.

Tiffin over, the Chairman read the report of the Secretary and Treasurer for last year, which had not been read at the annual meeting owing to the absence from Peking of Mr. Donald Fraser. The report showed that the membership of the Association numbered 242. The report and the statement of accounts were unanimously approved.

THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE.

Mr. Landon, having been introduced to the gathering by the Chairman, in a few happy remarks, spoke in very charming manner upon the relations between the two Anglo-Saxon races, pointing out that the units of the two nations were apt to mistake the basis of their mutual relations, overlooking the fact that they knew each other too well. They exercised the privileges of brothers to criticize each other severely, but the two races could not afford to get on without each other. It was not a matter of choice. It was a matter of necessity. The future of the two countries lay in a spirit of frankness. No matter how they treated it, their future was bound up together, but it would come more easily if they did not surround it with soft soap.

Referring to the relationship of the United States to the League of Nations, he expressed the belief that the United States could accomplish good work outside the League, and in conclusion declared that there would be no great evil done in the world in future with the consent of the two great nations.

A cordial vote of thanks to the speaker concluded the proceedings.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION

Warm Welcome in Washington: Extensive Tour of American Commercial Centres

Washington, Feb. 8.

The Chinese Industrial Commission, which has been visiting Italy, France, Germany and England, is spending February, continuing its investigations, in the United States. Mr. Chang Chien, head of the mission, and Mr. Chungtao T. Chu, its secretary, were accorded a warm welcome to Washington by officials of the American Department of Commerce and by the heads of the various sections of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on their visit here during the first week in February. The commission, which is composed of eight members, is making an extensive tour of American industrial centres, visiting important manufacturing plants and observing in detail American methods, particularly as to highway construction and the making of automobiles, the making of textile fabrics and textile machinery and the culture of cotton and other agricultural methods.

The members of the commission have visited Boston and New York, where they visited the leading manufacturing plants. Their tour of inspection includes Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, where the Ford manufacturing plant will be visited, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Vancouver, British Columbia, sailing from the latter city for home.

The Commission is semi-governmental, being sponsored by the Chinese Chambers of Commerce. An extensive detailed report will be prepared on the mission's tour of Europe and the United States. This will be made in duplicate to the Chinese Chambers of Commerce and to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce of the Chinese Government.—Reuter's American Service.

OPIUM ERADICATION!

Peking, March 3.

The Government has decided to convoke a central conference for opium suppression with the object of deciding on measures to be taken to eradicate the opium evil, which will be carried out by the Provincial authorities in co-operation with the Central Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

INSECURITY OF LIFE IN FUKIEN

The Compulsory Opium Growing: Robberies a Chance for Official Pickings

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changchow, Fu., Feb. 18.

Robberies with violence take place nearly every day, mostly committed by soldiers. The roads and villages outside the city are very unsafe. Opium is everywhere being cultivated under compulsion of the military officials, but opium growing is not so profitable as it formerly was especially with the heavy tax collected on it so most of the people object to plant it. To meet this unwillingness on the part of the people to grow it the officials are now taxing the people according to the number of their fields, irrespective of whether they have planted it or not.

There is a general feeling that the situation in Changchow is very insecure and that fighting will take place again ere long. The former bandits in this district are now enrolled as soldiers under the command of Huang Ta-ui, and this general is on bad terms with some of his fellow-commanders. It is not improbable that the bandit section of the troops may stir up trouble, and this will give occasion for Chang Chih-ping of Amoy to come to their aid and involve the whole district in further fighting. In such fighting as we have been having, there is no principle at stake, it is simply a question of personal aggrandisement or of division of the spoils.

The Western New Year's holidays were observed by the officials, public offices were decorated, and there was great interchange of ceremonial visits, but the Chinese old style holidays were observed by the people generally and, up to the last hour of the old year, merchants and shopkeepers were busy getting in all outstanding accounts and the New Year was welcomed with fusillades of crackers.

Until the end of the Chinese New Year we had been having a very dry season. All the canals and ponds were dry, and the farmers were industriously digging out the bottoms of the canals and ponds and spreading the sticky substance over their fields to enrich the soil. Then we had thunderstorms (regarded at this time as portents of disturbed political conditions in the country) and continuous heavy rains which have filled up the canals and ponds to their fullest capacity. The dead dogs which here are thrown into the ponds and canals are now less offensive, but the dead cats which are hung upon the trees are no less disgusting.

HYDRANGEA PIRACY

Home Government Awaiting Hongkong Governor's Report

London, Mar. 3.

In the House of Commons, at question time to-day, the Colonial Secretary, Mr. J. H. Thomas, said that he was requesting a detailed report with recommendations from the Governor of Hongkong in regard to the Hydrangea piracy case.—Reuter.

A number of Chinese Bolsheviks in Peking are reported by the Chinese press to have been refused permission by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to erect a statue in the Peking Central Garden in memory of Lenin.

JAPANESE ARRESTED IN VLADIVOSTOK

Officers and Interpreters: Soviet's Plea of Justification

Tokio, Mar. 1.

Despatches from Vladivostok report the arrest of eight Japanese officers and interpreters by the Russian authorities and the searching of the residences of five other Japanese officers. Replying to a protest against the arrest of the officers, the Russian authorities stated that they were free to arrest any foreigner under suspicion.

It is understood that the Government is referring the matter of the arrests to Mr. Yoshizawa, the Japanese Minister in Peking, who will seek an explanation from M. Karakhan, owing to the Russian authorities not recognising Mr. Watanabe, the Japanese Consul at Vladivostok.

CHARGE OF EPIONAGE.

Mar. 2.

A "Jiji" special edition details the Russian reasons for the arrest of Japanese at Vladivostok. The Russians assert that the Japanese attempted to investigate the organic system of the Red Guard and the Red Fleet and of the Soviet administration, thus endangering vital secrets bearing on the welfare of Russia. Subsequent search of Japanese homes, they say, revealed evidence warranting the arrests.

The Foreign Office denies the espionage charge and accuses Russia of continuing petty annoyances in the hope of forcing Japan's recognition of the Soviet.

Mr. Shimada left for Peking this morning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Houses of Officials Searched: Japan's Protest

Peking, March 3.

The Japanese Legation here was officially informed from Vladivostok that on February 26 the residences of three Japanese officials were searched under warrant issued by the Russian authorities. Two of the officials were arrested on the same day and the third, Mr. Gunji, the Vice-Consul, was arrested on the following day. Major Minotsuma, Captain Matsui and 10 Japanese residents were also arrested.

The Japanese Legation on March 1 received the first official report of the arrest of Captain Matsui. Mr. Yoshizawa, the Japanese Minister, then called on M. Karakhan, whom he asked to ascertain the facts and, if as reported, to take immediate steps to secure the release of Captain Matsui.

M. Karakhan replied that he had not received any official report, but promised to ascertain the facts. In the light of the further developments at Vladivostok, Mr. Yoshizawa will interview M. Karakhan to-day.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Mar. 4.

The Japanese Minister, Mr. Yoshizawa, yesterday visited Mr. Karakhan, the Soviet Envoy, and discussed at length the arrests of Japanese at Vladivostok.

Mr. Karakhan expressed the opinion that the arrested men must be tried according to Russian law.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE RUSSIAN POINT OF VIEW.

London, Mar. 5.

According to news from Moscow, the anti-Japanese measures in Vladivostok are due to the non-existence of a Russo-Japanese treaty. The Russian view is that Japanese officials have no right in Vladivostok and that Japanese are only there by courtesy of the Soviet Government.

It is pointed out that the three conferences with a view to resumption of normal relations in the past two years proved abortive owing to alleged Japanese intransigence, and there is also considerable annoyance in Moscow at the obstacles placed in the way of the Soviet mission sent to assist the victims of the earthquake in Japan last September.—Reuter.

Female workers at local silk mills are alarmed at the announcement that several local mills are soon to curtail their output. It is anticipated that some 3,000 workers will be thrown out of employment.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

WU PEI-FU AND CIVIL POWER

Kaifeng's Protests at Removal of Civil Governor to Marshal's Headquarters

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kaifeng, Ho., Feb. 21.

In my last letter I reported the transference of the civil administration from the provincial capital to Loyang. If this move was to retaliate on Kaifeng people for their expressed opposition to the Civil Governor's interference in other than military affairs, Marshal Wu has worked an effective piece of revenge. For we are all very humble in Kaifeng these days, and if we had to do it all over again we would not only send telegrams of congratulation, but would refrain from speaking hastily of anyone. Several delegations have gone to Loyang to beseech the civil officers to return here, but thus far there have been little more than civil promises made to all these petitions.

In the meantime Loyang, or Honanfu by which name many people still think of it, is overcrowded. Business places and residences have gone up enormously in value during the past few months, and rents have soared away out of reach of all but the most opulent. Many new business places have opened their doors and trade has received a great impetus owing to the enhanced importance of the place. A great number of guests find their way to Marshal Wu's headquarters. Every man with hope of an office goes there. To promote some public scheme of betterment for the province and its people, it is quite useless to move unless Marshal Wu is first consulted. If a Cabinet Minister is to be selected it is a very first necessity that the views held in Loyang must be appraised, and if a journalist wishes to sense the political situation of the whole country, not Peking but Loyang is the proper environment from which to draw inspiration.

Thus it happens that Loyang until a year ago almost forgotten by the Chinese world at large, is now the very centre of the those varied interests that one usually attaches to court life. Indeed the candid impression of those who have visited Loyang in recent months is that the real power in China is neither in Peking nor Canton, but in the little western town of Honanfu.

THE TREE-PLANTING.

It is reported that Marshal Wu is anxious to boost afforestation in the province. This constant centre of drought, flood and famine is to be dotted with forests, in every magistracy of the province, and the chief county officials are to be held responsible for this good work.

If this reform can be carried through it will undoubtedly have a very great effect on those causes that lead to local disasters. To do away with the farther causes Marshal Wu will have to influence the powers that be along the upper reaches of the Yellow River. If he could but take a journey to the Whitewright Institute in Tsinan and see visualized the change that might come over this whole Yellow River valley by a complete scheme of afforestation, the Marshal might be influenced to exert his powers as far as Szechuan along these lines.

MR. "WILLOW'S" GOOD WORK.

In connexion with the Forestry Department of this province there have been some changes that have led to sad developments. For several years past Mr. Wu Ih-lu, generally known among his intimates as Mr. "Willow," which word results if his Chinese name is spoken rapidly, was in charge of the department. Mr. "Willow" was educated in Europe and returned to Honan a very cultured man. He was equally versatile in the use of English, German and French, and was usually present at any function to which the foreign community was invited. Since his return to his native land and province he was at the head of this Forestry Department. With what success his work was carried on, I cannot say, though a start was made by establishing experimental stations in various places.

Some time ago Marshal Wu proposed a change for Mr. Willow, whom he evidently wished to favour. Rather against Mr. Willow's choice he was appointed to control the department known here as the Shih Yeh Ting. This should be the Department of Industry, though in this province it seems to have the collection of certain taxes attached to its functions.

Mr. Willow himself sought another post, but it is reported that the Marshal, who knew his father, assured him that the other post held out little promise of enriching him, and that this Shih Yeh-ting post presented a much better prospect of arriving at a speedy competency.

AND TRAGIC END.

It might have been so in other hands, but Mr. Willow seems to have been made of too easy stuff to withstand the many parasites that attach themselves to all such offices. He was in the Department but a few months when the New Year drew on, and with it the inexorable demands for the settlement of all outstanding liabilities. These seem to have been too many for poor Mr. Willow, who sought another way out of his difficulties. He went to a young Chinese medical man from whom he got chloral and advice from his medical books how much to take to put him to rest. He faithfully followed the advice he got, and when the medical friend was called in later to use means for offsetting the poison, he refused to permit any measures that would have saved him.

Later when the China Inland Mission doctors were consulted it was too late to save his life. He passed with the old year, and with the New Year he entered a new sphere.

SIDELIGHTS ON WAR IN SZECHUAN

English Lady Doctor's Anxious Days at Tungchuan

The following extract from a letter just received carries on the story that we printed recently of the looting of the Quaker hospital at Tungchuan, between the retreat of the Szechuan troops and advance of the Northerners.

We have been having a pretty stiff time again; the fighting was not so severe this time, but the former wounded from the military hospital came to us for help on Sunday, January 27, and that evening and the following day, the 21st division entered the city, and during the morning looted rather badly. They came to the men's side of the hospital and began first to steal the wounded soldiers' things, and then the hospital things, bedding, blankets, sheets, clothes, etc. They were quite out of hand, but eventually their officers quelled them, but not before staff and hospital had lost quite a lot. The hospital was chaos itself, for all the wounded of the 1st division who could hobble at all, fled to us for protection. For several days it was pretty bad, but we have got some order out of chaos now.—

We have just about 100 of the worst cases in hospital, and others come in daily (whom we said we positively had no room for) to be dressed. We have had well over 300 under our care. Dr. Lo is not back, but probably will be in a few days, and thankful we shall be, for I am nearly at the end of my tether, and the nurses are pretty tired too. At first we did not get finished till after dark each day, but now the bulk of the work gets done in the morning, with a little to finish in the afternoon.

SHANSI'S GOVERNOR AND EDUCATION

What Are Chinese Universities for? Futility of Sending Students Abroad

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taiku, Sha., Feb. 23.

A few days ago a Peking newspaper printed "An Interview With Governor Yen of Shansi Province." The article was headed, "The Root of the Problem." Burrowing through the luxuriant verbiage of the interview one finds that the root of the Pacific Problem has been the failure of Far Eastern countries to develop an educational system leading to self-expression (whatever that means) on the part of the individual student, and their grave mistake in sending their sons and daughters to Western lands to be educated. The whole "interview" is filled with abstruse speculation of a sort that, praises be, Governor Yen has probably never been guilty of in his whole life.

It is well-known that Governor Yen is keenly interested in the promotion of education in Shansi, and it is equally well known that he is not in favour of the use of public funds in the education of students in Western countries. However, as for the first matter he has a very simple, direct and practical programme and is not experimenting with any half-baked educational theories. As to the sending of students abroad, he has had some unfortunate experiences, and it is perhaps not unnatural that his present attitude should be conservative. However, we believe that his reluctance to send Shansi students to Europe or America is rather due to his conviction that the same amount of money invested in education in China will bring greater practical results for the province.

Governor Yen's present position and reputation have been largely achieved through his steadfast determination to keep clear of political broils in Peking and to devote himself assiduously to his one great task, that of governing and developing his native province. Anyone who would attribute to him a wisdom and sagacity, either in political or in educational matters, that he does not actually possess is not only doing the governor no service, but may even be sowing the seeds of future trouble for him. We have our own guess as to the identity of the "interviewer" responsible for the above-mentioned article, and if we are right he is making about as great a success of this class of fiction as he did of his statements as to his nationality during the late European war.

HIGH SPECULATION IN ROUBLES.

In connexion with the forthcoming negotiations between China and the representatives of Soviet Russia in Peking a request has come to Shansi for an estimate of the amount of the losses suffered by Shansi merchants as a result of the Russian Revolution.

Governor Yen has replied that the loss would be in the neighbourhood of $3,000,000.

The greater part of this loss however, is due to speculation in buying roubles. I am acquainted with one family in this district who lost $400,000 in this way. It is difficult to see what basis such people have for their hope that they may be indemnified for a bad guess.

STUDENTS' LONG HOLIDAYS.

The end of the vacation is approaching for the mission schools in the province. During the mid-winter recess the principals of these schools have been attending various conferences one of them in this province, at Shouyang. Others were present at the meeting of the Chihli-Shansi Educational Association in Peking. The government schools have yet some days of holiday.

In connexion with the vacation given the schools in Taiyuanfu, I was given some interesting information. It seems the Educational Commissioner of the province, in consultation with the heads of the teaching staffs, fixed upon certain dates for the beginning and end of the winter recess. The usual vacation of 40 days was decided upon. Thereupon Young China asserted himself. A deputation of students from the University visited the other schools and incited the students to fix their own dates for the holidays, which was done. It is hardly necessary to state that considerably more time was taken than the authorities had planned. These schools are taking a recess of at least two months, in some cases more than that.

THE NEW YEAR FESTIVAL.

We are now about at the end of the New Year merry-making in the towns and villages. The observance of the season has been in every way reminiscent of the pre-Republican days. No attention at all was paid to the "foreign" New Year in the villages, and in the district cities there was only a perfunctory putting up of red paper mottoes and display of flags. The "tuei tzu" pasted up were without the usual borders of gilt paper. However, all this was atoned for when what the Chinese call "our own" New Year arrived. There was no dearth of red and gilt paper, flags, lanterns and firecrackers then. This is one feature of Chinese life that probably will never change.

Just at Chinese New Year and following it there was a general precipitation of snow over the province. This is taken to be a happy sign and to indicate that a fruitful and prosperous year may be excepted. We have had several days of severe winter winter weather this month, with biting northwest winds.

In reading the native newspapers one occasionally comes across a surprising bit of "information." The other day a Taiyuanfu paper, speaking of a recent illness suffered by President Tsao, solemnly told us that His Excellency's temperature rose to "more than 120 degrees!" One wonders what would have happened if the gentleman's blood had reached the boiling point!

BRIGANDAGE IN MANCHURIA

Despite Huge Military Establishment: Revolting Crime in Changchun

We are indebted to the British & Foreign Bible Society for the following:—Notwithstanding the great military forces accumulated by the Governor of Manchuria, brigandage seems to be hardly less prevalent there than throughout China generally.

The British & Foreign Bible Society, which employs 35 Chinese colporteurs in the Three North-Eastern Provinces, finds that "perils of robbers" is the condition reported by them all. At Changchun, the junction of the South Manchuria Railway and the Chinese Eastern Railway, the Bible Society's Depôt, situated near the station in a populous part of the city, was recently raided in the early evening. The Chinese depôt-keeper was struck on the head with an axe, and shortly afterwards died. The perpetrators of the crime got away before any alarm could be given and have not been traced. It may be remembered that Mr. Gillespie, of the Presbyterian Mission, was similarly murdered by robbers in the same city a few years ago.

The terrible conditions test severely the grit of the travelling Bible-sellers but sometimes also give them exceptional opportunities. In one town which was threatened by an approaching band of brigands, the merchant guild chose the Christian colporteur to go out as their spokesman and negotiate terms to escape being despoiled. So successful was the messenger that he was afterwards publicly honoured for his services.

The circulation of the Scriptures in Manchuria continues steadily to advance. During 1923, 261,490 books were sold, consisting entirely of Bibles, New Testaments, or single books of the Bible. This was an increase of more than 60,000 over the sales of the previous year. The greater part of these books are in Chinese, but Scriptures in Russian, Japanese, Korean, English, etc., are included in the total.

SOLDIERS' MUTINY IN HONAN

More Recruits for the Brigands: Anxiety Caused by Long Drought

From Our Own Correspondent.

Huaiking, Hon., Feb. 20.

A few days ago 100 government soldiers at Chinghua became dissatisfied with their conditions, so they rather suddenly attacked and killed their officer and made off to the hills with their rifles, side arms and ammunition. It is said that their greatest grievance was continued promises instead of hard cash as monthly pay.

At the present time these discontented and hungry well armed men are at large somewhere in the hills near by. They cannot be called bandits but they have a very good opportunity to practice the rather lucrative art, so well known to many disbanded and unpaid soldiers south of the Yellow river in Honan, and unless effective and speedy steps are taken by the responsible authorities the bandit menace may be said to be upon this comsunity.

DROUGHT CAUSING UNEASINESS.

Six months have passed without rain to moisten the earth Twice a little rain and twice a very light snow, but at no time enough to settle the dust on the highways or wet the roots of the winter wheat. During the first month of the present Chinese New Year great crowds have attended the temples and prayed for rain and immense crowds have joined the processions going up to the Ke Ta Poa and other hill temples. The writer asked an old man and his wife why they were willing to suffer so much weariness and cold in making the long journey of 400 li to worship at the hill temple, and the answer comes "It has not rained for many months and we have no other plan."

NO GOVERNMENT BRIDGES.

For many generations, at least no one living now knows from when it began, the Chin and Hau rivers Huaiking have had government bridges for the public use at least eight months in the year but this year for some reason or other no government bridges have been constructed. The summer floods always wash the bridges away. For to secure a crossing during the time of the autumn harvest the villagers provide temporary structures and these have never been replaced this year. The traffic at the Chin river is often held up for hours at a time because the bridge is so narrow that two vehicles cannot pass, often a whole line of heavy carts have to wait for one wheelbarrow to be slowly pushed across from the opposite side. No wonder the old men sit by the river bank and declare that there is nothing now to compare with the good old times that they and their fathers have known.

GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS CLOSED.

During the past two years many country goverment schools have been closed down, a few days ago I saw a notice up stating that the "district Kao Teng school is not to be opened," there is no money to carry on these schools, and there is no money to construct bridges for the public use, and yet the people are being taxed more heavily each year. It is always said that the military need more money. New levies are constantly being extracted from the civil authorities, and yet the soldiers go unpaid and enforced to turn bandit. Increasing taxation, more and more unpaid and undisciplined soldiery, banditry and lawlessness and the long continued drought are effecting most seriously the peace and prosperity of the people.

Peking, Feb. 29.—In furtherance of the departmental necessities of the Constitution, the Ministries of the Interior and Agriculture and Commerce have appointed Commissions to draft the required regulations for their departments. KUANGTUNG'S HOST OF MERCENARIES

More Hunanese Now Than Yunnan Troops: Food Alone Costing Some $36,000 a Day

Canton, Feb. 23.

The numbers of Hunanese mercenaries in Canton have now outgrown those of the Yunnanese. The Hunanese claim that they have five corps, which would mean a strength of 181,440, if Dr. Sun Yat-sen's records are not merely on paper. The sphere of influence of the Hunanese, under General Tan Yen-kai, and of the Yunnanese, under General Yang Hsi-min is the North River district. In addition to an extra charge of from 20 to 30 per cent. on freight and passenger tariffs in the Kuangtung section of the Canton-Hankow Railroad, which are collected solely for the support of these troops, they have applied to Dr. Sun for an additional levy of one dollar on every bag of salt and 2½ per cent. on the general value of goods entering the North River district. Apart from the Hunanese and the Yunnanese, there are other mercenaries in Canton requiring support. The feeding of the troops alone costs some $36,000 a day.

General Chiang Chuan-kuei has been appointed the new Commissary-General to Dr. Sun's Army.

The expected conflict between Dr. Sun Yat-sen and General Chen Chiung-ming on the eastern front has not occurred yet, one of the causes of delay being rain during the last fortnight.

The Canton police have been instructed to arrest all persons spreading reports of an impending conflict between the Hunanese and the Yunnanese.

By order of the Generalissimo, the Yunnanese troops in Canton will not be allowed to "inspect the arms" of the Canton Volunteers or to collect an "inspection fee" of $5 for each weapon.

THE STRIKE SITUATION.

Pending arbitration the strike of employees in the rice shops has been called off, and trade has been resumed since February 21. During the strike only retail shops were opened and the price of rice of the finer grade has risen to $12 per picul.

Shoe-makers and pork-butchers are still on strike. The shoemakers are opposed to the extra tax on rubber soles. The pork shop employers refuse to grant the employees' demands for a larger bonus.

The Kung Yee Medical College, a Chinese Institution with many foreign physicians on the faculty, celebrated its 15th anniversary on February 22.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MUNICIPAL FINANCES.

The numerous wars and excursions to which Canton has been subjected during the past year appears to have been rather disastrous to the finances of the Municipality. Speaking at the Municipal Executive meeting, Mayor Sun Fo said, reports the "Canton Gazette":—

Owing to the unsettled state of affairs and the numerous battles fought last year, the revenues of the Municipality were somewhat deficient, but fortunately the sum of six million dollars was collected from the sale of Government lands, so that all expenses in connexion with the Municipality for last year were met. The total revenue collected from March to December amounted to eight and a half million dollars. Six millions went to the General Headquarters, one and a half millions to the Police Department, and one million for Public Heath, Education, Public Works, Public Utilities and other administrative expenses. With the centralization of revenue collections, the Municipality this year is relieved of the responsibility of caring for the expenses of the army, so that the stoppage of funds from the sale of Government lands will not affect the financial situation at all.

THE retirement of Mr. T. Petrie from the Editorship of the "South China Morning Post," after 23 years' journalistic work in the Colony, was marked by the presentation to him of a beautiful. Chinese rose bowl, a silver cigar and cigarette box, and a gold and silver cigarette case by his journalistic contemporaries of all the newspapers in Hongkong.

OBITUARY

Miss Grace Evelyn Burnham

Our Nanking correspondent writes on March 1:—The foreign community has been saddened by the death of Miss Grace Evelyn Burnham, who had been in the employ of the International Export Company. She was a bright and popular girl 25 years of age, and since she was taken ill seven weeks ago, the whole community has watched her brave fight for life. She was under the best of care in the Foreign Memorial Hospital and the Company spared no expense in securing the best medical advice from Shanghai, but no means availed to stay the disease, and she died early yesterday morning. The burial took place on Saturday afternoon in the foreign cemetery and was attended by a large company of friends. Miss Burnham was from Aylesbury, England, and was the eldest member of a large family of children, her parents both living. She came to China 18 months ago.

A REAL "FATHER AND MOTHER" OF THE PEOPLE

Kiangchow Loses its Friend and Magistrate: Homely Old-time Official's Promotion

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiangchow, Sha., Feb. 24.

Not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant and probably rarely in the annals of Shansi has such a "send off" been given to an official as was recently accorded to Mr. Ki on his leaving the city of Taiping on promotion to Taichow, north Shansi.

The road for 10 li outside the city was densely packed with people of all ranks and circumstances, sincerely mourning the loss of a friend who for six years had unremittingly laboured for the common weal and had without prejudice, fear or favour endeavoured to dispense justice to all.

A plain homely, genial old gentleman, he had little of the appearance of the conventional "mandarin." In his attic chamber in the Yamên, from which on arrival he had cleared out the fairy fox and other venerated relics, Mr. Ki sat with his long old-fashioned pipe at the beck and call of his people. Official documents were dealt with, pipe in hand, amongst his clerks promptly but with little show or ceremony. Mr. Ki was always ready to write some scrolls for a trades man, rush out in the street to help a farmer find his lost purse on market day, or go with a murderer to see what evidence the grave of his victim could produce for or against the accusation.

HIS GOOD WORKS.

He spent time each day strolling round unaccompanied, rousing sleepy shopkeepers by rapping on the shutters to ask what sort of a Republic China would become if merchants were not ready for work by sunrise, giving advice about sweeping shop fronts or about buying goods.

On the judgment seat his genial good humour and sound advice attracted crowds and he has a wonderful gift for arriving at facts by short cuts to the consternation of evil-doers and the satisfaction of the oppressed. Stories of his good deeds will be told for many years to come, and it is to be hoped that many of the institutions, schools and public buildings, which his instrumentally created, may be continued.

But there is great variety among the present-day officials, in age, style, ability and the good instituted by one is often overthrown by his successor.

RUSSIAN ADVENTURES.

At present a large number of officials are being changed in Shansi, and there has been a noticeable laxity in restraining public gambling at New Year's holiday and carrying out similar laws.

Cattle disease is very rampart. Diseased beef is being sold publicly.

A party of Russians are in this city, selling Russian cloth and rugs. They speak very little Chinese and less English and having no interpreters or servants have a difficult task to sell their wares.

RUSSIA'S CURRENCY REFORM

Federal Notes on a Gold Basis: Silver and Copper to be Again Minted

Our Chita correspondent sends us translations of some interesting publications on the reform of Russia's currency and gradual elimination of paper, as under.

REFORMS IN OUR MONETARY SYSTEM

Decree of the Central Executive Committee and Soviet of People's Comissars of S.S.S.R.

Moscow, 5.—It has been decreed by the Central Executive Committee and the Soviet of People's Commissars to issue Federal Treasury Notes having a value of 1,3 and 5 Roubles gold.

The quantity of such notes to be issued will be determined on the first day of each month, but will not exceed half the quantity of Chervontsi already in circulation.

The total amount issued to be published on the first day of each month.

In a conversation with the representative of "Rosta" Comrade Tumanov, member of the Ministry of Finance, stated that the question of making reforms in our monetary system has already been decided by all the higher official organs of S.S.S.R. and that the publication of the Decree regarding the issue of Federal Treasury Notes is but the first step towards putting these reforms into practice.

The issue of these notes will be limited to not more than one half of the total sum of Chervontsi at present in circulation. In this manner the limited sum of Federal Treasury Notes in circulation in the country will equal at any moment one third of the entire value of all the monetary paper, etc., in circulation. This proportion in general and upon the whole, undoubtedly, will correspond to the requirements of trade in small monetary denominations and will serve as a guarantee to stabilize the exchange rate of the new Federal notes.

The issue of these notes will be carried out by the Ministry of Finance gradually—in proportion to the demands for same made by the trading class of the country. Therefore, the Soviet paper currency for the meantime will continue to exist together with the Chervontsi and new Federal notes as legal tender.

SILVER AND COPPER COINS.

In order to remove complications in the monetary circulation of the country the Soviet paper currency will be purchased by the Government at a time rate and in their stead silver and copper coins will be issued. The extent of these issues will depend upon the capacity of our mint, the production of which cannot supply the requirements of silver and copper coins, but the Ministry of Finance is taking steps to increase the production by adapting certain works for the purpose of minting these silver and copper coins. It is very possible, also, that after the purchase of the Soviet paper currency there will be felt a certain temporary shortage in small money. In order to satisfy the turn-over it is proposed to issue temporary paper bons having a value of from 1 to 5 copecks gold and the Ministry of Finance undertakes to exchange them for coin during the present year. The Federal Notes will be acceptd by all the Credit institutions of the country on the following basis: One 10-rouble Federal note equals one chervonets. In accordance with this the chervontsi will be freely exchanged by all banks and financial organizations for Federal notes.

THE ON LEE PIRACY

Arrested Passengers Released

According to the Hongkong papers all the passengers detained in connexion with the attempted piracy of the str. On Lee, in Hongkong waters, have been released. A certain amount of disappointment is felt in the Colony, not, of course, at the release of innocent people but rather that the efforts of the authoritics to capture and punish the perpetrators of these piracies should once again have failed. This was the first time the police had made arrests on so large a scale after these events and it was hoped that an example could be made of the offenders. There appears, however, to have been some controversy in the Colony as to whether there really was a piracy in this case at all, many believing it to have been a practical joke on the part of the passengers, and the passengers were released through lack of evidence.

ECHO OF SIBERIAN INTERVENTION EXPEDITION

Allies to Foot Bills for Troop Transportation on C. E. R.

From Our Own Correspondent

Harbin, Feb. 16.

Local newspapers reliably learn that Entente Powers who took part in the Siberian Intervention Expedition and who are still indebted to the Chinese Eastern Railway for troop transportation, are shortly to liquidate their debts in full.

The chief debtor is France who agreed to pay for the Czecho-Slovaks. She owes just over 7 million roubles. England owes 42,000 gold roubles; Italy 20,000; U.S.A. 132,000; France 203,221; Czecho-Slovakia 6,944,787; Poland 188,887; Serbia 40,905; Rumania 177,848; Latvia 26,964.

Japan still must pay about 600,000 gold roubles and the Chinese Government about seven millions.

CHINESE COLONIZERS IN MANCHURIA.

The Chinese authorities at Mukden have decided to bring into Manchuria during 1924 some 180,000 new emigrants to colonize virgin lands. A new office is to be specially established which will allot land and look after the proper settling of the new arrivals. According to the plans, some 50,000 persons will be brought into Fengtien Province where 10 million mow have been allotted them and a further 16 million mow will still be available. In Kirin province along the border districts adjoining to Russian and Mongolian territory another 50,000 emigrants will be directed to where they are expected to break-up 15 million mow of the 68 million which is available.

Some $4,000,000 has been assigned to this colonization scheme and each of the three Eastern Provinces are to contribute their quota.

According to information received from Chita, the Soviet Government have allotted 3½ million gold roubles for Habour improvements at Vladivostok, Posiet Bay and Nikolaievsk-on-Amur. Undoubtedly this money would be very well spent seeing that it will attract the export produce from Manchuria which is becoming greater and greater in North Manchuria, and no doubt in time will divert the greater part of the cargo which at present is being exported viâ Dairen.

CANTON RIVER STEAMER IN AN ACCIDENT

Hongkon, Mar. 1.

The steamer Heungshan yesterday at dawn in a dense fog struck Junk Rock and subsequently beached 12 miles from Canton. Over 700 passengers, mostly Chinese and including several American men and women, were transferred to the steamers, Kwangsai and Tinsang, and were safely landed at Canton. The stern of the Heungshan is partly submerged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

KIAOCHOU-TSINAN RAILWAY

Navy's Extortionate Demands: Bridge-building Scheme: Revision of Freights

Tsingtao, Feb. 26.

The Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway finds itself at the present moment in an anomalous and possibly untenable position, forced as it is to combat the Central Government to keep its finances intact and protect its funds from seizure. A prominent official, who wishes to remain incognito, told Reuter's correspondent to-day that the railroad officials almost daily receive threatening telegrams from Peking, insisting that the line shall turn over a part of its earnings to the naval squadron stationed here to the amount of $50,000 monthly.

The railroad, which already has turned over $100,000, according to unofficial reports, to the fleet commanded by admiral Wen, has stoutly declared, through its finance department, its intention of presenting the squadron with no further "bequests." The Managing-Director, Mr. Liu Kuen, who has spent a large part of his time in Loyang of late conferring with Marshal Wu-Pei-fu, alone appears to favour the railroad's supporting the six war-vessels and their commissioned and enlisted personnel.

The under-officials are unanimous in their opposition to what they term "Gifts to the navy," citing the fact that the railroad badly needs all its revenue and just now is confronted by the necessity of increasing its receipts.

THE INDEBTEDNESS TO JAPAN.

The Japanese cashier of the line, who is protecting Japanese interests, has declared positively that, if another cheque is drawn up payable to Admiral Wen, Japan will step in and demand its non-payment. Japan, naturally, looks with strong disfavour on ary squandering of railway funds, inasmuch as China still owes her the purchase price of $40,000,000 and has less than four years remaining to make full payment.

If the railroad is expected by China to pay for itself, there is not the ghost of a chance that Japan will receive payment in full on the date the mortgage expires in January 1928. The line has been able to meet only the interest of six per cent. and has not paid a penny on the principal.

BRIDGE-BUILDING PROGRAMME.

Ways and means of increasing the revenue so as to finance a big bridge-building programme are now being considered by the railway. The railroad finds itself at present with a surplus on hand of a trifle over $700,000. The cost of 40 new bridges will exceed $3,000,000. This will be spread over three years.

There is an urgent need of the bridges, as some of the present ones are none too safe and too long have received only temporary repairs. The new bridges will be of steel construction and are expected to last for a long time.

REVISION OF FREIGHTS.

The railroad does not look with favour on a general upward revision of freight tariffs, but proposes to put the burden on the commodities that can best stand it.

Coal to the amount of 2 million tons annually is transported over the line and the rates are abnormally low, the officials believe. All coal shippers, accordingly, may be compelled to pay a higher tariff, This is true particularly of the Lu Ta Corporation, a Sino-Japanese concern, which has been benefiting by a low rate in operation since the Japanese administration of the railroad.

More than 600,000 tons yearly is shipped by this company alone and at an approximate charge of $2.40 per ton. The officials propose raising this rate to about $4.50 per ton, or to a similar charge to that paid by smaller shippers.

This item alone would give the railroad increased revenue of about $1,200,000, annually.

Besides its bridge-building programme which it hopes to finance, the railroad is badly in need of new rolling equipment, some of which has seen more than a score of years' service.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A RIVER JOURNEY THROUGH SZECHUAN

Remnants of Hsiong Keh-Wu's Army: Plenty of Firing But no Fighting

From Our Mienchow Correspondent.

Tongchuan to Mienchow,
Sze., Jan. 29-31.

As I mentioned in May last letter we arrived at Tongchuan on the 28th. This was a trying day in some ways, although it ended very fortunately. Our first difficulty was in getting away from Yangkiapa. All of the retreating 1st Army men had left during the night and many more passed through in the early morning. There were, however, a few stragglers left behind who turned out to be great nuisance to us. Twice we essayed to cross the river, and twice these soldiery called us back. After this second attempt I went down, and managed to persuade them to let us go on. This third attempt was made without crossing the river, and we came along anxiously wondering whether we should be recalled again. Groups of irresponsible new-comers retreating from Tongchuan, sore with defeat, hunger and weariness, or ready to interfere with anybody can make themselves very troublesome. There was no real danger but the air was pregnant with alarms.

We got along unmolested for five li; the last of which was long drawn out by a rapid. We were then startled by people from the bank calling out that robbers were about, and had another doubtful five minutes till from the medley of excited shoutings we managed to gather that the brigands were really two or three soldiers who had taken a man's bundle and his dollars. The local militia however, managed to make them restore them.

After this we got along without event until we came to within eight li of Tongchuan. Here we got on to the bank and walked to the environs of the city. As we drew near we heard firing and wondered whether there was more fighting. We were also informed of the pontoon which caused us much concern. When we went to seek our on-coming boat we found it had been ordered across the river by soldiers. After some delay the boat was permitted to come on, and we anchored just close to our bug-bear, the pontoon. Chang, of course, came to the rescue and undertook to go to the military headquarters, and ask for a "permit" to go through the bridge. I did not dare leave the boat myself because of the fear that soldiers might come and take the coolies.

After a long time Chang came back having begun to cause us uneasiness by his delay. He came in radiant, armed with a "Permit." Within half an hour we were through the bridge to our great delight. The city was in a great tumult. The 2nd Army had just got in, and Gen. Hsiong had been forced to leave, and leave all his possessions, military and otherwise, behind.

TONGCHUAN REACHED.

Tongchuan is a city of considerable importance, and next to Chungking may be said to rank first of those on the River Fuh. Under the Empire it enjoyed the status of a fu city. It owes its influence then to its traditions as well as to its geographical and commercial adventages. It stands at the point where another river flows into the Fuh from the city of Chongkiang. At this point the Fuh bends sharply round to the northwest, and the character of the country begins to change somewhat.

Tongchuan is an important outlet for the silk trade. Twenty li on from Tongchuan is a village called Sinchang on the left (north) bank of the river. From Sinchang the river winds through pretty scenery to Tsingpitsui, a distance of 30 li. This is not much more than a halting place for the night.

On January 30 we got off by 7 a.m. and have travelled well; but the river winds to such an extent that we did not do more than 19 miles by road. Fuhluchi is 30 li from Tsingpitsui (10 miles) and we took nine hours to get there! The river from Tungchuan on becomes much prettier, but nothing equal to the wonderful beauties near its source. It winds to such an extent that the 140 li by road between Tongchuan and Mienchow more than 200 by river. Fuhluchi is a sub-hsien in rank, and in the old days generally had an official of fair capacity. It has a busy market but no special produce.

The next day (the 31st) we reached Fengkutsing at 10.30 a.m. a distance a 30 li. Fengkutsing has a considerable salt industry and is a flourishing market. We did the next 35 li (by road) in eight hours; arriving at Mienchow by 6.30 p.m.

Mienchow under the Empire was a departmental city, governing five hsien, viz., Mienchow, Tehying, Lokiang, Tsitong and Anhsien. For a time under the Republic its name was changed to Mienyang; but it seems now to have been changed back to its original name. Like all Chinese cities, it has a history, which contains a good deal of interesting, and doubtless much legendary matter. It goes back for more than 2,000 years. There are one or two interesting landmarks: for instance, on the cliff not far from the C. M. S. Boys' Boarding School is a tablet dating from the Sung Dynasty. The famous Tang poet Li Poh is said to have taken a delight in fishing in the neighbourhood. When we remember how full his poetry is of allusions to fishing, we can well believe that at any rate he was fond of the sport. As he was born not far away perhaps this tradition is true. About four miles from the city there is a temple dedicated to him, and his contemporary Tu Fu. There are also traditions connecting the heroes of the "Three Kingdom" novel with the district. The city is chiefly famous for the product of meitung, a kind of root which the Chinese use as medicine. Sir Alexander Hosie gave Japonica liorpe as its botanical name.

At the present time the city is filled with a nondescript type of soldier. All is quiet, but there have been recent disturbances. A Chinese gentleman said the other day there are bandits (soldiers) inside the city as well as out: My account of the river journey ends here. We were 32 days on the way and met with many adventures, but so far as we know were not in any real danger at any time.

JAPANESE CAPITAL AND CHINA

Industrial Information Under Sino-Japanese Auspices

Tokio, Feb. 26.

The Government is reported to have under consideration the establishment of a Sino-Japanese Industrial Investigation Bureau, which, as its name implies, would examine the possibility of opening up industries both in China and in Japan through the employment of joint capital and labour.

The idea behind this proposal is that by such joint undertakings the problems of finance for China and of emigration for Japan may be more easily solved. In other words, China's rich natural resources would be available to Japan's capital and labour. In this way it is thought both countries would greatly benefit and their economic relations be more closely knit together.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WHEN THE BIRDS GO NORTH AGAIN

The Coolies Return to Work in Manchuria from Holiday-making in Shantung

Tientsin News Service.

Tientsin, Feb. 29

A vast amount of inconvenience, not unleavened with a little compensatory humour, is being caused the railway authorities here by the annual migration of coolie labour from Shantung to Manchuria. Every 12th month of the Chinese year, almost since the railroads opened many years ago, sees the remarkable southward migration of thousands of Shantung coolies, returning from their farming and other pursuits in Manchuria to spend the Chinese New Year in their homes. The southward trek, if such a railroad journey can so be called, begins from the first day of the Chinese 12th month and continues until a few days before the New Year. The northward migration begins about the 12th day of the New Year and continues unabated for three of four weeks.

The number of transient humanity has swelled from year to year until at present there are no fewer than 100,000 making the annual journey. Two days ago the Peking-Mukden Railway shipped forward 25 carloads, containing about 3000 coolies, yesterday another 15 cars went forward, and practically every day sees from 10 to 25 carloads shipped through to the north. This strain on the railway traffic will continue for another two weeks. The Pukow brings them in its goods cars to the Tientsin Central Station, where the Peking-Mukden line trans-ships them into its own cars. Both lines are taxed to the utmost to accommodate the migration. The coolies by sheer weight of numbers actually sweep everything before them. They scramble on the cars by the hundreds, each man with his roll of bedding, some pots and pans and even in some cases his wife and children. Only goods cars can be allocated for their use, and they jamb into the seatless trucks with unseemly haste, knowing that the first to get in are able to obtain the most advantageous corners and situations wherein to find the most comfortable resting places through the bleak winter nights of traveling. The art of traveling in box cars, it seems, involves a technique and discrimination almost equal to that of traveling in coupé cars.

Two days ago, when the Pukow line deposited 3,000 coolies at the Central station, there was a stampede across the station footbridge to the waiting Shanhaikuan train. The bridge has two narrow walks leading down to the platform in opposite directions. Up these two inclines the speeding coolies ran in a solid mass. The vanguards met at the top, the impact ruining the clothes and restricting the wind capacity of the impactees in no small degree. Several were bowled over and trampled on, amid loud expressions of resentment. Railway traffic officials, approaching with stern demeanour to wave them back, might just as well have attempted to wave back a northwest gale. The officials were found later much the worse for wear and in a state of mind bordering upon homicide. It was not so much that they resented being pushed and jostled but more a natural aversion to the peculiar odours garlic and one thing and another, which seem to be inseparable from this type of tourist. The railway officials have adopted the sound precaution of handling this traffic from windward, but accidents sometimes happen.

ATTAR OF ROSES.

Sometimes it becomes necessary, owing to exigencies of traffic control, to permit those perfumed travellers the privilege of sitting along the sides of car-sheds and platorms after debarcation at junctions, while trains are being made up. However, after departure a plentiful supply of chloride is sprinkled wherever they rested.

At Shanhaikuan, where they must purchase tickets for the journey outside the wall, on the "Chang Tso-lin line," they frequently camp in the vicinity of the Railway Hotel, much to the discomfiture of the guests, who have mads more than one protest.

It may seem unusual that wage-earners of this species can regularly afford the expenses incident to migration, but upon inquiry we learn that the average coolie saves up about $200 during the year and that the through fare by a special box-car rate does not amount to much more than eighteen or twenty dollars. Supposing the round trip costs them $40 they have ample left to spend upon those staccato celebrations and still have something left over with which to buy garlic and other luxuries.

Labouring in Manchuria must be remunerative.

BANDITS DISGUISED AS BEGGARS

Inhuman Horde's Attack on Wealthy Shaohsing Family

From Our Own Correspondent.

Shaohsing, Chê., Mar. 4.

The bandit situation in Chenghsien though greatly improved, is still a menace, as the following incident shows.

Towards the end of January beggars began to appear in unusual numbers in a town 15 li from Shaohsing city. Being strangers in the place they attracted attention. Questions were asked as to who they might be and what they wanted. These questions were answered in an unpleasant manner when a band of eight bandits appeared on the night of February 1.

Going direct to the home of a widow, with whose place they had familiarized themselves in their disguise as beggars, they made an entrance. The woman servant who remonstrated was silenced by a gun held at her head.

After a short search the older of the two sons, a boy of 13, was siezed and bound, right arm to right leg and left arm to left leg. A carrying pole was inserted and the gang started for their rendezvous in the Chenghsien mountains.

When the servant again spoke out and asked if terms could not be reached for the boy's release she was stabbed in the leg. A letter was left behind stating that the boy could be had upon payment of a ransom of $50,000 within two weeks. Failing to receive the required amount within two weeks the boy's dead body would be returned to the mother.

Added pathos is given to the story by the fact that the bandits in their raid secured the basket in which the widow's title deeds to her property and tax receipts had been placed so that she could save them in case of a fire at the New Year.

RECOVERY AHEAD.

A recent journey through the district most seriously devastated by the floods of 1922 shows the innate power of the Chinese to recover from a serious calamity. Dikes, bridges and roads that had been destroyed wholly, or in part, have been rebuilt, in each instance more substantially than before. Funds have been raised by popular subscription, the work done by local labourers and superintended by public-spirited citizens.

Considerable interest is shown in popular education in the villages. Temples and ancestral halls are being converted into schools. Unfortunately it is very difficult to secure good teachers. Too frequently the men engaged are of the old type, with little knowledge of modern methods and questionable morality. The villagers recognize the need of better teachers, but are powerless to secure them with the limited funds at their disposal.

WHILE letter mails leaving Shanghai on Monday night connect with the express leaving Harbin the following Friday, arriving at Chita on Sunday and at Moscow on the following Sunday, mails containing newspapers, printed matter and the like cannot be afforded the same rapid transmission owing to lack of space on the express trains. Such mails will therefore in transit.

KIAO-TSI RAILWAY FUNDS

Reported Japanese Attempt to Stop Appropriations for Admiral Wen's Navy

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 28.

Mr. Liu Kun, the Managing Director of the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway, has now returned from his latest trip to Loyang, where he consulted the Marshal Wu Pei-fu with regard to the upkeep of the squadron under Rear-Admiral Wen.

According to reports, which would seem to be fairly accurate, the Japanese chief cashier of the Railway has been instructed by his authorities not to sign any cheques in payment of accounts not directly connected with the Railway's operations.

In this respect, it is worthy of note that the Japanese have the backing of the majority of the junior officials who are in the main returned students and know a good thing when they see it. On the other hand, Mr. Liu, the Railway's Managing Director, has the support of an influential minority.

It is said that a Presidential Mandate, ordering the Railway to hand over a fixed sum monthly to the Navy, will be issued unless the Japanese can be brought to change their present policy of opposition. That the Japanese are prepared for eventualities would seem to be the case, for in Japanese circles it is freely stated that the Government in Tokio will instruct Mr. Yoshizawa to lodge strong representations in the event of further sums being made use of for the support of Admiral Wen's squadron.

Mr. Liu's position is not to be envied. He has promised Marshal Wu Pei-fu a fixed sum monthly for the maintenance of the squadron, never expecting for a moment that the Japanese would set up an opposition in view of the fact that the earnings of the Kiao-tsi line are sufficient to meet the monthly interest of $200,000 due to the Japanese Government on the capital of $40 millions which China has pledged to refund Japan at the end of five years from the time of the retrocession.

The Kiao-Tsi Railway bids fair to be the subject of a Sino-Japanese dispute in the near future unless the attempts to drain its resources are given up, and it is noteworthy also that in this particular instance the Japanese have the backing of the Chinese business community.

$6,000 Monthly Now Wanted to Support Universities

Mar. 1.

Surprise is evinced here over a new scheme to drain the resources of the Kiao-tsi Railway.

It appears that the Ministry of Communications has ordered the Kiao-tsi Railway to allot $6,000 monthly as a contribution to the Nanyang University and the Chiao Tung University, both of which are controlled by the Communications Department. This enforced contribution represents the not insignificant sum of $72,000 annually and is considered to be quite a drain on the resources of the Kiao-tsi Railway.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE

Tokio, Mar. 4.

The Finance Department announces, that for the month of February, Japan's foreign trade amounted to about Y.110,000,000 in exports and about Y.290,000,000 in imports, the balance being approximately Y.180,000,000 in favour of imports.—Eastern News Agency.

THE marriage took place in New York on February 2 of Miss Caroline Huie Kin, formerly of the Y. W. C. A. in China and daughter of the Rev. Huie Kin, to the Rev. Y. P. Tsu, M.A., B.D., PH.D., formerly of St. John's University, Shanghai, and now of New York.

THE NEW H. & S. BANK IN TIENTSIN

Another Magnificent Building: Foundation Stone To Be Laid by Lady Macleay

Tientsin News Service

Tientsin, March 3, 1924.

The foundation stone of the new building of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, on Victoria Road, will be laid on Saturday in the presence of foreign and Chinese officials and merchants of the port, by Lady Macleay, wife of the British Minister to China.

Excavations were commenced in the summer of 1922 and most of the foundations laid before the frost set in last December. Occupying one of the most central and valuable sites in Tientsin, at the corner of Victoria and Consular Roads, the new and imposing structure will consist of the bank's office with office space to let on the upper floors and quarters for the necessary Chinese staff in the rear. The main building will be a three-storied edifice consisting of ground, mezzanine and first floors, the entire ground and mezzanine floors being occupied by the bank. It will be faced externally with Tsingtao granite. The main entrance will be in the middle of the Victoria Road frontage, taking the form of a lofty portico, approached by a flight of easy steps, 30 feet wide. It will have wide, bronze sliding doors with plate-glass inner swing doors leading to an elliptical vestibule and through this to the main banking hall.

RICH INTERIOR DECORATIONS.

The banking hall will be a cross-shaped room, 103 ft. by 60 ft. with two transepts, 9 ft. by 30 ft., with a total height of 32 ft., this being the full height of the ground and mezzanine floors. The hall will be lighted from the top and by four large semi-circular light groups, one on each side. To keep the building cool in Summer large air spaces will be arranged between the inner and outer windows and roof lights. For ventilation a large fan will force washed and moistened air into the hall through inlets around the counter. In winter this air will be heated. Extractor fans will draw vitiated air out through suitable openings near the ceiling, thus ensuring a complete change of air every few minutes. The hall will be finished with rich Italian marble, detached columns on black marble bases supporting half-vaults, which will form cantilever supports for the glazed ceiling, thus doing away with obstructions in the middle of the hall. The walls will be lined with a marble dado of lighter red Italian marble, which substance will also form the counter. The latter will be finished with the bronze grille. The public floor space will be paved with Florentine mosaic and the working floor space with cork tiles.

SPECIAL DISPOSITIONS.

The private offices for the agent, accountant, waiting rooms, typist's office and the like, will be situated on the south, or Consular Road, side and will be panelled in teakwood and floored with oakwood parquet. The north side will contain a spare office leading into safe-deposit vault, where space may be rented for the safe storage of valuables. In the rear of the main banking room will be the Chinese banking department with a separate entrance from the Consular Road side, giving easy access to the private offices of the Compradore. A separate entrance for messengers will be provided on the north side, together with suitable waiting room accommodation for chit-coolies. The sycee entrance will be on the West, or rear side, within the compound, so that trucks may be loaded without obstructing the public thoroughfares. A shoot and bullion lift will connect this entrance with the main treasury in the basement.

Foreign staff, Chinese staff and coolie lavatories will be placed in convenient positions on the North side, while separate lavatories will adjoin each private office. A private stair will lead to the mezzanine floor, where the files, records, stationery and a spare office will be situated. A separate entrance on the north side, will be provided for the first floor offices, for convenience of their lessees.

THE GENERAL STYLE.

Regarding the architecture, the elevations are solid and dignified, the Grecian-Ionic order being used in composition of road frontages. The main feature of the Victoria Road façade will be a pedimented portico of four columns forming the main entrance. A similar portico will occupy the central portion of the Consular Road elevation, while the side features will consist of recessed verandahs containing two columns, thus protecting this sunny side from the hot rays of the sun in Summer.

The building was designed by Mr. B.O.G. Burnett, of Atkinson & Dallas, Ld., the general contractor being Hsieh Shun, with Messrs. D'Angelo and Garibaldi supplying and erecting the imported marble and granite. Steel windows will be used throughout and the construction generally will be made of fire-resisting materials. The main building will cover a floor space of 23,000 square feet and will be set back from the Consular Road side, thereby providing a stand for broker's vehicles between the building and the road. This will prevent obstructing public traffic on that roadway.

Certain minor alterations have been made in the interior arrangement of office accommodation, but will not affect the principal features mentioned.

Work has been recommenced and, providing no untoward occurrences intervene, the building should be ready for occupation by the Summer of 1925.

POPPY CULTIVATION IN KIRIN

Public and Private Planting: Military Protection and Taxation

Peking, Mar. 3.

The following petition was sent by a Chinese Society in Kirin to the Opium Suppression Commission of the Ministry of Interior, and is circulated by the International Anti-Opium Association:—

"We, the public, have learned recently from the press that the Ministry of Interior has formed an Opium Suppression Commitee, and that resolutions were passed by the Committee strictly to enforce opium suppression in every province. To help your Committee, we beg to report the general opium conditions in Kirin. There are two kinds of opium cultivation, the cultivation under military protection, and private planting. The districts such as Ningan, Wangchin, Holung, Tungning, Muding, Fuchin, Mishan and the districts along the Russian borders, are all under the Forest Artillery protection. Each "shang" of poppy field can be managed by six persons during the harvesting time with three poppy knives, and each knife has to pay 25 oz. to the Artillery as tax. The districts such as Huatien, Vengkiang, Tunhua, Anturg and Tunghua, under Fongtien, Ehnu, Shulan, Wuchang and Tunglao yiehling are privately cultivated with poppy.

SOME RECOMMENDATIONS.

Opium is both planted in the fields owned by the Government, and those owned by the people. If laws are carried out to confiscate the fields planted with poppy, we think it will be difficult to deal with the fields owned by the Government. For this reason we beg to suggest that an Anti-Opium Association and Poppy Uprooting Society should be established in each district to co-operate with the local police and military officers. Also "curing houses" should be established in each district, otherwise smuggling and secret dealing cannot be stopped. We therefore ask you to consider means for dealing with the following conditions:—

(1) Smugglers; (2) smokers; (3) fields owned by the people; (4) planters; (5) fields owned by the Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PRISON REFORM IN CHINA

What Has Been Accomplished in Anhui: Convicts Kept Clean: Educated Too

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yingchowfu, Au., Feb. 28

There are many contrasts in this vast country to-day, but none could be more marked than the "old-time prison house" and the "new time prison house" here. The latter has just been built and there are only five in the province, four at present being in running order.

Thrown into prison is a term full of meaning when the Chinese gaol bird comes within the clutches of the law. After a severe beating by the magistrate's orders the convict is led away to his home between the bars. What a tale these have to tell. Given two small bowls of gruel and two small Chinese loaves of bread this is their sole daily diet unless some relative comes and passes something more substantial through a barred door, paying something to the keepers for the privilege.

At night time the prisoners are kept in separate houses in groups. One group must be indoors by a certain time and not only must they be inside the house where they pass the night, but they must all file in to a huge wooden cage at one end and lie down touching one another, and keep in that position till morning when they leave their inner cage and go through the long hours of each day just "loafing." Women prisoners, too, are kept under almost similar conditions.

In prisons we have seen men indulging freely in the smoking of tobacco and of opium. What a commentary on the inefficiency of the official class generally to try to raise the moral conduct of these great numbers of men, who at this time are incarcerated in every town throughout the Republic.

But in this city it is different. China is changing, if slowly; the day will surely come when greater interest will be taken to try to stem the impulse to greater criminalty.

Just outside the confines of the city a piece of vacant ground was acquired a few years ago and a start was made to close it in by a high brick wall. One main door leads into a courtyard where are the administrative offices. A superintendent and his staff are in charge. A large visitors' room has pictures hung on the walls showing on one side the ground plans of all the local provincial new industrial prisons, of which this is one of the five. Photographs also show convicts at work.

Going farther in you come to the inner door, and here a gaoler with rifle and bayonet fixed stands at attention as you pass through the door that ushers you into a round hallway.

On entering the hallway, five corridors come into immediate view radiating from the hall like the spokes of a wheel. Each corridor has an iron gate and this is swung open to let you pass in. On either side of the corridor there are rooms. In some corridors the rooms are for solitary confinement, in the night time at any rate, while in other cells convicts may reside. Each is provided with a bed and good wadded coverlet. Should the convicts be in their cells when you are being shown round, each will stand to attention beside his bed.

The rooms are very airy and high. A through draught passes throughout all the cells and plenty of sunlight, everything here being in almost direct contrast to what is seen in the other prisons. One room has washstands and basins and every inducement is offered to the convicts to keep clean.

WELL FED.

Passing down to the other end of the corridor another set of iron doors are swung open to allow you to pass through and you now enter a workshop. Each corridor is similarly constructed. Each workshop has a certain number of prisoners and all must work. One shop has five flour grinding mills. Wheat, beans and other cereals are here ground—the convicts being made to push these round, and thus what they consume is ground and consumed by themselves. The grain is of the best.

A carpenter's shop presents a busy appearance. Here the sound of hammer and chisel is heard all day long. Tables, chairs and other articles of household furniture are made. Bamboo chair work has lately been added to the routine work of the convicts and they seem to take kindly to it all. Weaving looms in another shop are running all day and many useful things in the way of cloths, towels and waistbands are turned out by these unskilled convicts. Thread weaving is also undertaken.

GARDEN AND SCHOOL.

Passing out of the general centre where the convicts spend most of their time you go through the garden land. Here vegetables grow for home consumption and there is a drill ground for them too. They have made brick paths to make it easier to walk over in wet weather. In one corner you come to a small building which is seen to be the convict's school room. Here the men are taught to read and write. The walls are covered with moral maxims.

During the winter the convicts have each a wadded suit of clothes and as all seem plump and well fed, one cannot but wonder when the "death by slow process" of the other prisons will become a thing of the past and only be recorded in history as "bygone punishments."

The present superintendent takes a pride in his work and it argues well for the future of this great land when you see the crying needs in this direction being met by the establishment of such places.

KASHING LETTER

Electric Light in Chekiang Country Towns

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kashing, Chê., Mar. 5.

Protracted holiday at Chinese New Year seems to have done more to demoralize local business circles than usual. Some goods and building materials are offered cheap to start up regular trade. Likin stations are alert, even Chinese complain that exports from Chêkiang covered by Customs pass are having annonyance.

SCHOOLS.—The one bright side of Chinese life is the interest in education. Schools of all sorts are crowded. More schools wanted. Chinese lady graduate teachers are demanding and obtain good salaries. Teaching at so much per hour is the vogue.

LIGHTING. — Electric light dynamos made in Shanghai are found in the smaller market towns running only 150 lamps at a profit. What will happen when the Chinese make all the machinery they want?

CAMPHOR. — An interprising Chinese firm have agents all through the country districts buying camphor trees allowing them to grow until needed.

HARD WOOD.—There is a tree, for the lack of a better name called the "Yellow Elm" found in northeast Chêkiang that is highly valued for tables and furniture. The market value approximates one dollar per year of growth. The long wait for returns is a reason for not seeing more of it planted.

SOCIETY. — The "get together society" had an annual banquet served in foreign style with scholars, merchants and everybody else on hand. Invitations have been sent out for the Presbyterian Five-Province Synod at Hangchow on April 24, and also for the Chêkiang Federation Council of all denominations at Ningpo on April 25.

POLITICS.—The ship of state seems drifting, sailors gambling for coin while the passengers watch the weather.

EARTHQUAKE IN PHILIPPINES

Manila, Feb. 29.

An earthquake of intensity 4 was felt at Baguio between 5 and 10 p.m. last night. It was also registered at Manila. Ashes and dust, supposed to have come from a volcano in the Loochoo Islands, fell on Batanes Island yesterday.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TSINGTAO ADMINISTRATION SCANDAL

Huge Alleged Defalcations by Finance Department: $100,000 Loan Still Unpaid

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 29.

A sensation has been caused here by a report that in view of irregularities in the Finance Department of the Administration, a full investigation will formally be ordered by the President at the instance of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who has of late received several telegraphic protests from local public bodies.

It is alleged that the Finance Department has made fictitious payments against fictitious vouchers, as a result of which a huge sum has disappeared. It is further alleged that other departments have resorted to the same practice of compiling fictitious accounts. One department is charged with having compiled its expenditure as $270,000 against actual payments aggregating $130,000, a "squeeze" exceeding 100 per cent.

The Chinese here are surprised over the refusal of the Administration to refund the money borrowed from local merchants by Dr. C. T. Wang on the retrocession of the former leased territory to China.

At that time, Dr. Wang found it necessary to raise $100,000 for administrative expenses. Unable to obtain the money from the Central Government, he approached the Chairman of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce here for temporary assistance. Through the intermediary of the Chamber, the money was duly advanced to him, on the understanding that it would be refunded as soon as possible after the Administration had been put in good running order.

The Chamber of Commerce has on several occasions approached the Administration for the refund of the $100,000 but to no avail. They have now retaliated by coming to an arrangement by which, instead of paying taxes to the Administration they will deposit the moneys in four banks until such time as the sum of $100,000 is accumulated. They will then reimburse themselves with the money, "forgetting" the question of interest.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF SUIHEISHA

Japanese Government Urged to Recognize the Soviet: Boy Orator's Eloquence

Tokio, Mar. 4.

The annual national convention of the Suiheisha (the organization of the despised "Eta" people, of whom over 1,000,000 are scattered throughout Japan) is being held in the Kioto Public Hall. Thousands of members attended and also a number of Socialists and Anarchists.

A motion was introduced to send a congratulatory message to Mr. Ghandi, who was recently released from prison, but after an excited debate the motion was shelved.

Another motion to urge the Japanese Government to recognize Soviet Russia was adopted by a great majority. One boy orator swayed the audience by his eloquence in the debate.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

YIHYANG MARU CAPTIVES

Demands for Ransom Decreasing

Peking, Mar. 3.

The two Japanese officers in the hands of the Szechuan forces have been taken from place to place as the Szechuan force has found it necessary to move in evasion of the Northern forces. The Szechuanese have considerably lowered their demands for ransom. They are now asking $150,000 instead of the original amount of $1,000,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A BANK FAILURE IN CHEFOO

Rumour Busy over the Supposed Methods of Payment: Rheinland Captain's Bad Luck

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chefoo, Feb. 25.

The business of Chefoo has been suffering from the unavoidable relapse which comes with the Chinese New Year holidays. Practically no business has been done by foreign houses for two or three weeks past and even now the holidays are over the various markets are only opening very slowly. There is no noticeable demand for any particular commodity at the time of writing.

Since my last letter the Weihaiwei Agricultural Savings Bank has closed its doors to business, causing no little trouble in the town. The closure took place just prior to the holidays which is of course the most serious time of the year for all Chinese as debts and accounts have then to be settled. Crowds assembled round the bank premises and for a time things did not look at all promising. After pressure, however, the directors of the bank advised the public that they would, as a commencement, pay 40 per cent. on all notes presented to them. Payment to this extent was eventually made. This semi-failure has has of course affected great numbers, some seriously.

Rumour has it that the police and soldiery were paid in full and, if this is the case, very serious trouble lies in the path of the directors. Apart from the payment of the 40 per cent. mentioned the bank have made no apparent effort to meet their obligations and, strange to say, the Chinese authorities appear to have taken no action. Foreigners have of course been involved and have suffered losses as a result of the failure and the Chambers of Commerce and Consular Body have, as a result of the apparent inactivity of the officials, taken up the matter with a view to obtaining a true statement of affairs. It would certainly seem to be the thing, if the bank is insolvent, to wind up its affairs and, if the failure is found to be the result of corruption, as is in some circles suspected, to bring those responsible to justice. There will no doubt be further developments in time but up to the present there is nothing else to report.

THE STORY OF THE RHEINLAND.

On the 7th instant, we had a very heavy snowstorm and this was the cause of a temporary disaster to the Hamburg-Amerika motor-ship Rheinland. In trying to enter the harbour here the captain apparently mistook the northwest point of the Bluff for the islands which lie off Chefoo and the result was that he found himself, in a very short time, ashore about 10 miles northwest of Chefoo, just at the mouth of the Freshwater River.

Luckily for all concerned the vessel ran ashore on a sandy beach. The most unfortunate circumstance in connexion with the standing was that the vessel went ashore at high water and on an exceptionally high tide. The China Navigation Company's steamer Tungchow went to her assistance and attempted, in conjunction with a salvage tug which came from Dairen, to tow the vessel into deep water but, owing to the very boisterous weather which followed for several days after the incident, both vessels were unable to approach within sufficient distance of the Rheinland to enable them to make fast a tow line. It was not for several days that any communication with the ship could be effected. Meanwhile, she remained high and dry, resting on an even keel, and undamaged. The vessel was eventually refloated yesterday, after 17 days ashore, by the Japanese tug and the Shanghai Tug and Lighter Company's salvage boats St. Samson and St. Dominic. The accident will no doubt prove a very expensive one for the owning Company. It is particularly unfortunate for the Captain who, until this voyage, had a perfectly clean record of, I understand, over 25 years, as a result of which he was, just prior to sailing from Europe, presented with a certificate and the compliments of Lloyds.

During the period during which the Rheinland was ashore a Chinese-owned vessel the Yatung was also ashore on the sandspit running off Kungkungtao island, to the east of Chefoo. As in the case of the Rheinland, this vessel was refloated undamaged.

TROUBLE OVER THE HAI CHI.

The Chinese man-of-war Hai Chi arrived here about 10 days ago bringing with her about 400 men for the East Fort. I understand that these men were to take over and replace those then in occupation. There was some difficulty in effecting the transfer and I believe a little trouble. Details have already appeared in the Shanghai papers and, although I am on the spot, I am quite unable to obtain any accurate information. The matter has been kept very quiet locally and has in no way affected the peace and good order of Chefoo. The Hai Chi is still anchored in the bay.

THE TIENTSIN GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Chairman's Review at Annual Meeting: "Sovereign Rights" but No "Sovereign Obligations:" The Fraudulent Repudiation of Cotton Contracts

Tientsin News Service

Tientsin, Feb. 28.

The Tientsin General Chamber of Commerce held its annual general meeting yesterday in the Gordon Hall, Mr. E. C. Peters in the chair. The meeting was confined to hearing the Chairman's report for the past year and a short discussion on the suggestion to dissolve the Chamber in favour of a Committee of Chambers.

Mr. Peters, among other things in a lengthy report, said: "Politics interest this Chamber only in so far as they affect the business interests of its members. Unfortunately the state of chaos and disorder in many parts of China, and the want of authority on the part of the Central Government have shown the most serious effects on all branches of business. The most serious result of want of confidence is naturally immediately shown in the finances of the country." Stressing the irresponsibility of military and bandit elements the chairman went on to say that, "It is of almost daily occurrence that both foreign and native staffs (of the railways) are interfered with by the military, which culminated in the Fengtai outrage, where Mr. Bessell was grievously injured, and the culprit is still at large." Mr. Peters added that "the finances of the railways are as is only to be expected, in a parlous state, many of the lines being practically bankrupt."

IMPROVEMENT OF THE HAIHO.

Dealing with the improvement of the Haiho channels by the Haiho River Conservancy, the Chairman said that the "signalled depth of the Taku Bar increased from 8'3" to 10' Taku Datum during the past year. This is by far the greatest depth recorded and. . . it may safely be assumed that at spring tides in the months of July-August-September this year there will be from 19'6" to 20' signalled on the bar; 18' will be normal and it will be only on rare occasions that vessels drawing 16 feet cannot cross the bar."

On the subject of the Chambers' anxious inquiries in 1914 of the Government as to when the Taku Wireless station would be completed, the Chairman inferred there was as yet no reply. He said "This is one more example of Sovereign Rights with no regard to Sovereign Obligations. At present, in order to communicate with ships nearing the Bar it is necessary to telegraph to Dairen or Chefoo to wireless from there."

THE PIECEGOODS CRISIS.

The Chairman dealt at length with the repudiation, last autumn, by dealers and Tsans, of forward contracts for raw cotton. 285,000 piculs were contracted for, 145,000 by foreign firms, 100,000 by Japanese and 45,000 by local mills, at prices ranging between Tls. 27 and Tls. 28 a picul. Shortly after the earthquake in Japan, Japanese began buying frantically to replace destroyed goods, especially for quilts and clothing. This, and the bad crop reports in America, drove the prices up to Tls. 48. "This temptation," declared the Chairman, "was too much for the greed of the unscrupulous dealers and Tsans. Cotton destined for foreign firms, who had, in good faith, bought and sold, was diverted to Japanese buyers." During October the Committee of the Chamber approached the Consular body, asking them to bring the seriousness of the matter to the attention of the Civil Governor.

"In the meantime," said Mr. Peters, "the cotton dealers tried by every means, such as using false chops, exchanging and destroying transit passes at the last customs barrier, to keep the cotton away from the legitimate buyers."

The Committee had many meetings with the Civil Governor and the Police Administrator, General Yang I-teh, and although they appeared to be giving very active assistance, affairs remained at a deadlock right up to the middle of December. "When you remember," the Chairman went on, "that contracts mostly called for October-Novemeber-December shipment you can imagine the great loss suffered by exporters." Eventually Yang I-teh obtained a promise from the Tsans to deliver up to 50 per cent. of the contracts, either in cash or in cargo, the balance to be subject to negotiations. In this connexion Yang I-teh suggested a levy of five mace per picul should be made on all cotton coming into Tientsin thereby to create a fund which would be used to reimburse losses on defaulted contracts. "A special committee of this Chamber," said the Chairman, "drew up a scheme which was passed at an Extraordinary Meeting, on December 21, 1923, and duly transmitted to the Senior Consul. It was, however, not supported by the whole trading community and was dropped."

NEW MACHINERY IN VIEW.

In connexion with this matter Mr. Peters said, "Negotiations with the dealers were made more difficult by the extraordinary attitude taken by the Civil Governor in stating that forward contracts were illegal, as they constituted a gamble. This statement of his could not be allowed to pass and the Committee made representations to the Consular Body. There are several of the large Tsans, who could easily fulfil their contractual obligations, but there is no machinery to force them to do so. The matter is still under discussion, but with no solution in sight."

Later in his report, Mr. Peters said, "I think the cotton crisis proved that this Chamber does not represent all various national interests in the Port and later on I shall bring forward a proposal that this Chamber be dissolved and replaced by a Committee of Chambers."

THE OUTLOOK GLOOMY.

Referring to prospects of trade in 1924: "I am afraid I must strike a pessimistic note. The disorders and banditry throughout the country, coupled with fear of civil strife, are causing nervousness among Chinese merchants, which is reflected in the very bad state of the import trade. It is the hope of all foreign merchants, and I am sure also of our Chinese friends, that a strong man may arise and give the Central Government the requisite authority throughout the country, to enable it to put it's house in order." This ended the Chairman's report.

The meeting then discussed the proposal to dissolve the Chamber and the formation in its stead of a Committee of the Associated Chambers of Commerce. It was decided, in view of the pending negotiation with the Cotton Tsans and other matters not yet cleared up, to postpone consideration of the proposal for six months.

The meeting then elected, as committee for the coming year, Messrs. E. C. Peters, H. F. Dyott, E. K. Lowry, Marcel Wolfers, G. Colmet and J. Lange.

THE NEW TAYEH

Great Ironworks again at Full Blast: A Centre of Industrial China

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tayeh, Hup., Feb. 22.

To those who pass up and down river on steamers and to many others Tayeh means a certain port on the right bank of the Yangtze half way between Hankow and Kiukiang. They see, if they are coming up river, first a full ironworks plant belching forth smoke by day and brilliantly lighted up at night. They see a railway of which this is the riverside terminus. They perhaps hear a blast and see a huge piece of rock fall down a hundred or more feet to be afterwards used in bunding. They see neat rows of foreign-looking houses and further on many more houses not so neat. They see more tall chimneys of a factory and an aerial railway conveying bags of cement a distance of half a mile to a riverside wharf. They also see scattered about a good many lime-kilns. These last existed before the other things named and give the name to the place, Shih-huei-yao (lime kilns).

We who live at the real Tayeh, which is the county town 50 li inland, are rather jealous of this newer place being so often called Tayeh. It is all the Tayeh some people know about and yet its only claim to be called such is that it is in the county of Tayeh. On an average we get a letter a day delivered at our house at Tayeh which we have to re-address to Shih-huei-yao. Granted that Tayeh is easier to write and pronounce. Then let Shih-huei-yao be called Tayeh port. This would be on the analogy of Yochow and distinction would be made.

Into the internal affairs of the great Han Yeh-ping Co. we do not profess to be able to probe. A little while ago they were so deeply involved in debt that it looked as if their Japanese creditors would have to take the concern over. The mine at Iron Mountain, some 50 li from the river, was closed and the one a few miles away on a branch line alone was worked. Other economies were effected, not the least of which was the closing of the blast furnaces at Hanyang. Now, however, they seem to be looking up again, for both mines are in full work and the one blast furnace at Shih-huei-yao—people who don't know will call it "Tayeh"—is producing pig iron at the rate of 200,000 tons a year. Next year they say another furnace will be ready so that in 1925, 400,000 tons may be expected.

FOREIGNERS DISCHARGED.

We cannot think that they have bettered them themselves by dismissal of all foreigners. The Cement Works also, which before the war had a German and then took a Dane instead and after him another German, have lately made things so unpleasant for the latter that he has left. In these cases we expect to find gradual deterioration of plant and by and by some big accident that will bring things to a standstill. Then another foreign manager will be needed.

Such an important place as this Tayeh port has become makes it a crying need that at least one of the steamer companies should make it a stopping place. We thought the Japanese company would be the most likely to do so because of the Japanese interests there. There are a few Japanese gentlemen living there with their families in large foreign houses and frequently there are Japanese business visitors. This is mainly on account of the ore from the Iron Mountain which is all the time being shipped to Japan as part of the Boxer Indemnity. So we asked the Nisshin Kisen Kaisha if they did not think it would be to their advantage to stop their steamers here. They replied that they would gladly do so but the Chinese authorities would not allow them to. Why? We wonder.

The consequence is that we have to go another 10 li to Huang-shih-kang to get a big steamer. If we go by water it is generally slow progress because of the swift current and the nature of the bank which precludes tracking. If by road then our reflexions on the ineptness of the Chinese are far from flattering to them. How they can be content to go on year after year slipping and stumbling along that devious though much traversed route passes our comprehension. There ought years ago to have been a hard and straight, if not wide, road along which bicycles and rickshas at least could run.

NEGLECTED RAILWAY.

Before we get into Huang-shih-kang we pass the rail-head of the Tupeh Government Mining Railway by which ore is brought from the iron mine at the Elephant and Nose Mountain. This line of only four years' existence is in a shocking condition as regards its road bed. The sleepers are rotting away all the time and the gang of platelayers is all too inadequate for fitting in new timber where needed. Many sleepers are missing and others are in the last stage of corruption. We are told that the timber is of a non-durable, soft quality and creosote has not been used to keep out the moisture. It is the usual penny wise and pound foolish policy.

Let us finish by recording one creditable piece of Chinese enterprise. Some 90 li higher up the Yangtze is a small river which flows down from the husy town of Kinniu. It used to be a vast lake every summer from its mouth to the Yangtze, a distance of 90 li and a steamer used to ply on it for six months. In the winter with the fall of the big river the lake disappeared and a network of streams with reeds and rushes took its place. A dam and sluice have recently been constructed at the Yangtze end and now the high water of summer does not get in to flood the land and the winter does not bring about a stream so shallow as to be unnavigable. The bed of the lake that was can now be tilled. Already we have seen Chinese surveyors at work re-mapping the area. (The authorities have fresh taxation in view.) Steamers can now run, and do run, the double distance all the year round on a stream which remains always at practically one level. May not this be counted to the Chinese for righteousness?

HANKOW MILITARISTS SEEKING FUNDS

Only $500,000 Needed

Hankow, Mar. 1.

Owing to the shortage of military funds, Gen. Hsiao Yao-nan, Tuchun of Hupeh, last night asked the Chairman of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and the President of the Chinese Bankers' Association here for the accommodation of half-a-million loan until the middle of March. It appears, however, that the money-market of Hankow is not in a position to accommodate such a large sum of money at the present time.

Rumour has it that there are not a few among the financial circles here who are opposed to the proposal on the ground that the sum thus raised will without doubt be utilized as military funds of the northern expeditionary forces against Szechuan.—Eastern News Agency.

A. P. C. GODOWN IN PEKING DESTROYED BY FIRE

Good Work by Chinese Firemen.

Peking, Feb. 27.

A fire broke out on the Asiatic Petroleum Company's godown premises outside the Hatamen yesterday morning at 4 o'clock. The godown and a small shed were completely destroyed. Fortunately the tank was not injured. Chinese living on the premises state that the place was locked up as usual on Monday night and they heard an explosion at 4 o'clock next morning. No one had entered the premises meanwhile.

A Chinese fire brigade soon appeared on the scene and did excellent work in restricting the area of the fire. There is said to be little doubt that the Standard Oil Company's godown next door would have been destroyed, but for the work of the Chinese firemen.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEW SPIRIT VISIBLE IN JAPAN

An Age of Upheaval: Loyalty to the Throne Unquestioned but Dissatisfaction with Government

By Our Tokio Correspondent.

The recent dastardly attempt on the life of Prince Hirohito, Heir to the Japanese Throne; the frequent invasions of the homes of high statesmen by commoners who committed acts of vandalism there and terrified Cabinet ministers; the loud cries heard on all sides that a class war in Japan is definitely on; the antipathy expressed towards the Kiyoura Cabinet on the ground that it is a Ministry of the privileged classes; the lamentably boorish scenes created on the floor of the Japanese Diet necessitating dissolution of the legislative chambers; and, now, the disclosure of a plot by Toshihiko Sakai and other syndicalists and communists to establish a Soviet Republic in Japan—all these things are raising in the minds of people the question as to whether grave political possibilities, involving even revolution, are looming on Japan's horizon.

Premier Kiyoura, on more than one occasion, deplored what he called the "drifting of the nation towards flippancy, extravagance and radicalism," and has just called on all the religious leaders in the country—Christian, Shinto and Buddhist alike—to arrest the progress of radicalism and extreme ideas prevalent in the country and to uplift the nation spiritually, which, according to him, is the only way to foster the welfare and prosperity of the Empire.

Viscount Takahashi, at one time Premier and to-day leader of the largest political party in the Japanese Lower House, has also often voiced his fears that revolutionary dangers were looming in a distant horizon true, but still a horizon that is not so distant that the far-seeing cannot vision it.

IMPERIAL FAMILY RESPECTED.

In the allegiance that the Japanese people unswervingly, unstintingly and unquestioningly have accorded the Imperial Family on the wane as the result of the flood of new thought that rushed in since the war? I sought a reply to this very ticklish subject—for Japan—from people in various walks of life, from peers and commoners, from clerks and educationists, from avowed conservatives and blatant radicals. The consensus of opinion was that such was not the case, that the affection and esteem in which the nation holds the Reigning House has not weakened one jot or tittle, but that, with the spread of education and the broadening of the minds of the present generation, especially in the larger cities, there is no longer the desire or the feeling to look upon the Imperial Family as divine. In fact, one man of confessed Communist tendencies told me that the greatest difficulty the socialists, anarchists and radicals in Japan were confronted with in spreading their doctrines was the intense affection with which the general public alluded to the Reigning House and the obvious love with which the Imperial House is regarded.

Conservatives, the privileged classes and the captains of industry and finance simply scoff at the idea that a mental change in the attitude of the people towards the Imperial Family exists. One of these, the Director of the Mitsubishi Bank, said that it was absolutely absurd even to imagine such a probability. None the less, he admitted that there is more discontent in the country to-day than there has ever been—than there was even during the Satsuma rebellion—and that this discontent is all the more disconcerting because it is accompanied with a wave of flippancy and recklessness, but declared that no dissatisfaction whatever was felt towards the Reigning House. The Imperial House is the bed-rock on which is reared Japan's social, political and national structure and herein lies the importance of the Imperial Family to the nation.

Japan is not likely to go extremist—whether this extremism take the form of either Socialism, Republicanism or Bolshevism—so long as the present harmonious relations between the Ruling House and the nation in general continues, and there is not the slightest sign of the bond of affection welding the Throne and the people weakening.

The Japanese have always insisted that, whatever the causes of conflict or friction between the governing classes and the governed, the Imperial House should be meticulously guarded from being embroiled in any political or social clash. This has always been closely and scrupulously followed and accounts for why a howling, fighting bedlam, such as the Lower House of the Japanese Diet was on the last day of January this year, simply froze into silence and attention when the Premier announced that he had a message to be delivered to the Solons from the Prince Regent. The message was an order of dissolution.

PRINCE REGENT'S ATTACKER.

It has been conclusively proved, in the course of the preliminary examinations, that Namba, the 24-year-old man who attempted to assassinate the Prince Regent on December 27 when His Imperial Highness was proceeding to the Diet, was not connected with any secret society or radical organization. Questioned as to why he made the murderous attempt, he replied that it was because he was dissatisfied with life, and thought such action the best means of attracting attention. The desire to bask in the reflected glory of regicide was irresistible. Namba, medical opinion states, is of unsound mind, has been smitten for years with an incurable disease and is known to have been of an innately morbid disposition for some years past as a consequence.

It is not irrelevant here to touch briefly on Japanese psychology when it deals with murder and suicide. The murderer or suicide—especially the latter—in Japan always desires to have a companion in shuffling off this mortal coil. This accounts for the large number of double suicides and double murders in the country. Namba, according to a voluntary confession made by him, had determined to bid adieu to life. He found it a very cold and cheerless world, especially after the earthquake. Desiring some one to accompany him to the Valley Beyond, he hit upon the grandiose scheme of taking along with him the highest in the land and at the same time carving for himself a niche in history.

Much speculation is being indulged in now as to whether Imperial clemency will commute the death sentence that is sure to be pronounced on Namba by the Supreme Court—for Japanese law demands the lives of those who endanger the lives of members of the Reigning House. The people generally do not think a reprieve should be granted and many of those with whom I have talked expressed the opinion that mercy in this case would be an error of judgment.

THE PEOPLE EVER CONSERVATIVE.

An incident which occurred during the September earthquake gives an insight into the feelings of the lower classes with regard to whether they favour a change in the present social system. It occurred in Honjo, a section of Tokio where are the slums, and where the poorest of the people live, where, it is not unreasonable to presume, the radical has a more fruitful field in reviling the capitalist and inciting the poor against the rich. As the fires were sweeping the area, a young man, hardly beyond man's estate, waved his hands joyfully exclaiming: "The day has come at last. The capitalists are being punished. Rejoice, for this is Heaven's vengeance!" He was literally torn hand and limb and the mangled body thrown into the gutter. That is the general attitude of the people towards those who attempt to tamper with the present social fabric. Equality by universal wretchedness, the Japanese do not want. The stark brutality and loathesomeness of what had occurred in Russia is not absent from the mind of the average Japanese.

JAPAN'S GREATEST DANGER.

"The Japanese have become a spoilt race," one of the directors of a banking house that has branches all over the world was telling me as we sat sipping weak tea and discussing the trend of thoughts of the people. "I cannot expect much from the present generation. Fifty years ago, Japan was a terra incognita; today she is a world power. The thrift and industry of the Meiji era did that. The present generation has lost all thought of honest and steady effort. The whole nation, from top to bottom, is pervaded with a spirit of morbid laziness. Instead of saving by hard toil and arduous work, every one is dreaming of making easy money in one stroke. The Japanese have acquired the habit of get-rich-quick-and-anyhow. They are out-Ponzing Ponzi. It can't be done."

He spoke in short quick sentences, biting his cigarette. "Our exports will dwindle. More loans will become necessary. One day there will be refusal to accommodate us with funds and, at the same time, we shall be called to account. Then only, perhaps, will the Japanese people awake."

The money Japan made during the war he set down as the "curse which has enslaved the nation in flippancy and make-believe luxury. Young men, trained only to drive pens, are finding it difficult to earn a living. Recently, we wanted 10 clerks. We received more than 300 applications. These others cannot do manual labour. What can they do? Japan's greatest danger lies within herself, not without."

HONGKONG SWEEP DISPUTE

Missing Derby Sweep Ticket Found in Losing Claimants' House

A remarkable situation arises in Hongkong in consequence of the discovery of the missing ticket (No. 3066) which won the Hongkong Chinese Club Derby Sweep on the 1923 Derby. The ticket was lost when the race was over, and two claimants came forward for the prize, though neither could produce the ticket. Mr. Chik Soong-ling, of Shanghai, was one claimant and Mrs. Violet Chan, of Hongkong, was the other.

An arbitration was held at the Chinese Club, presided over by members of the committee, and both counsel and solicitors were engaged to argue the claims. Mr. Chik Soong-ling alleged that on the day of the race Mr. Sydney Ng Quinn, brother of Mrs. Violet Chan, obtained the winning ticket from him by a pretext when they were both in Shanghai. On the other hand, Mrs. Chan alleged that her brother sold the ticket to her at their house in Arbuthnot Road, Hongkong. Then, she said, they moved from that house to Robinson Road and it was during the removal that the ticket was lost.

In their award the Arbitrators "substantially accepted" Chik Soong-ling's story and "entirely rejected" the evidence offered by Mrs. Violet Chan. The money was therefore awarded to Chik Soong-ling and Sydney Ng Quinn was expelled from the Club inasmuch as he was suspected of underhand dealings in this matter.

Now comes the bombshell. Mrs. Chan's former house at Arbuthnot Road has been overhauled, and the missing ticket has accidentally come to light, torn and crumpled but with the number and everything complete. It appears to have been used as packing by a female servant of the house, who failed to realize its value.

Mrs. Chan is renewing her claim to the prize and Mr. Sydney Ng Quinn is applying for reinstatement at the Club. According to the "South China Morning Post" proceedings for libel are to be renewed against the successful claimant by his formerly unsuccessful opponents.

The dispute aroused considerable interest in Hongkong, for a number of well known foreigners were involved. Amongst other witnesses were Mr. G. K. Hall Brutton and Mr. C. A. Russ (of Hongkong) and Mr. P. W. Goldring (of Shanghai).

HARBIN RUSSIANS ALARMED

Antagonism of Local Chinese: Fresh Demands for M. Ostroumoff's Resignation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin Feb. 25.

Excitement created in the local Russian press concerning the possibilities of further hostile demonstrations by the Chinese against Russians in Harbin is subsiding.

Russians, however, feel that the demonstration at the Railway Offices was only the beginning of more serious outbursts against them, especially as the Fuchiatien newspapers have been carrying on what is termed by Russians an anti-Russian campaign for some months past.

The chief of the Information Bureau of the Administrator's Office has issued a statement which says that it was known to the authorities that Chinese public organizations were about to demonstrate against Mr. Ostroumoff, on account on an insult they considered they had suffered by the production of "The Mandarin's Son." Mr. Ostroumoff, it is said, refused to apologize to the Chinese present at the performance.

As to taking due precautions, the authorities, anxious to avoid a repetitions of what has taken place in Peking, resolved not to employ force until it was absolutely necessary. The crowd was nearly 5,000 strong when they left Fuchiatien, but as a strong police detachment in plain clothes accompanied the demonstrators no trouble was expected.

Gen. Chu has issued a proclamation saying that Russians need not be alarmed in any way. He will not permit any hostile demonstrations against them and instructions have been issued to the police to this effect. Orders have also been received from Marshal Chang Tso-lin forbidding such disorderly scenes.

There are numerous Russians in Harbin who have no love for Mr. Ostroumoff, but they have stood beside him in this instance because they firmly believe that the Chinese also entertain a hostile feeling against all Russians. The Chinese insist that it is Ostroumoff and his supporters who are trying to foment conspiracies among the railwaymen. He is, accused of stirring up racial prejudice, in order to secure support from all Russians.

It is thought unlikely that any more demonstrations of a similar sort will take place, for the authorities see that the object of the first not only failed to hit the mark, but has also considerably alarmed all Russians. Other tactics will no doubt be resorted to and pressure brought to bear in certain quarters, as Ostroumoff's agreement with the railway has expired. No doubt the matter will be settled in Mukden, to which place Mr. Rendre, head of the Russo-Asiatic Bank (which engaged Mr. Ostroumoff) is leaving in a few days and where Dr. C. C. Wong, President of the Railway, is expected to arrive from Peking on his way to Harbin about the same time.

THE ATHLETIC YOUNG WOMEN OF JAPAN

First Women's National Tennis Championship Announced

Tokio, Feb. 26.

Announcement is made to-day of the leading tennis tournaments in Japan for the coming season, and it is significant of the growing interest in sport among Japanese of both sexes that a competition, entitled the National Women's Tennis Championship, should be for the first time arranged for women players.

Girl students have already taken part in several local tennis tournaments, and also in the Far Eastern Olympic Tennis games last spring, and some of these have shown distinct promise.

The women's tournament takes place in Tokio, about the middle of May, while the corresponding national championship for men is

SHENSI MAGISTRATE TAKEN TO TASK

Revolt of People against Intolerable Extortions by His Uncle's Nephew

From Our Own Correspondent.

Sianfu, Shen., Feb. 15.

It is sometimes a very great advantage to have a friend in the place of power and the Weinan magistrate has this advantage, for his uncle is a General in the district. This being the chief qualification for the position, he is, as may be expected, very unpopular and although the people have made the proper protestations against his depredations these have failed to bring them any redress.

It is said that even a worm will turn and recently the people of Weinan struck terror into the heart of this youth, who would be well advised if he saw fit to seek a less responsible post. The people have been taxed, and taxed beyond endurance, but with the last demand of 700 cash a mow, the people came to the city to "Chiao Lung." This is an extreme measure, a sort of general strike, when every house sends its man with an agricultural implement of one sort or another, demonstrating the fact that it is impossible to till the land under the imposed conditions and that they wish to hand over their tools to their traditional father but actual oppressor.

Such occasions are often attended by bloodshed nor was this an exception. The soldiers closed the city gates and thereby averted a calamity, but the deputy of the official was beaten to death when he tried to represent the cause of the magistrate; two other lives also were taken. The magistrate tried to escape but failing in this it is said he humbled himself to the dust, wept before the people, knocked his head on the ground to them and promised to do better in the future.

It is said that his uncle, the General, has given him a very severe scolding, but the unfortunate thing is that he has not yet been sent home out of hand.

TYPICAL DISHONESTY.

With the prospect of the railway soon reaching Shanchou in Honan, a series of bridges has been partially constructed between that city and Tungkuan with the intention of extending the motor road from Sian to the railhead, but alas! while this work has been proceeding the fleet of cars in possession of the company has been deteriorating with such rapidity, that now out of more than 20 cars, only one is able to run, hence the whole system has been almost suspended. There may be a car a week, there may be none. It is a very great pity that these lamentable conditions should exist solely for want of any one who has any practical knowledge of how such a business should be managed.

It is a fact that on the stretch of road between Sian and Tungkuan not a single man was employed in road repairing, while there were numbers of officials sitting at headquarters drawing pay for what I cannot tell, whereas a few men employed here and there on the road would have prevented much damage to the cars and maintained the service at a fraction of the loss entailed by the disablement of the cars.

QUOTING Virgil in the House of Commons, Sir Philip Lloyd Greame was met with cries of "What's that?" and promptly translated Non tali auxilio nec defensoribus istic into "We decline to be under the red flag or to sail under the Jolly Roger." That was quite amusing, though hardly helpful to Glasgow M.P.'s, athirst for the wisdom of the ages, remarks the "Observer." But it is evident that this is going to be the least Horatian of all Parliaments. The news of the Address was wisely withheld from the public lest it bring tears to their eyes.

GLIMPSE INTO JAPAN'S POLITICAL UNDERWORLD

The Chief Actors in the Alleged Communist Plot against the State: Leader Who Inspired the Modern Radical Movement: Personnel of Prospective "Soviet" Cabinet

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Feb. 16.

In connexion with the arrest of the 29 Socialists who stand committed for trial for alleged participation in a Communist plot against the State, it is now learned that they were rushed out of their beds one early morning, prior to the earthquake, packed into Black Marias and at once placed in strict confinement. They were then put through the third degree and the evidence extorted.

Such evidence is regarded as perfectly legal in Japan and proved, so the police aver, that the danger of a revolution was very real, and that Japan's Communists had been in active association with Soviet emissaries from whom they had received, mostly viâ Shanghai, considerable sums of money for propaganda purposes, a good amount of explosives and trunks full of pamphlets dealing with the "Utopia" Japan would become once the present social system were overturned and Japan's radicals were directing the destinies of this Empire.

Then came the heaving of the so-called terra firma, and the conflagrations that followed the seismic upheavals. Prisons took fire and convicts had to be released. The lack of space in the penitentiaries compelled the authorities to put several of these into one large room, instead of keeping them in isolated and segregated cells as had been done up to the time of the quakes. The confusion that resulted and the fact that these conspirators were able to talk freely with each other made subsequent examinations by the police useless.

"PRESIDENT OF JAPAN SOVIET."

Toshihiko Sakai, one of the most notorious of Japan's radical thinkers, had been proclaimed the head thhe "Soviet Republic of Japan" when that had been formed. Sakai is said to be a man of considerable talent and initiative for it was only after he threatened to have nothing to do with the movement unless he were appointed "Supreme Executive," that he was named as the first "President" of the "Soviet Republic of Japan."

Sakai and Ohsugi (who was murdered by a captain of gendarmerie in the confusion that followed the September earthquake) were the fountain head and inspiration of the Socialist and radical movement in Japan. Both of them were thorns in the side of the police and there is no doubt that the latter breathed a long sigh of relief when Ohsugi's career was tragically cut short on September 16 last year by Capt. Amakasu. Sakai, at the time, was in gaol, awaiting trial for the plot which the police have only now disclosed.

DAUGHTER A RADICAL, TOO.

Toshihiko Sakai first came into the limelight of notoriety when he flaunted a Red Flag in the face of a policeman during a labour demonstration held in the Uyeno Park. This was some 20 years ago, so that it can be seen that the radical movement in Japan is not an off-shoot of the Russian revolution, though there is no doubt that the crude attempt at a form of democracy made by the Russians has left a strong mark on the labour and socialist movement in Japan.

The daughter of the ephemeral President of the Japan Soviet is one of the most radically inclined women of this country. She has been put behind the stone walls of prisons and the iron bars of police cells several times, chiefly for assaulting policemen, and it used to be one of her bombastic claims to distinction that she was the most imprisoned woman in Japan. I recall a rather comic episode of a couple of years ago when I heard Miss Magara Sakai —that is the name of the daughter of the man who had been proclaimed the guiding spirit of post-revolution Japan lecturing on the "injustice of the present social system." As she stepped on the high pedal and commenced pouring vitriol on everything and sundry, except, of course, the saintly radical thinkers, a policeman stepped up closer to the soap-box orator. She then levelled broadside after broadside on the "stupidity" and "cowardly nature" of the police whom she dubbed the "parasites and serfs of the privileged classes." Stepping side she caught the diminutive limb of the law—Miss Sakai is a rather well-developed virago—a clout on his head with the red parasol that she always carries. Of course, she was soon over powered and taken to prison. But that was, perhaps, what she was hankering after.

SAKAI'S "CABINET."

It was soon after Toshihiko Sakai introduced the Red Flag into Japan by pushing it against the nose of a policeman—and getting a gaol sentence for impeding officers of the law in the execution of their duties—that the notorious Kotoku Shusui affair was unearthed, when Kotoku and several of his associates were proved to have conspired against the life of the Emperor Meiji, to assassinate high officials and peers wholesale, and precipitate revolution and anarchy in the land. Kotoku and 12 of his fellow-criminals were hanged, reports difficult to authenticate declaring that they were hanged together in a row on a specially constructed scaffold and that their death agonies lasted no less than a half-hour.

Associated with Toshihiko Sakai, "the Supreme Dictator"—on paper—were the following who were to form the Cabinet of the "Soviet Republic of Japan":—

Secretary to the "Chief Executive"	Genza Nakasone.
Foreign Minister	Professor Gaku Sano.
Home Minister	Tokio Hashiuse.
War Minister	Yoshi Ichikawa.
Minister of Labour	Watanabe.
Minister of Education	Professor Tsunao Inomata.
Minister of Agriculture	Takeo Urata.

A split over the manner in which money received from Moscow had been expended furnished the police with the most useful clue in unearthing the conspiracy. The amount directly involved was comparatively trivial, amounting to Y.6,000. This sum of money was entrusted to one Hebei Takao —a radical who was afterwards shot and killed by a member of an anti-Bolshevist association—and, at a meeting of Japan's political underworld, Takao was taxed with having misappropriated Y.2,000 of the sum. His defence was that he was not the only one who had performed such feats, and, in a bitterly ironic speech streaked with sarcasm, the accused man charged everyone of the Communist party with having also misappropriated funds. The breach widened and the police managed to get enough of information to warrant a raid. The raid was made in May last year and valuable documents relating to various phases of activity, letters confirming the receipt of money from Moscow and a sum of cash was seized by the authorities.

The clever manner in which the conspirators communicated with each other proved to be the most difficult nut for the police to crack, but, the disunion in the ranks of the champions of the "proletariat" enabled the police to secure the noms-de-plumes under which the agitators masqueraded and even to decipher the secret codes which the police seized at the time of the raids.

"WHO'S WHO" AMONG CONSPIRATORS.

The man appointed to be the secretary to Toshihiko Sakai, who was to be made another Lenin and be clothed with all the pomp, power and autocratic authority of a dictator, was a close friend of Sakai. The others who were given portfolios in the ephemeral Soviet Republic of Japan were regarded by Communist circles here as being specially adapted for the particular lines of activity they were to head.

Prof. Gaku Sano, who was to be Foreign Minister, was till very recently a member, the faculty of Waseda University, and has a close grasp on the world of the international movement. His whereabouts are not known to the authorities. Some report that he is in Shanghai; other that he was seen in Harbin in the company of profusely-bearded Russians; while yet others declare that he is in Moscow. Miss Joffe, daughter of Comrade Adolph Joffe, is said to have brought from Professor Sano a letter to his fellow-Communists here.

Prof. Tsunao Inomata, who was to take the portfolio of Education, also belonged to the faculty of Waseda University. Here he is said to have delved into the mysteries of Socialism, fell in love with a Russia young lady attending the same university, and married her. It is strange that Waseda University, founded by the late Marquis Okuma, a conservative of conservatives, has furnished two of the principal leaders in the futile attempt to subvert the established authority and social system of the Empire.

PRINCE MATSUKATA'S ILLNESSS

A Last Hour Recovery

Tokio, Mar. 2.

Prince Matsukata and Mark Twain have much in common. The death of the former was also greatly exaggerated.

By what medical men pronounce a miraculous recovery, the Prince, yesterday reported dead, is still living, with a bare chance of recovery.

Yesterday morning at 11.15 Prince Matsukata was pronounced to be dead. Respiration of the heart had stopped, but shortly after that he showed signs of recovery, which were faint till the afternoon, when he acknowledged the hand pressure of Viscount Makino, the Emperor's Messenger. This morning the Prince took nourishment and is now asleep.

All the Tokio papers but two carried stories of the aged statesman's death.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Note:—Prince Matsukata, "An Elder Statesman," was born in 1840 at Kagoshima. He was connected with the Treasury soon after the advent of Meiji and in 1881 became Minister of Finance, continuing as such for more than 10 years. In 1891 Prince Matsukata formed a Cabinet and had to assume the portfolio of Finance on the occasion of the Japan-China War. His second Ministry from 1896 to 1897 is memorable for the establishment of the gold standard and also for the conclusion of an entente with the Progressives, which later came to an abrupt end, causing the collapse of the Cabinet. Prince Matsukata was Finance Minister in the Yamagata Ministry which followed his own. He was created a Privy Councillor in July, 1903, and Lord Keeper of the Seals in 1917, resigning in 1922. In 1902 he travelled through Europe and America. He was President of the Japan Red Cross Society from 1903 to 1912.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DIPLOMACY AT HARBIN

Consuls' Caution in C. E. Railway Dispute

A Harbin report quoted on Tuesday by "New Shanghai Life" states that the foreign Consuls in that city have received instructions from the Diplomatic Body in Peking concerning their attitude towards the Chinese demonstration recently held. They have been advised in every way to support the present status of the Chinese Eastern Railway, and warned that a wrong decision on this question may be fraught with consequences seriously affecting international interests in China, and particularly in Manchuria.

EARTHQUAKE CLAIMS CONTROVERSY

Japanese Government's Loan to Insurance Companies for "Sympathetic" Payments

Tokio, Feb. 26.

The announcement of the Cabinet's offer of the 50-year term loan of 80 million yen at the low rate of interest of four per cent. is hailed by the Press this morning as putting an end to a long-drawn-out controversy. It has been a controversy which has taken on many aspects and been variously reported since the last Cabinet began urging the insurance companies to pay "sympathy" money to the policy holders and offered to assist in these payments.

The question seemed to have been settled by the late Government, until the Diet refused even to discuss the proposals that were put forward.

When the subject was reopened by the present Cabinet, the discussions on terms revealed considerable differences of opinion between the Departments concerned, the Department of Agriculture and Commerce urging as low a rate as 3½ per cent., while the Department of Finance declared that in view of the rate at which a domestic loan could be floated the figure suggested was absurd.

Again, the insurance companies themselves have all along been divided on the question of payment or non-payment, the Osaka firms in particular, adopting a stubborn attitude towards the Government's policy.

Even now, some critics maintain that the Cabinet's present decision does not mean a final settlement, because the Government has still to negotiate with the companies as to their financial standing and the amount of assistance to which each is entitled.

The latest reports, however, seem to indicate that the 26 Tokio companies that will be benefited by the decision, have agreed to accept the offer, and are taking steps to persuade their colleagues in Osaka to fall into line with them so as to end the controversy once and for all.

PATIENCE EXHAUSTED.

It will be obvious that the slow progress made in the settlement of this question has gradually worn out the patience of the policy holders, who have all through been led to expect some sort of settlement of their claims by the insurance companies. For several days past they have made a public display of their grievances, besieging the offices of the Insurance Association, and the Government Departments concerned, and even threatening to camp out round the Premier's and the Agriculture Minister's official residences until the Government announced its intentions.

The offer, as it now stands, means that of the Tokio companies those financially able to do so will pay up to 10 per cent. of the claims arising out of the earthquake and fire, while those whose existence would be threatened by such a payment will be able to borrow from the Government on particularly easy terms.

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT.

It is further stated that preferential treatment is to be accorded to the holders of smaller policies, who will benefit to the full extent of 10 per cent., while a downward sliding scale will be applied in the case of those who were insured for comparatively larger amounts.

What effect this decision is likely to have on some of the other reconstruction schemes of the Government has yet to be seen. It is, however, already suggested that the monetary advance to the insurance companies must inevitably lead to the abandonment of the proposal to supply assistance towards the rehabilitation of industrial business, which has long been under consideration, and was at one time reported to have been determined.

Feb. 29.

The Government's insurance plan has received an unexpected set-back owing to the attitude of the Privy Council, to whom the plan is being submitted. The latter contend that the proposals should not be promulgated by Imperial Ordinance before the approval of the Diet has been secured, because the previous plan has already been vetoed. The Premier is trying to reconcile the views of the Cabinet and the Council.

Meanwhile the companies who do not require support are preparing to pay ten per cent. to the policy-holders on March 1.—

Mar. 6.

The Privy Council is unwilling to accept the Government's proposal to accept the Government's proposal to assist the weaker insurance companies to pay the 10 per cent. "sympathy" on insurance claims to the extent of Y.80,000,000, which will be lent to them at 4 per cent., the loan to be redeemable in 50 years.

It is understood that the Government has decided to pay the subsidy on its own responsibility, obtaining the sanction of the Diet afterwards.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Bitter Opponents Allied to Fight "Cabinet of Peers"

Tokio, Feb. 26

Though the real campaign, preliminary to the General Elections next May, is still some weeks ahead, a beginning has already been made with the announcement of platforms and the selection of candidates.

It will be remembered that shortly before the re-assembling of the Diet last month, the three chief political parties, Seiyukai, Kenseikai, and Kakushin Club, agreed to sink all their differences in order to combine and oust the common foe—the "Cabinet of the Peers." Their efforts at that time failing through the sudden dissolution of the Diet, they are still persisting in their purpose, and have just drawn up their platform for presentation to the electorate.

On this platform the principal planks are universal suffrage with the removal of all property qualifications, and reform of the House of Peers.

GROTESQUE ALLIANCES.

The intense opposition of party politicians to the Kiyoura government has made strange bedfellows and it is curious to find the more or less conservative Seiyukai in company with their bitter opponents, but both planks are popular battle-cries at present and are calculated to catch votes. Whatever the results of the election may be it is difficult to believe the much-advertized combination will survive the heat of the election battle, and it is considered likely that the old differences will appear again, unless, as is indeed quite probable between now and May, there may be an entirely new alignment of political factions.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BUSINESS IN KOREA AND MANCHURIA

Bank President's Optimism

Tokio, Feb. 26

The extension of lines of communication both in Korea and Manchuria has promoted the steady economic growth of both countries, said Mr. Nonaka, President of the Bank of Korea, in his review of conditions at the annual meeting of the bank's shareholders yesterday.

Both countries, he said, felt the effects of the disaster in Japan last September, but their recovery has been fairly rapid, and to-day conditions are almost back to normal.

Mr. Nonaka also attributed the progress made by Korea during the last 12 months to the development of cereal crops and to other staple products.

As regards Manchuria, the bank president did not speak so hopefully, though he foresaw increasing opportunities for spinning factories and steel works.

He warned those interested in industrial ventures in both countries against the possible effect of the economic situation in China, which he declared was hopelessly bad owing to the political instability in that country.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Mr. Mackay at the Head of the Poll: Mr. A. J. Hughes Again Unsuccessful

The Municipal Elections concluded at three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, and by six o'clock the scrutineers, Messrs. A. D. Bell and L. G. Westcott, had completed their work. The unlucky candidate—there being 10 nominations for nine seats, was Mr. A. J. Hughes, the Ratepayers' Association nominee. He was defeated by Mr. A. E. Baker, who polled 375 votes to his 288. Mr. E. F. Mackay topped the poll with 676. Mr. S. Sakuragi come a good second with 651. The total number of votes returned was 801, there being 16 irregular papers. Messrs. P. W. Massey (387) and A. E. Baker (375) each received less than half the total number of votes. The voting was as follows:—

Mackay, E. F.	676
Sakuragi, S.	651
Lambe, W. P.	509
Fessenden, S.	506
Knight, P. L.	477
Wilson, G. N.	447

A SHANGHAI FIRM'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

Celebrations on Messrs. Caldbeck Macgregor's Sixtieth Anniversary

When last month "the Old Lady of The Bund" and other members of the family celebrated various coincident jubilees, it was a pleasure to acknowledge the assistance rendered by another ancient house—that of Messrs. Caldbeck, Macgregor & Co., Ld., and it was a greater pleasure on Monday evening to assist in the celebration of that firm's diamond jubilee. The firm is one of the oldest in the Far East and is as virile to-day as ever. The celebration took place in the Yih Ping Shan Hotel, the whole of which was taken over for the occasion. The front was brilliantly illuminated, prominent decorations being the British and Chinese colours, the hong flag and the hong name in Chinese characters. Inside the hotel was transformed with a very tasteful decorative scheme into which the American colours also were freely introduced, besides a number of Chinese congratulatory tablets.

The guests, of whom there were over 300, including the foreign members of the staff and Chinese agents and dealers, were welcomed by Messrs. J. F. and N. C. Macgregor (the governing directors), J. J. Sheridan (manager) and F. W. S. Evans (secretary) and passed on to an excellent entertainment provided by a very clever Chinese troupe of jugglers and musicians, who performed appropriately enough to an uninterrupted refrain from hidden artists on the Chinese fiddle and flute, whose masked music came quite near to being mistaken for "Grigor's Lament" or during moments of particular inspiration even for Rob Roy's particular fighting pibroch.

There followed an excellent dinner at which several congratulatory speeches were made, the climax being reached when a venerable Chinese rose and in one of the flowery periods of which his countrymen are such masters called upon the company to drink to the health of "the wine and spirit kings of the Far East." The phrase evidently had even more meaning for the Chinese than the translation did for the foreigners, for it was greeted with rounds of applause. Suitable responses were made and a very pleasant time was spent by all.

ANALYSIS OF NANKING MINT DOLLARS

Tests in the Presence of Well Known Local Bankers and Merchants

We are indebted to the Secretary of the General Chamber of Commerce of Shanghai for the following interesting report on an analysis of dollars, minted at Nanking, held at the Chamber on Monday in the presence of delegates of public bodies.

Report on the results of the analysis of portions of four dollars certified by the Nanking Mint to have been previously analyzed by Professor Mabee of the Shanghai College and also of a representative sample taken from twenty dollars which were drawn by Mr. W. G. Hollyer and Mr. Tsiang Zing-ching, representing the Foreign Exchange Banks and the Native Bankers' Guild respectively.

DYNAMITE DEPOT IN SHANGHAI

The Magazine on the Lower Huangpu and Safeguards Against Explosion

In our correspondence columns to-day will be found a letter from Mr. George Gundry on the subject of the Chinese Maritime Customs' depôt for the storage of explosives on the Pootung side of the river. The writer is of the opinion that the existence of this depôt so near to the Settlement constitutes a very serious danger, and he suggests startling consequences in the unhappy event of an explosion occurring, especially in view of the fact that the A. P. C. petrol depôt is within the vicinity of the powder magazine. Mr. Gundry concludes his letter with this warning:

"That this silent danger should be allowed to remain in its present primitive state with no effort to remedy it is needlessly exposing the Port of Shanghai with all its immense vested interests. It is a glaring case of how familiarity breeds contempt."

It may be said at once that the Harbour authorities are by no means indifferent to the importance of the matter, and having but lately produced an elaborate set of new regulations governing the storage and transport of dangerous materials, it is scarcely likely that they have overlooked the safety of the Customs' explosives depôt.

THE SITUATION.

This magazine is situated at Maluchiao, on the Pootung side of the river some six miles from the Garden Bridge, following the course of the river, and about five miles direct. It was established there 17 years ago and is still under the control of the foreigner first appointed there. During this time no mishap of any kind has occurred, and this at any rate shows that whatever criticism, if any, the place may be open to, supervision in the past has been careful. The depôt itself is some 600 ft. from the river bank, and a little over half a mile from the A.P.C. oil stores, as to the proximity of which our correspondent is so apprehensive.

We understand that at present there are 125 tons (measurement) of explosive in the stores, consisting of dynamite, gelatine, cordite and naval ammunition, with detonators stored in a separate building. The magazine is surrounded by a high and substantial embankment, designed to divert the force of an explosion upward, should an accident unfortunately occur, the roof being made of special light material for the same reason. Only the foreigner in charge has free access to the magazine, the exterior of which is constantly under the guard of selected Sikh watchmen. There is a special cooling apparatus for securing the correct dry temperature in summer. British gunboats docking at Shanghai leave their ammunition at this depôt, and this would seem to show that our naval authorities have confidence in its safety.

IF EXPLOSION OCCURRED.

An expert in munitions on Wednesday consulted by a representative of the "Nirth-China Daily News," did not share the view that an explosion would be so disastrous to the Settlement as Mr. Gundry suggests. He pointed out that the risk of explosion is of course inevitable wherever explosives may be stored, and it would be just as reasonable to declare that all the men-of-war anchoring off the Bund are a danger to the Settlement, since they carry a considerable quantity of high explosives. Everything depends upon supervision, and immunity from accident at the Customs magazine indicates that so far supervision has been adequate. The risk cannot be entirely eliminated, but it may be reduced to a mimimum by the keeping of exact records and the making of periodical tests, coupled with all other ordinary precautions. Where the Maluchiao magazine differs from depôts of this kind at Home is that the whole of the explosives are stored in one building, whereas it is usual to have a number of small ones set out at intervals over an extensive area, in many cases a good square mile or more of land. It is correct also, as Mr. Gundry points out, that the residence of the superintendent is close to the magazine; also that there is no telephonic communication with Shanghai. In the past, communication has been established by launch, in touch with the depôt almost every hour of the day.

If the situation is one involving any special danger, the fact has not escaped the attention of those responsible, and it may be pointed out that quite recently various improvements have been made. On the other hand, the time may well have arrived for changing the location of the magazine, whatever its margin of safety, the situation no longer being the completely isolated one it was when the depôt was established 17 years ago.

WEDDINGS

Phillips—Burtenshaw

A very pretty wedding took place on Saturday afternoon in Holy Trinity Cathedral when Miss Evelyn Marie Burtenshaw, daughter of the late Mr. Arthur Reaves Burtenshaw and Mrs. Burtenshaw of Taunton, was married to Mr. Thomas Phillips, son of the late Mr. Thomas Truslow Phillips, the Very Reverend Dean Symons performing the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by Mr. Herbert J. Andrews, wore a handsome gown of white French charmeuse with an overskirt of exquisite silver lace. The bodice and narrow cape sleeves were trimmed with rhinestones and pearls in graduated lines and the long girdle of charmeuse was caught up with a rhinestone star. The long tulle veil was held in place by a coronet of orange blossoms and the bridal bouquet was of lilies of the valley The matron of honour, Mrs. W. F. Corneck, wore old gold marrocain crêpe and carried sweet peas. Miss Constance Corneck, the bridesmaid, and Miss Joyce Andrews, the flower girl, wore shell pink crêpe satin, and carried respectively pink roses and a basket of rose petals. Master Kenneth Corneck acted as page. In the absence of the bride's mother, who is in England, Mrs. Roots, wife of Bishop L. H. Roots of Hankow, attended the service and assisted at the reception as the oldest friend of the bride's parents. Mr. T. Mason was best man and Messrs. W. Houston, P. W. V. Corneck and H. T. Andrews acted as ushers.

A very pleasant reception was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Warrington H. Corneck, 9a Chaufoong Road, at which many handsome and artistic gifts were displayed. The bridegroom's present to the bride was a beautiful diamond pendant. Other gifts of special significance were a silver frame from the nurses of the Victoria Nursing Home, a pair of silver vases from Admiral Lew and Admiral Kwong, a silver tea set and tray from the Chinese staff, as well as beautiful individual presents from the foreign staff of the Kiangnan Dock and Engineering Works.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Phillips left for Hangchow, the bride wearing a charming costume of the new deer shade cloth with fur collar, with a blouse oof tangerine crêpe de chine, braided in deer, navy and green.

Friedman—Raymond

Another pretty wedding was solemnized on Sunday afternoon in the Ohel Rachel Synagogue when Miss Kate Raymond, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Raymond, of Hongkong, and Mr. Max Friedman, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. S. Friedman, were married. The elaborate floral decorations were furnished by the Lewis Nurseries. The bride, who was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. J. H. Solomon, wore an effective gown of white marrocain, skilfully draped, with a side panel forming a train, caught at the side with a handsome buckle. The lace veil was embroidered with silver and the bridal bouquet was of white roses and ferns. The bridesmaids, Misses Mabel Solomon, Esther Sternberg, Naomi Joseph, Hannah Solomon, Florence Solomon and the flower girl, Miss Hilda Solomon, all wore taffeta and silver lace gowns in pastel shades of pink, lavender, pale blue and eau-de-nil and carried sweet peas and carnations. The matron of honour, Mrs. J. H. Solomon, sister of the bride, wore an original creation of pink and silver lace made over a green satin slip and carried pink carnations.

Mr. Max Sternberg was best man. The bride's gift to the bridegroom was a gold cigaretts case and gold match box while the bridegroom's gift to the bride was a diamond pendant and to the bridesmaids onyx rings set with a diamond. The reception, which was attended by hosts of friends, was held in the New Carlton Café, especially decorated for the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Friedman received their friends under a double floral bell. The bride's going away gown was of white brocaded silk, worn with a silver hat. After the honeymoon, which will be spent in Hangchow, the newly married pair will make their home in Saigon, where Mr. Friedman is manager and chief engineer of a large rice mill.

THE FINGER PRINT SYSTEM

Preliminary Steps for Its Introduction by the Local Native Constabulary

The interesting announcement was made on Tuesday that the Chinese constabulary of Shanghai and Woosung are about to establish the finger print system of identification, but the report was not quite correct in suggesting that a full working arrangement has been entered into with the Municipal Police. All that has happened is that a representative of the Chinese police who apparently has some knowledge of the system has approached the Commissioner of Police with a view to obtaining details of the very fine system which has gradually been built up, and presumably he will make the attempt to organize a similar department on the Chinese side.

The information asked for is very readily being given, the Municipal Police being anxious to assist the Chinese in the matter since, obviously, the working of an efficient finger print identification system on the Chinese side would be of very great value. For some years now the system has been applied by the Municipal and French Police and excellent results have been attained by the exchange of many thousands of prints. This same co-operation would be essential if the Chinese department is to be a success, and it is to be hoped that they will send a group of selected men for training and also take advantage of the experience of the Municipal Police in founding and building up their system, it being of the utmost importance that the work be done with care and precision.

Shanghai was the first city in China to adopt the system of identification by finger prints, an infallible means of identification, since no two prints have ever been found alike. Hongkong, Tientsin, and Hankow followed Shanghai's lead, and their participation tends to make the work of each more valuable. The Peking gendarmerie sent some of their men down to Shanghai for instruction in the system, but little is known as to the use they are making of it, no exchanges having been received from them. There can be no doubt but that a co-operative working arrangement between the Chinese and foreign police in this special department would be of immense advantage in the detection of criminals, and it to be hoped that the Shanghai Constabulary will get to work on a really efficient organization.

A TELEGRAM has been received stating that Mr. E. W. Noel has successfully undergone an operation in London and was on Saturday able to leave the nursing home where it was performed. Mr. Noel, according to this advice, was in excellent spirits, his health being much improved.

THE WAR IN SZECHUAN

Chêngtu, Feb. 7.

Gen. Hsiong Ke-wu, having escaped from Tongchuan, fled to Chêngtu, where he has held conference with Generals Lai Hsin-hui and Liu Yu-chiu and the other commanders. The decision is said to have been made to hold the city at all costs.

Gen. Yang Sen's men looted the Friends' Hospital in Tongchuan in the course of their search for Gen. Hsiong Ke-wu, who is reported actually to have been hiding in the offices of the Salt Gabelle. No news is coming through from that quarter.

The city (Chêngtu) has been closed and in a state of siege since February 3 and mails and provisions have to be brought in over the wall. The former are very erratic and it is not known here (outside the city) whether mail is being sent down river. Several skirmishes have taken place and much rifle, machine-gun and heavy gun fire directed into the city. A sortie by Gen. Hsiong Ke-wu's troops was routed by Gen. Yang Sen's troops this afternoon.

Unless Generals Liu Yu-chiu and Lai Hsin-hui have a secret agreement with Gen. Yang Sen and are awaiting a suitable opportunity to betray Gen. Hsiong, heavy fighting will take place within the next few days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DIVISION OF SPOILS.

Peking, Feb. 29.

The Cabinet yesterday resolved on the following Szechuan appointments: General Liu Tsen-hou to be Tuli; General Teng Shi-hou to be Civil Governor; General Liu Hsiang to be Director of Tibetan Frontier Affairs; General Yuan Tsu-ming to be Director of Kweichow Frontier Affairs; General Yang Sen to be High Military Commissioner for Eastern Szechuan; General Tien Sung-yao to be Assistant Director of Provincial Military Affairs.

General Wang We-cheng will take over command of General Wang Chen-ping's 23rd Division and General Chen Chia-mou will take over Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan's 25th Division as the duties of General Wang Chen-ping and Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan prevent further personal control of these divisions.

Surprise is expressed at the comparatively unimportant post given to General Yang Sen, but it is pointed out that the latter will now be available to carry on any further movements which Marshal Wu Pei-fu considers necessary.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

How the City Was Captured

Chêngtu, Feb. 9.

Generals Liu Hsiang and Yang Sen captured Chêngtu yesday but Generals Hsiong Ke-wu, Tan Mou-hsin and Lai Hsin-hui were allowed to leave the city unmolested.

Gen. Liu I-chiu remains in the city.

Feb. 11.

Details of the fighting round Chêngtu show that the Northern army was assisted by two bands of robbers, who took the lead and captured the Arsenal.

These two bands were led, one by a woman "Mrs. Lan," known as "Big Feet," and one by a man named "Ch'en," known as "Ta Mei Mao" or "Big Eyebrows."

Firing was very heavy for a [illegible] civilian casualties. Many of the foreign residences were hit, chief amongst them being the French Consulate, but fortunately there were no foreign casualties.

After the rout at T'ungch'uan and subsequent disorderly retreat, [illegible] when the Northern troops scaled [illegible] where the guards had left their posts.

THE PUNISHMENT FOR LOOTING.

There has been a good deal of [illegible] soldiers on both sides, [illegible] headless bodies lying about the streets show how Generals Liu Hsiang and Yang Sen make an example of looters and indicate that they intend to repress disorder before it has a chance to grow.

Ex-Governor Liu I-chiu is now reported to have left the city. At any rate the yamên is closed and his house has now been looted.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Political Murder

Peking, Feb. 29.

A telegram from Chungking says that the Chinese papers report that General Tang Chi-yu, General Tang Chi-yao's brother, who ruled Kueichow, has been assassinated in Szechuan.

The papers hint that the assassination was the work of General Liu Shen-shi's agent, but go on to explain that General Tang wanted to send reinforcements to assist General Hsiong Keh-wu, to which the Kueichow leaders objected. Thereupon General Tang Chi-yu shot and killed a Kueichow officer and was subsequently murdered. Corroboration cannot be obtained in Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE PHILIPPINES

Time for Separation Not Yet Arrived: President's Faith in Governor-General

Washington, Mar. 3

The House of Representatives Insular Affairs Committee have decided to report on the bill providing for the independence of the Philippine Islands

The Chairman of the Committee explained that some members did not believe in the independence of the Philippines at present, but voted the report in order to give the House of Representatives an opportunity to discuss the proposal.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Mar. 5.

President Coolidge has informed the Philippine Independence Mission that in his opinion the time has not yet come to separate the Philippine Islands from the United States.

In a letter to the Chairman of the Mission, the President declares that the United States is fully confident in the ability, good intentions, fairness and sincerity of Governor-General Wood. In the present state of world relationship America owes an obligation to continue to extend a protecting arm to the people of these Islands.—Reuter's American Service

POLITICAL ACTIVITY AT TSINGTAO

The Governor's Sudden Arrival

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 29.

Governor Hsiung Ping-chi's sudden arrival in Tsingtao yesterday has caused quite a sensation. It is the custom of officials of his position to notify their arrival at least a week in advance. Naturally enough rumours are rife as to the real cause of his sudden coming.

Some attribute it to the alleged irregularities on the part of the Finance Department, but others believe that he brings with him special instructions from President Tsao Kun in connexion with the activities of Wu Pei-fu in the former leased territory.

The Deputy Governor has invited a large number of foreign officials, business men and journalists to a dinner to-morrow night at the Governor's official residence. What is the purpose of the dinner is not yet known.

It is predicted here that from now on there will be no end of political activities and intrigues.

One bright feature, however, is the absence of bandits in this city and their scarcity in the vicinity. It is perhaps safe to say that there are fewer bandits in the former leased territory than [illegible]

APPALLING FIRE NEAR TSINANFU

A Village Destroyed and 300 Lives Lost: Thousands of People Homeless

Tsingtao, Mar. 4.

Three hundred persons lost their lives when Choutsun, near Tsinan, was destroyed on Friday by fire. Advices just received here state that four hundred persons received burns and other injuries.

An overturned lantern was the cause of the fire, which spread rapidly. Many persons were roasted in their homes, and there was a wild panic in the narrow streets. Scores were trampled under foot.

The glare attracted bandits, who robbed the bodies.

Corpses strew the streets. Thousands are homeless. The injured are dying through lack of attention. The Governor, General Hsiung Ping-chi, is organizing relief measures. The suffering from hunger is intense. One-eighth of the population has been killed or injured. The loss of property is estimated at $1,000,000. Two hundred shops and houses were destroyed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RECONSTRUCTION WORK IN TOKIO

Tokio, Mar. 5.

A preliminary contract has been arranged between the Mitsui Company and the American builders, Messrs. James Stewart & Co. of New York, for the construction of the new building of the Mitsui Bank, which will be the first important building in Tokio since the earthquake. It is believed that the building will be five-storeyed and will cost approximately Y.15,000,000. Construction will begin as soon as the Government post-earthquake building regulations are decided upon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Shipping Department of the Mitsubishi Co. and the Coastal Service Department of the N.Y.K. were amalgamated a few months ago. Of late the new corporation has been employing Chinese seamen, which is regarded as a precaution against the recurrence of the dispute respecting the decrease of allowance to the company's crews by 50 per cent. last year, the term of which expires in April. The Japan Seamen's Union is considering means to meet the situation.

TSINGTAO'S BEACH

Coolies and Soldiers to Be Eliminated this Year

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 28.

To ascertain the needs of the foreign community and of foreign visitors to this port during the coming summer season, Mr. Tsou Wen-wei, Director of General Affairs, received foreign journalists here yesterday. He asked them to interrogate him fully, as well as to offer suggestions which, if found practicable, the Administration would be anxious to carry out.

Mr. Tsou was asked whether the Administration had any intention to reserve the various stretches of the beach this coming summer for the benefit of the visitors, eliminating the presence of coolies and soldiers who, either directly or indirectly, are usually the cause of resentment on the part of the foreigners—both visitors and residents seeking to enjoy the waters of the bay.

Mr. Tsou replied that he was determined to keep all undesirable people away from the waterfront during the season. He admitted that in the past some portions of the beach were rendered unpleasant for foreigners through the presence of coolies and soldiers, who flocked there more for the sake of curiosity than for anything else.

The foreign journalists then suggested the removal of the marines at present occupying quarters on Pacific Road in the vicinity of local hotels and residences, to a more suitable district. They pointed out that there have been many complaints over that, to the average foreigner, seemed to be the unnecessary blowing of bugles and beating of drums, which would frequently commence at six in the morning and not come to an end till late in the evening.

Mr. Tsou said the idea of removing the marines was a good one and the authorities would see to it that they are transferred at a very early date to one of the barracks on the hills formerly occupied by Japanese soldiers.

The Director of General Affairs stated that he fully realized the necessity of making things pleasant for the foreigners but pressure of work since the time of the retrocession has caused the Administration to overlook several matters. He hoped that this coming summer would see many foreign visitors to Tsingtao, some of whom, he trusted, would look over the business possibilities here and eventually seek, both by capital and energy, to develop some particular industry or line of trade.

SEA-CAPTAIN'S EXPERIENCE

Proves Great Healing Value of Zam-Buk in Heat Rash, Sores and Mosquito Bites

Another striking tribute to the marvellous all-round healing capacity of Zam-Buk comes from Captain F. R. Harrie, a well-known personality amongst the merchantmen and traders of the Mediterranean and African Ports. In a recent letter from his home at Bembridge, Isle of Wight, England, Capt. Harrie says:—

"For a long time my African coastal trips used to be signalized by recurring attacks of a fiery itching skin disease which first appeared as a blood-red rash about the groins and arm-pits. The least attempt to scratch or rub causes the scales or eruptive skin to come off, and as the raw surfaces dry the pain and irritation increase almost beyond endurance.

"One time or another, I must have tried scores of different ointments recommended by friends, but it was not until my skin had the benefit of Zam-Buk that the eczema gave signs of disappearing. Persistent application of this powerful herbal balm soothed and purified my skin most thoroughly. It ended the trouble once and for all.

"Zam-Buk has the same wonderful efficacy in soothing and healing prickly heat, and for removing poison, swelling and inflammation out of the bites of mosquitos and other insect pests. I used to carry on board quite an outfit of special skin preparations for use in hot climates; but Zam-Buk practically fulfils the purposes of the lot, whilst its pure herbal character and freedom from animal fats make it particularly and peculiarly suitable for use in tropical and semi-tropical climates. I never put to sea now without a stock of Zam-Buk in the medicine chest. Nothing can compare with it for all-round efficacy in skin troubles."

Zam-Buk, unequalled for its soothing and curative power in all manner of skin diseases and injuries, is obtainable of chemists and dispensaries everywhere. Direct from agents: Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

Produced by Mrs. Henry Jory.

The production of farce is no easy thing for amateurs, especially when the line between it and comedy is often very finely drawn—for example "Mrs. Dot's" part is farcical, Gerald Halstane's is not—and where the whole play appears to have been written with an eye to one reigning artist of the comedy stage. And in the circumstances the B.W.A. Dramatic Section are to be congratulated on their production. They have done nothing more, if so, ambitious and the programme shows that they have owed nothing to anyone but themselves—except the scenery kindly lent by the A.D.C. The performance was in some respects a little raw, lines were forgotten and there was occasionally a feeling of noise without conviction. The first act too, it must be confessed, was dull, the speakers were not always audible and did not seem to have warmed up to their work. These are the common faults of a first night. Tht second act was better, brightened by an excellent little scene between Mr. Collar and Miss Noble, which everybody thoroughly enjoyed. And in the third act the cast generally had got over its initial nerves and played with all necessary abandon. Applause and laughter were frequent and the audience went away feeling that it had had an amusing evening.

As Mrs. Dot, Mrs. Irwine has a tremendous part which for the most part she played most capably. She suffered a little from the prevailing depression of the first act, after having made a very effective entrance. But in the second and third she handled the part buoyantly and enlisted everybody's sympathy. Mr. King made a big leap from the only other part he has appeared in before—from naval cadet to man of the world—and he is certainly to be complimented on his manner of doing so. He inclines to be too jerky; gets up and sets down with unnecessary frequency and sometimes seems to find his hands rather troublesome. As a whole, it is a good and sympathetic piece of work: he portrays the conflict of feeling between love for Mrs. Dot and duty to Nellie convincingly and his curtain (the handing back of the cushion) was particularly effective. Mr. Collar is certainly a welcome addition to local amateur theatricals. He looked the part of Freddie and played it delightfully. Very good too is Miss Aline Noble. These two played up together with excellent spirit and effect. There is nothing but praise for them. Mrs. Alister Campbell made a good entrance and seemed more at home in the first act than anybody else. Her horror at the running away of her daughter might have been a little more animated without disgracing her essentially lady-like deportment. She looked the part to perfection.. Mr. McMurray as Blenkinsop had a fine opportunity in the third act of which he took good advantage. Mr. Merrison was the conventionally pompous butler and the minor parts were adequately filled. The play was prettily staged and on her share of the work Mrs. Kenneth Newman is much to be complimented. Most of the weaknesses we have mentioned belong to "first night" feelings and should disappear with the second performance, which readers may well be advised to see, especially in these days when orthodox theatricals appear to be few and far between.

FAREWELL DINNER TO MR. W. A. H. MOULE

Hearty and Well-deserved Tributes from Cricket Club Confreres

Mr. W. A. H. Moule, one of Shanghai's most prominent sportsmen, particularly as regards cricket, was the guest of honour at a dinner at the Shanghai Club last Friday, arranged by his fellow-members of the Shanghai Cricket Club in order to give him a fitting farewell on the eve of his departure for home, on his retirement from the headmastership of the Anglo-Chinese School and from the cricket fields of Shanghai, on which he has played so prominent a part during the past 33 years.

Mr. F. W. Potter presided, with Mr. Moule at his right hand, and was supported by members of the Shanghai Cricket Club's committee, as well as such well-known Interport cricketers as the brothers Tom and Sam Wallace.

In proposing the toast of the evening, Mr. F. W. Potter said that there was a very representative gathering to pay a deserved tribute to Mr. Moule. Some people came to Shanghai to amass wealth and retire when their object was attained. Mr. Moule came to China with quite a different idea. He came to teach the Chinese what he knew. His life in Shanghai was the emblem of a true sportsman and a true gentleman. After referring to Mr. Moule's proficiency on the cricket field, and recalling the days when he topped the averages at Blackheath, as well as mentioning his prowess in both Rugger and Soccer football, Mr. Potter asked Mr. Moule to accept a silver loving cup as a token of esteem from the members of the Shanghai Cricket Club. The Cup bore the inscription:—"Presented to W. A. H. Moule, Esq., on February 29, 1924, at Shanghai, by his friends of the Shanghai Cricket Club, on the occasion of his leaving China, in token of their affection for him as a friend, and their admiration for him as a cricketer. He was a member of the Club for 35 years, from 1888 to 1923, and in that time scored 100 runs or more on the following occasions: (15 scores of 100 runs or more are inscribed).

In reply, and thanking the members of the Cricket Club for the beautiful souvenir of their friendship, Mr. Moule said that it would be a constant reminder of the many happy days spent on the S. C. C. ground. It was 36 years since he landed in Shanghai and joined the Shanghai Cricket Club. Amongst other players in those days he recalled the names of Arthur Anderson, J. L. Scott and A. P. Wood, all of whom were at one time or another Presidents of the Club. Then there was Bruce Robertson, a splendid captain and excellent wicket-keeper, Alec Stewart, Tom and Sam Wallace, the four brothers Lanning, two McEuens. Walter Wilson and Harry Ollerdessen. Then there was Potter too, with his wonderful length in bowling and strong batting, and Billings, with his fine bowling record, and many others too numerous to mention.

In conclusion, Mr. Moule said that he had spent many of the happiest days of his life on the Shanghai Cricket Club's ground and he could never forget the Club and his many friends in it. It was the memory of these that would always be with him.

Other speeches were made by Capt. Barrett, Dr. O'Hara and Mr. R. C. Farbridge, and Mr. G. M. Billings, in each of which mention was made of the high esteem in which Mr. Moule is held by all with whom he comes in contact on the cricket field, and the evening's entertainment was completed with an enjoyable musical programme, with songs by Messrs. H. E. Muriel, D. J. Donne, G. F. Dumbarton, and N. G. Maitland.

CORPS OF ROYAL ENGINEERS

Annual Reunion Dinner: Lessons of the War to Practise in Peace

The second reunion dinner was held on Thursday evening, February 28, at the S.V.C. Club.

Lieut. Colonel M. H. Logan was in the chair and 33 ex-members of the Corps of Royal Engineers sat down to dinner. The table was tastefully arranged, and decorated with the colours of the Corps and with models of bridges, sand bag revetments and other engineering features. Mr. Jack Raynes' orchestra played during dinner.

The President, addressing the members after dinner, remarked on the excellent attendance, and said that he appreciated very much the warm interest that was taken in old associations as was evidenced by the number of ex-members there that night. He said he felt sure the lessons of the war would not be forgotten, and that the ex-members of this distinguished Corps would carry on in civil life the traditions they had acquired whilst wearing the King's uniform, and he hoped that next year he might see an even larger attendance. He said he thought it would be better to hold the annual dinner in the autumn, when it appeared likely there would be more members in Shanghai than is usually the case in spring, owing to home leave and visits of inspection taking many members out of Shanghai at that time. He referred to the excellent work done by the Committee in arranging this dinner, and the trouble which they had taken in carrying out the scheme of decoration, and he specially instanced Messrs. Molyneux, Cheale, Maguire, Harvey and Oswald; he said he felt they owed all of them a debt of gratitude. A hearty vote of thanks to the Committee for their services was then passed. Mr. Molyneux' name being specially mentioned, and he having suitably replied, the remainder of a very enjoyable evening was taken up by a musical entertainment, to which Messrs. Butt, Eva, Manners and Maugher motably contributed.

OBITUARY

Mr. J. W. Skains

The death occurred at the Isolation Hospital on Tuesday last, of Mr. James Williams Skains, of the Shanghai staff of the Texas Company.

Mr. Skains was born at Bryan, Texas, on December 18, 1892, and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Skains, now of Houston. He has been connected with the oil business during the greater part of his business life, 11 years of which have been spent in the service of the Texas Company. He entered the service of the China Department in March, 1921, at Mukden, where he remained until November last, when he was transferred to the Shanghai office. He was an enthusiastic worker and made many friends both in Mukden and Shanghai.

Mr. Skains became ill on Friday of last week and was taken to the General Hospital during the night. Drs. Ransom and Gardiner were called to attend him and on Saturday evening he was removed to the observation ward in the Isolation Hospital. On Sunday it developed that the disease was haemorrhagic smallpox and he died at 3.30 p.m. on Tuesday. He was rational in mind until a short time before the end.

Mr. Skains leaves a father and mother and several brothers and sisters at home, and a brother, Mr. Robert Skains, in the employ of Messrs. Anderson, Meyer & Co. at Mukden.

Mr. Arthur Dabelstein

The funeral of Mr. Arthur Dabelstein took place at Bubbling Well cemetery on Thursday afternoon and was largely attended, the deceased having for many years been a very popular figure in the social and business life of the Settlement. Among the many friends who attended were Mr. W. L. Merriman, Major C. P. Holcomb, Captain Anderson, Mr. R. C. K. Johnson, Mr. A. Allen, Mr. R.C. Phillipo, Mr. W. Turner, Mr. H. Herlofsen, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce, Mr. S. Wall, Mr. A. E. S. Thompson, and Mr. Richard Neumann. The deceased's sons, Lionel and Kenneth, were the chief mourners. The service held in the chapel, preceding cremation, was conducted by Pastor Muller.

Very many beautiful wreaths were sent.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY

Triple Extension Scheme

This well-known institution has an honourable history of 36 years of unselfish labour for the enlightenment of the Chinese people. It's work goes to the roots of character which is basal to all other kind of effort in China. It has had a distinguished line of General Secretaries, Dr. Alexander Williamson, Dr. Timothy Richard, Dr. W. Hopkyn Rees, and wonderful results have followed. Its production of literature has lately greatly increased, and the circulation has in the last five years risen 400 per cent. The directors have decided that it is desirable to obtain more capital for a further forward movement in order more adequately to cope with the demands of China's New Day. A fund of Tls. 100,000 is needed to cover the new expenditure of the next five years in the directions—producing literature, printing literature, and circulating literature. Hence the scheme is compendiously known as the C.L.S. Triple Extension Scheme.

The Christian Literature Society acknowledges with thanks the following contributions:—

ST. PATRICK'S SOCIETY

Presentation to Mr. K. Begdon

At the usual monthly tiffin of the Committee of the above Society held on the 4th instant, the opportunity was taken of presenting to Mr. K. Begdon, official Piper of the Society, a handsome silver cigar box to mark his forthcoming marriage to Miss M. Dixon. Mr. Beytagh, president of the Society, in making the presentation, expressed the gratitude of the Committee for Mr. Begdon's past services, as well as pleasure at the fact that the happy event will not prevent him from attending the ball on St. Patrick's Day in the capacity of Piper, and concluded by wishing a full measure of happiness to Mr. Begdon and his future wife.

AMERICAN WOMAN'S CLUB

Farewell Reception and Presentation to Mrs. C. S. Lobingier

Mrs. Charles Sumner Lobingier, who is leaving shortly for an extended visit to the United States, was the guest of honour at a reception tendered her by the American Woman's Club in its rooms on Tuesday afternoon. A musical and literary programme arranged by Mrs. Squires, Chairman of the Social Department, and the usual tea made pleasant additions to the afternoon. Mr. Clisby Du Bose sang "The Great Adventure" by Fletcher and "Three For Jack" by Squire, in excellent voice; Miss Ellen Jansen gave a delightful violin solo, Minuet, Porpora-Kreisler; Mrs. Stroebe sang two charming lyrics, "Wake Up" by Montague Philipps and "To a Hill Top" by Ralph Cox; Mr. Rodd Moffat sang two very appealing selections, "Jean" by Stanton and "Duna" by McGill, and Miss Ethel Lacy recited with great feeling and sympathy a dramatic story by Gilbert Parker.

In presenting to Mrs. Lobingier a large silver bowl on a blackwood stand, Dr. Anne Walter Fearn, President of the Club, in closing her remarks, which happily blended humour and feeling, said that she had always regarded Mrs. Lobingier as the backbone of the Club and that she would be genuinely missed. She asked Mrs. Lobingier to accept the bowl as a souvenir from the Club, full of living thoughts, and best wishes for every day in the year, "self-pertetuating wishes which would last as long as she lived."

SOME REMINISCENCES.

In responding Mrs. Lobingier modestly disclaimed the honours heaped upon her, saying, however, that it was not necessary to believe all the pleasant things said about one in order to enjoy hearing them, and that the 10 years of Club activity had been years of pleasure and not of work. She then gave some interesting reminiscences, comparing the varied experiences to a "delectable club sandwich" and closed with the story of the Los Angeles man who said at a funeral of a stranger, when no one had responded to the invitation to pay a tribute to the deceased: "Well, if no one wishes to speak about our brother who has passed on, I should like to say a few words about Los Angeles." Like the enthusiastic Californian, Mrs. Lobingier said she should seize every opportunity to say a good word for the hospitality and kindness of the the Club.

Upon motion of Mrs. W. H. Lunt it was unanimously voted to make Mrs. Lobingier a Life Member of the Club.

RETIREMENT OF SUPT. MELLOWS

From Bombardment of Alexandria to Russo-Japanese War and Pursuit of Pirates on the Huangpu

Dating from March 1, Superintendent T. Mellows, of the [illegible] leave for six months and at the end of that period he will be permitted to retire on the full pension to which he is entitled. Though 59 years of age, Superintendent Mellows is more physically fit than many a young man of 29 and he cheerfully would have carried on with his work, but unfortunately he has been having trouble lately over his eyesight and feels compelled to retire. He cannot tell the stories of the long ago times of the Settlement's early days such as occasionally can be extracted from Mr. Brodie Clarke, but all the same his yarns are most exciting. Mr. Mellows belongs to what one might call the middle period with the end of which most of the old romance of China passed away. There is plenty of excitement even now, but it is not quite the same.

14 YEARS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. Mellows is a native of Nottingham, but at an early age he found himself in Greenwich and evidently the associations of that ancient place with the sea had an effect on him, for though a mere boy he joined Her Majesty's Navy. There followed for a long period the usual life of a sailor, which was rather more exciting in those days of sailing and auxiliary steam vessels than it is now. He served 14 years in the Navy, sailing to all parts of the world and taking a hand in innumerable jobs which now he passes over as trifling affairs. A big event in which he took part was the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882, when he was in H.M.S. Superb, and for that action he received a medal and the Khedive's Star. He had an extended period of service in H.M.S. Raleigh, commanded by Captain "Tug" Wilson (Admiral Sir A. K. Wilson, V.C.). The Raleigh, an auxiliary steam vessel, was one of the smartest ships of the day and her commander was of the old school who had more faith in sails than steam. She could do 22 knots at her best and Captain Wilson saw that she did not miss many opportunities of doing it, for with him it was "down smokestacks and up screw" whenever there was a breeze and the Raleigh would be adorned with a most amazing collection of canvas. On one occasion, after a long trip, she sent off a cutter in answer to signals of distress flown by a clipper and found that she was aiding a certain unit of that romantic tea fleet which had the title of "the fastest ship on the sea" and which had left port three days before the Raleigh had done and had followed a very much shorter route.

Mr. Mellows was in the Alacrity on the China Station and took his discharge there to join the Shanghai Municipal Police in January, 1892. Though in that force for only two years, the handy man was able to gain at least one distinction there, for it was he who first taught the prisoners to earn money. He taught them mat-making, their first task being the covering of the floors and staircases of the newly erected Central Police Station. Mat-making survives to-day as one of the principal occupations of prisoners.

IN THE SINO-JAPANESE WAR.

In 1894 there commenced one of the most exciting periods of Mr. Mellows's career. He left the Municipal Police and joined the Chinese Navy, being posted as a gunner on the staff and attached to the flagship Tingyuen. The war with Japan gave him plenty of work to do and material enough for a novel. One night he went as a volunteer in a [illegible] up an attempt to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Heavy Decline in Certain Lines at Piece Goods Auctions: Conditions Otherwise Quiet

Mar. 8.

The local markets this week have contiued quiet and dull, and no volume of business is reported in any direction.

A stagnancy prevails in exports, the values here being generally too high to allow of business on the part of Europe or America.

Piece goods have been inactive, and following the recent high prices attained auction values have shown a heavy decline in some lines.

PIECE GOODS.

As far as piece goods are concerned the week opened rather better than its predecessor, and Tientsin and the north generally showed a considerable interest in fancies and spring goods. Although clearances of cargo were good, the position is not satisfactory in view of the numbers of new merchants and dealers who have recently entered the business, persuaded thereto by the profits which Chinese firms made last year. The danger of overtrading is again presenting itself to those who have experienced past vicissitudes. Meanwhile it is stated that several dealers have conceded as much as Tls. 0.25 on medium and best White Shirtings in order to maintain continuity of sales and to avoid an accumulation of stocks when the March/April shipments come to hand.

In woollens the market is on the quiet side. Deliveries, however, are good, but with a very steady market at Home no new business has taken place.

In certain respects the auctions were on a much sounder basis than those of last week, a greater proportion of orders for certain qualities of goods being in the hands of dealers. At the same time, except in one or two instances, prices showed an easier tendency, and at the concluding auction medium and high qualities of Italians sustained a heavy drop, amounting to a tael or more, although the lower qualities did not suffer in the same degree. It is readily understood why this particular movement in prices should have taken place at this juncture. After a period of rising values extending practically over nine months dealers have recently been paying what would be called fancy prices. So long as they had cargo on their hands it was to their interest to maintain values, but now that their stocks have been disposed of they are no longer concerned with the maintenance of prices. In the circumstances it does not matter to them whether prices sag, and the withdrawal of their suport has caused the present drop. Last year the bottom price for Italians was touched in April, but to-day the statistical position is much stronger, stocks in hand being only about a third of what was held last year, and there is a possibility of this downward movement accordingly being of very short duration.

COTTON AND YARN.

Chinese Cotton—Following the trend of American cotton, the China staple has this week shown a firmer tendency, but little business has taken place. If yarn prices improve as is anticipated, considerable buying orders are expected shortly to be on hand. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange a bullish tone is reported, the quotations current there being as follows:—March 43.65; April 43.30; May 42.90; June 42.45; July 42.10; August 41.30. Spot quotations are as follows:—Tungchow 42/46; Shanghai 42.50; Shensi 43/44½; Hankow 41½.

Yarn—Yarn is steadier in price, but no large amount of business is taking place. Between 2,000 and 3,000 bales are reported to have been booked by mills during the week, and it is of interest to note that certain Chinese concerns appear to have contracted at prices below what the Chinese millowners fixed a week ago as their lowest figure. Apparently the movement to fix minimum prices was only partial. The Szechuan merchants do not yet seem to have come into the market, although the firmer tendency now shown may suggest to them that the bottom has been reached and if so purchases by them may be expected in the course of the next week or two. Clearances of local cloth have been good, but new business is difficult as dealers are everywhere trying to cut prices. The following are the yarn quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange:—March 173; April 169.90; May 168.10; June 167; July 166.40; August 165.20.

SILK.

There is a small demand for silk, but it is impossible to do any business with Lyons on account of the rapidly declining franc rate. A little more demand is in evidence from New York, but at very low prices. The market shows prices very irregular in Shanghai.

PRODUCE.

The Home markets continue very dull and business is almost impossible owing to the scarcity of local supplies and the consequently exaggerated high tael prices of most commodities.

WHOLESALE PRICES IN SHANGHAI

Bureau of Markets' Index Number

The index number of wholesale prices at Shanghai for February has now been compiled by the Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets which announces them as follows:—

The totad index number for February is 159.6 being 1.8 per cent. higher than the previous month and 1.3 per cent. higher than the corresponding month of last year. In comparing it with that of June, 1920, the highest point ever reached by this index, it is less by 0.2 per cent. only. Thus in the past 44 months, the present month has the highest index number. It is less probably due to the fact that business is gradually developing since the complementary sales after China New Year.

Certain groups have advanced in their prices, while many others show marked falls. For instance, among the eight groups in our table the averages of fuels, building materials, industrial materials all show declines.

CHEKIANG INDUSTRIAL BANK LD.

Annual Report

The report to be presented to the 16th annual general meeting of shareholders of the Chêkiang Industrial Bank Ld. has now been issued. In presenting it the directors make the following announcement:—

Our friends will observe that from our last annual report some changes have taken place in the organization of this bank. This institution was at first semi-officially organized in 1908 with a capital of one million dollars, in which the Provincial Government of Chêkiang had an interest of $300,000. On this account, the bank nominally had to maintain its head office at Hangchow, the capital of Chêkiang.

It has been, however, the policy of its management always to endeavour to concentrate its main business in Shanghai, which is the commercial and industrial metropolis of the Far East. During the last few years, business of the Shanghai office has grown to such extent that in the interest of efficient management and control, it was deemed absolutely necessary to negotiate with the Provincial Government to buy out their share, in order to enable the bank to remove its head office to Shanghai. On March 23, 1923 the Governmental interest was taken over by a group of prominent private financiers at a high premium of about 70 per cent. thus making the Bank a purely private financial institution.

With a view for further expansion and public convenience, the bank acquired and built a commodious home to house its ever increasing activities and removed its head office from Hangchow to Shanghai at the corner of Hankow and Kiangse Roads, Roads, known as the Chêkiang Industrial Bank Building. With augmented resources now under its control, the bank is better than ever prepared to afford adequate banking service.

Coal Output

The total output of the Kailan Mining Administration's mines for the week ending February 23 amounted to 44,091 tons and the sales during the same period to 65,383 tons.

Messrs. George McBain have received a telegram from the manager of the Mentoukou Mine stating that the output of coal for the month of February was [illegible] tons.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE TRADEMARK LAW.

To the Editor of the
"North China Daily News."

Sir,—I read with great interest your leaders of February 29 and March 1 and they must have come as a revelation to many others like myself, who until comparatively recently were entirely ignorant of the existence of such a law or of the possibility of its recognition by the foreign Powers.

There is probably at the present time no other country in the world where the Press, and particularly independent organs such as yours, can accomplish relatively so much as in China; and in connexion with the publicity which you have given to the new Chinese Trademark Law you have discharged a real and possibly incalculable public service.

There is, however, one point and it appears to me to be a strong point which has apparently escaped your attention and the attention of others. Under the Mackay Treaty the offices for the Registration of Foreign Trademarks were to be under the control of the Customs. That being so, is not the only obvious course to see what happens in the case of disputes in connexion with the imposition of Customs duties? Did our ancestors allow Chinese officials and Chinese officials alone to decide these as is proposed in the Chinese Trademark Law? They did not: and I am not aware of even any proposal by their weak-kneed successors along these lines.

The procedure is as follows,—if the importer is dissatisfied, he files a protest in writing with the Commissioner of Customs, and I need not remind your readers that the Commissioner of Customs is not a Chinese. After the filing of the protest the Commissioner of Customs reviews his own decision and if the protest is not sustained the case is referred to a board of arbitrators composed as follows:

(1)—An official of the Customs.

(2)—A merchant selected by the Consul of the importer.

(3)—A merchant of a different nationality from the importer, selected by the Senior Consul.

We see, therefore, that in cases of Customs disputes foreign interest have not yet been betrayed; for the decision is practically entirely in the hands of foreigners.

Now decisions in connexion with trademarks are at least as, and probably very much more, difficult and important than decisions in connexion with import duties.

It seems to me therefore that when you hint that we have been "let down," (to use a mild word) either by the diplomatic body or by the authorities at Home, you and others also are not entirely free from blame in this respect when you merely suggest adequate foreign representation on the Trademark Bureau and the Tribunals.

Surely what all the foreign Powers should insist on is similar procedure and representation to that at present in force in the case of Customs disputes; and surely that is what we are entitled to by treaty.

Until the whole Law or any new Bill is thoroughly thrashed out, subjected to devastating criticism from all sides, and altered out of recognition in many respects, it should never be treated seriously.

There is an old saying "In vain in the sight of the bird is the net of the fowler displayed." Can it be that the Diplomatic bird is an exception to the rule?—or is the explanation, as we must all devoutly hope, that the reports of the action of the Diplomatic Body are inaccurate and imperfect. To any person who has lived in China, who has seen existing conditions and is capable of forming an opinion as to what these conditions are likely to be for some years to come, it is almost inconceivable that foreign Government, with their eyes open, will agree to recognize the Trademark Law without the amendments to which you have referred to in your leading articles.

I do not know how many deluded people or firms there have so far wasted their money on registration under the new Law, but surely it is high time that all foreigners were notified by their Legations and by their Press not to register until a proper Trademark Law has been recognized by the foreign Powers and they have been advised by them and the Press to register.

RENDER UNTO CÆSAR.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In the matter of the salving of the Rheinand, an account of which appears in your issue of to-day, all praise and credit are due to the Captains and crews of the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Coa., tugs St. Dominic and St. Sampson.

Anyone acquainted with the inhospitable and stormy nature of the Gulf during the winter months needs no stretch of imagination to realize the hardships and discomfort which the crews of these tugs must have experienced while carrying out this big undertaking.

In the absence of special agreement the crew of a salving vessel are entitled by Law to a large slice of the salvage award. To avoid this payment some steamship companies insert a clause in the ship's articles of agreement binding and limiting the crew to one month's pay in the event of their vessel being engaged on salvage work, a practice that has always been considered as taking a mean advantage as it is usually incommensurate with the service rendered.

THE BREEZES OF NINGPO.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—May I be permitted to congratulate you or your talented correspondents (or correspondent) from Ningpo: the letters that were published in your issues of the 25th and 27th combine such wealth of phrase, such variety of expression, such happy choice of wording, such brilliant flashes of piquant humour, and above all such unsimulated sincerity, that it would be hard to find their equal in almost any "penny dreadful."

At first I was at a loss to know to what this "capital literature" might be attributed. I have to thank Miss Agatha Boadge for a clue. It must be that Mr. Alf. Squeers is not the only man in Ningpo to see things with purple spots and green eyes when returning home at night from meetings."

THE TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILWAY.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to occupy a small portion of your most valuable paper?

Have any of your readers recently travelled viâ the Trans-Siberian Railway?

Contemplating a voyage to England viâ that route, I shall be grateful for any hints or advice that are given as to its methods of booking, costs, etc.

CHINA'S NEW STAMPS.

To the Editor of the
"North China Daily News."

Sir, It may be recalled that on the first issue of the Junk design of postal stamps issued by the Republic of China it was pointed out that the junk depicted thereon appeared to have set out for a voyage on choppy waters, symbolical of the inauguration of a Republic in China. How much of this forecast has come true will be apparent to anyone who has been a resident during this time.

Perhaps it will also be seen that the new issue of stamps may be prophetic in its silent picture of a Junk on placid waters gliding along more erect with a faint outline of a more stable bridge span, a sign of stability missing from the earlier issues.

With the disappearance of the etching at the sides and on the top of the stamp, the seven beads are now plain, perhaps meaning the ultimate dropping of mistaken ideas and in the new design the seven beads appear to be crushed out, almost flattened in the centre, to be merged from seven divisions into one united China—serene and placid.

May the design adopted be the forerunner of stability and Progress.

THE CASE OF MR. WIDLER.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I am extremely sorry not to know Mr. W. Bruce Lockhart personally, but certainly he is the man "to knock the nail right on the head." I have read "My Morning Tea" with deep interest, but I was sorry to see "Phantasmagoria" as an adjunct to the title of his article. To my knowledge it should have been instead: "Ghastly Facts."

I am sure, all the foreigners in China are profoundly sorry for Mr. Elly Widler, especially myself, having known him few years ago in Yunranfu. Nominally, it is true that the Swiss Republic is not in a state of war with China, but in reality, China is in a state of frightfulness with all the Foreign Powers. I believe (the word "hope" is not in my Dictionary), Mr. W. B. L. having written in a such clear manner, has not forgotten to send a copy of the "North-China Daily News" to the Minister (or Ministers) in Peking, with a special blue mark on his article to attract their notice. Will it? It ought be time to make a move, before a repetition of 1900.

T.T'S.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Please publish the following in your esteemed paper. At a pussyfoot meeting in the U.S.A. the mover for prohibition based most of his arguments on the Bible. At the close of the meeting an old, venerable-looking man stood up and asked to be allowed to say a few words and he said:

The last speaker has based practically all his arguments on the Bible. Allow me to tell you that I have also studied the Good Book. I have thereby come to the result, that though the Bible does not perhaps encourage drinking alcoholic beverages, yet it does not prohibit the drinking of same. Practically the first thing Noah did on landing was to build a Vineyard—in Solomon's Proverbs Chapter 31 verse 6-7 we read: Give strong drinks to him who is perishing and wine to those who are sick at heart, that they may forget their poverty and their misery. And turning to the New Testament we read, that our Lord at yon memorable wedding turned water into wine. And in St. Paul's letter to Timothy Chapter 5 verse 23 we read: Do not take water but take a little wine for thy stomach and thy illnesses. With one word if you read through the whole of the Bible you will find only one instance of a man asking for water and he was in hell, and even a single drop was refused him.

THE NANKING MINT.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The Shanghai Industrial Research Laboratory has again secured samples of the four coins which were analyzed some weeks ago and I am personally making an analysis, the results of which will be reported when complete.

Both originally and in the present instance, the samples were submitted under specified conditions, and the laboratory has not been free to make other use of such samples.

Whether or not the original analysis was in error, it is not correct to charge that there has been unwillingness to participate with representatives of the Nanking Mint in a joint analysis.

Thanking you for giving publicity to the above,

THE KAJAO DYNAMITE STORE.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The recent fatal explosion in New Jersey, U.S.A., brings me to mind of a very potent darger existing almost next door to the Settlement itself, and unless some step be taken to look into this matter, we may suffer a similar fate, but on a larger scale.

Situated on the Pootung bark of the Huangpu river a little above the Kajao Creek, is a depôt in which dynamite and other high explosives are stored; while in close neighbourhood, not many thousand yards away, is the A.P.C. petrol storage shed. It was not so long ago that this same shed took fire, the flames reaching to within 600 yards of the magazine jetty. One lighter broke adrift and floated close by, burning fiercely. Had it exploded in the immediate vicinity of the magazine and some of the masses of burning oil been hurled on to it, a serious catastrophe would have occurred. The city would be very seriously damaged, and crippled to such an extent that years would be required to retrieve the loss done in the few seconds. It is within the bounds of possibility that the bed of the river in the neighbourhood would be so disturbed as to cause serious interference with navigation if not the imprisonment of the ships in the harbour for months to come.

The residence of the foreign official in charge is built too closely to the magazine for safety; this certainly would not be allowed in other ports. There are no means of direct communication with Shanghai or the Harbour authorities in cases of urgency or necessity either by telephone or water. Some consideration should at least be extended in this respect to the official and his family.

That this silent danger should be allowed to remain in its present primitive state with no effort to remedy it is needlessly exposing the port of Shanghai with all its immense vested interests. It is a glaring case of how familiarity breeds contempt.

I am, etc.,

Geo. Gundry.

Shanghai, March 4, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In your article on the above subject you state "That in the past communication has been established by launch in touch with the depôt almost every hour." This is true only in the abstract.

A ferry launch service operated by Chinese runs between Shanghai and Kajow Creek, and is in no way connected with the Customs Service or the magazine, and they run just as it suits them. If there are passengers and the weather is fine, these launches run to a semblance of time, but should the weather be bad, they leave when they think fit, and after 5 p.m. there is no more communication either way, so that the officer in charge of the magazines is absolutely isolated after that time, as this ferry launch is the only means he has of getting in touch with Shanghai.

I have often wondered what he would do if one of his family were suddenly taken ill during the night, I do not mean just petty sickness, but (as I have no doubt that after his 17 years' residence in that isolated spot he is fully capable of taking charge in such emergencies) I mean if something really serious arose, by the time he had managed to get into communication with a medical man, it is probable that it would be too late to be of any use to the suffering one.

In the article appearing a few days ago, on the retirement of Supt. Mellows, mention was made of how a contemplated raid by the rebels was frustrated through the timely warning given by the officer in charge of the magazines. Had the officer in charge not sent a man three miles by road and then by native ferry to Shanghai it is probable that he and his family would all have been murdered, as it is well known that he had sworn not to allow his magazines to fall into the hands of irresponsible people as long as he was alive to defend it. As there was not then, and is not now, any reliable means of communication with the magazines, it appears to me a clear case of neglect and "Leave it to the magazine keeper, he will manage it all right" sort of way, and should in my opinion be remedied with the least possible delay. Personally I do not envy the magazine keeper and would not live, as he does, practically on top of a magazine, for $1000 per month.

BANQUE INDUSTRIELLE.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In your issue of yesterday under the list of contributions to the Shanghai War Memorial appears the following entry "Banque Industrielle de Chine Tls. 100."

In view of the fact that this Bank suspended payment in 1921 and has not paid its creditors a single cent, I should like to ask

1.—What were the funds out of which this contribution was made and who authorized the payment?

2.—Is it legal for the funds of the Bank to be utilized in this way as long as it has not paid in full, all its creditors?

I wish it to be understood that I am in no way criticizing the use to which the sum in question was put, it is solely the question of the principle involved.

I am, etc.,

Shanghai, March 6, 1924.

 A misunderstanding has arisen through the use in the subscription list of a shortened title, as the donation should be in the name of the Societe Francaise de Gerance de la Banque Industrielle de Chine. This is a distinct and separate company, formed with the approval of the French Government, with its own capital and board of directors, to manage the affairs of the Banque. It is to receive a percentage of the profits, if any, out of which it will recoup itself for its own expenditure. The subscription has nothing to do with the Banque funds, but was paid by the new company out of its own money.—Ed.

With the exception of "Rubbers" and "Coys" the general tone of the share market during the past week has been a little firmer with increased business. Several lines have been in keen demand and close with buyers at Tls. 91. Lots of stock are also wanted and are a shade firmer. Cotton shares are neglected. The market closes quiet and unchanged. [illegible] London market quotations show little change and the following are the latest prices cabled [illegible]:

by post and telegram, orders from small investors, and this was the original object of the company. Never before in Shanghai has the small man had the chance of investing on an equal footing with the big man. We received an order the other day from Wuhu from a client who had instructed the Bank of China to hand us the sum of $40 with which to purchase New Engineering preference shares and to put the balance of the money into one or two sound rubber companies. We purchased for him five New Engineering preference shares and returned him the balance in cash. It must be remembered that the people who are now able to put in only Tls. 50 may, in the future, be able to put in large amounts, and it is to be thought that, if we give them good attention for Tls. 50 we shall receive their orders when they are buying on a large scale.

THE OLD POLICY CONTINUED.

We now have working for us five foreign brokers who, we think, cover most of the people who deal in shares in Shanghai. We have daily communication, almost hourly, with Hongkong, Hankow, Tientsin and Peking, and we can report that in all these agencies we are doing an ever increasing business. The new company is carrying out exactly the policy of the old, and our chief object is to employ the company's capital in buying for cash and selling forward to sound clients. We could do a very much larger business than we are doing, if we cared to take the risk of selling indiscriminately.

Speaking generally as to the market, there are a few shares which could be called high in price, and it is the policy of the company if, in their opinion, they consider any stocks too high, not to deal in same except on a cash basis.

It is our intention to try and develop the outport business. We are advertising extensively now, and we feel that there is a lot of money lying idle in outports which could be profitably employed and we are making efforts to get outport residents to invest their money in sound stocks, debentures, preference shares, etc.

Our position is not to take a large interest in any one stock or share, especially if it is of a speculative nature. There is no need for us to do this, as we can buy and sell on the market daily. We are open at any time to buy large holdings of debentures and other safe stock of this nature. We may say that in our first two months we have done a very large business indeed in debentures.

On the whole, gentlemen, it would seem that the prospects for this new company are extremely bright, as long as we adhere to the company's present policy.

There was no discussion and the several resolutions were carried.

CHENG RUBBER ESTATES LD.

Reduction of Capital

A meeting of shareholders in the Cheng Rubber Estates, Ld., was held on Thursday afternoon, Dr. R. S. Ivy presided and was supported by Messrs. A. K. Craddock and A. J. Welch, directors, and Mr. C. J. L. Stewart representing Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., the secretaries.

There were 38,711 shares represented.

In addressing the meeting the Chairman said:—

At the extraordinary general meeting of shareholders held on January 4 this year, a reduction of the company's issued capital was approved unanimously and the resolution then passed was duly confirmed and passed as a special resolution at an extraordinary general meeting on January 21.

This reduction of capital involves also a scheme of arrangement between the company and the shareholders, under which certain shares are to be surrendered for re-issue and to such scheme the sanction of His Britannic Majesty's Supreme Court for China at Shanghai under Section 121 of the Companies Ordinances (Hongkong 1911, has to be obtained. Under the instructions of the Court, this extraordinary meeting has been called to consider and, if thought fit to approve, with or without modification the scheme of arrangement referred to.

The scheme was fully explained in a circular dated December 21, 1923, addressed to all members of the company and further details and explanations were given at the extraordinary general meeting held on January 4, 1924.

A report of this meeting was duly posted to all shareholders appearing on the register. I do not think it is necessary for me to make any further comments on the scheme which has been before you for consideration since December 21 last.

The scheme of arrangement to be presented to the Court for its sanction reads as follows:—

1. The special Resolution passed and confirmed on January 4 and 21, 1924, respectively for the reduction of the issued capital of the company and for the sub-division of its shares and for the surrender of certain of the shares resulting from such sub-division, and for other matters, shall be binding on the company and its members and shall be carried into effect accordingly.

2. The members shall accept the provisions made by the said special resolution in satisfaction of their existing rights.

3. Unless the said special resolution is confirmed by the Court on or before June 30, 1924, this Scheme shall on that day become void.

The resolution which I have to ask you to pass is proposed by myself and seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock and is as follows:—That the Scheme of Arrangement submitted to this meeting be and the same is hereby approved and agreed to.

The resolution was put to the meeting and carried unanimously

THE LAOU KUNG MOW C. S. & W. CO., LD.

A Year of Many Troubles

Sir Edward Pearce, the Chairman, presided at the thirtieth ordinary meeting of shareholders in the Laou Kung Mow Cotton Spinning & Weaving Co., Ld., held at the offices of Messrs. Ilbert & Co., Ld., the general managers, on Thursday, and there were also present Messrs. A. Howard, R. W. Wells, K. Otani, Yu Pao-san (directors) and other shareholders, a total holding of 71,490 shares being represented.

The Chairman—The report and accounts having been in your hands for some few days, we will, with your approval, adopt our usual procedure and take them as read.

It is with great regret that your board have to lay before you today a report showing such an unsatisfactory result. We have had, however, adverse circumstances to face. In the first place, from January 1, your board, in view of the state of the yarn market and the general condition of affairs, decided to cease night work and to continue day work only. This not unnaturally for a time upset our labour, entailing as it did a period of somewhat high production costs. Secondly, we commenced the year with a considerable stock of yarn to dispose of and although eventually, sold at an equivalent figure to which it was taken into stock, the quality was not up to our usual standard and due to its colour lost favour in the consuming districts. With these facts to face, as well as a dull market, and exceptionally low prices ruling during the first six months of the year, we had considerable up-hill work to re-establish the good name our spinnings had previously enjoyed.

We also regret to say that this state of affairs disclosed to us very clearly the need for drastic re-organization within the mill and for numerous changes in the foreign and Chinese staff. It became apparent during the summer that the internal working of the mill left a good deal to be desired, and the process of remedying matters, which lasted several months, led very naturally to a good deal of confusion, with consequent financial loss. We are able to state confidently, however, that under the new management the working of the mill is now progressing satisfactorily, the production has increased substantially, and numerous economies have been effected in all departments.

DEBIT CARRIED FORWARD.

Under these adverse circumstances, our debits standing at profit and loss account amounts to Tls. 296,056.67 on the year's working. Against this loss we have a sum of Tls. 90,000 standing at the credit of development reserve and Tls. 120,000 at the credit of dividend reserve. Both of these amounts your board now recommands should be appropriated to this year's loss, leaving a debit balance at profit and loss account to be carried to the new account of Tls. 86,056.67. We trust you will approve of this recommendation.

Turning to the accounts, owing to our heavy overdraft during the year, you will notice that our interest shows a debit of Tls. 70,035.34. In this matter we must bear in mind that the capital of the company only stands at Tls. 800,000 and in view of the fact that our spindle plant has been doubled and 515 looms added to our machinery, necessitating additional buildings, we have also purchased land standing in our books at Tls. 140,601.91, erected staff buildings and native houses, without adding one cent to our capital since the inception of the company nearly 28 years ago. It is not surprising, perhaps, that when we have to carry stocks our interest charge cannot help but be heavy. Rents collected on our native houses, amounting to Tls. 6,494.24, have again been written off the cost of these houses, which are now written down to Tls. 46,693.26. Concerning your other assets, they remain, with some minor additions, at the same figure as last year.

A GLOOMY YEAR.

The cotton spinning and weaving industry in China for the year 1923 on the whole has been very disappointing. Merchants have only been able to lay in the smallest of supplies, merely replenishing their stocks as and when the demand was forthcoming and the intricacies of transport allowed them. All markets have been sadly handicapped by incessant fighting in nearly all provinces between the different political factions over that grim struggle for supremacy, while the Central Government remains totally incapable of exercising any effective control over the country. Banditry has continued rife throughout nearly all the trade routes, not only causing trade depression, but a danger to life and property. To say that the outlook is encouraging would be perhaps optimistic. The statistical position is, however, exceptionally healthy and with anything like order being restored we should certainly see a pleasant and long looked for revival in trade.

Due to the high prices ruling for the raw material in both America and India we have had to be more dependent upon China cotton and it is to be deplored that due to this situation our Chinese dealers have again resorted more effectively than ever to their old time malpractice of adulteration and watering of cotton. To this has now been added the even greater evil of mixing grades, more especially short staple Hankow with the best Shensi, and Shanghai cotton with Tungchow, making good spinning an even more difficult matter than it has been in the past. It is surely high time that the Chinese cotton merchants took this matter into their own hands and insisted upon adulteration and false delivery being made a criminal offence. How is it possible for this great industry and the growth of cotton to thrive when these malpractices are allowed to pass without any punishment?

This concludes all I have to say, but before proposing the adoption of the report and accounts I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my abbility any questions that you may like to ask.

No questions were asked and the formal resolutions were carried unanimously.

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES

THE SHANTUNG ROAD HOSPITAL

The Oldest British Public Institution Greatly in Need of New Buildings

Great interest was shown in the annual meeting of subscribers to the Shantung Road Hospital, last Friday, the small room in which the meeting was held being more than comfortably filled with foreign and Chinese visitors. Mr. S. Barton, C.M.G., H.M. Consul-General, presided, supported by, amongst others, Sir Edward Pearce, the Very Rev. Dean C. J. F. Symons, Dr. D. MacGillivray, Messrs. J. H. Teesdale, L. J. Cubitt, F. R. Scott, Geo. Matheson, A. D. Bell, Chu Pao-san and Ellis Pugh (hon. secretary and treasurer).

The Chairman—This is the second occasion on which I have been honoured with an invitation to preside at the annual general meeting of subscribers to this Hospital, and it certainly is a privilege to be associated with the one public occasion in the year on which residents of Shanghai have the opportunity of testifying to their admiration of the great work of healing and service which is carried on by this Hospital and their respect for the workers who carry on their labours under what are still, perhaps, disheartening conditions arising from their very cramped and inadequate quarters. In spite of this, the report for last year shows the usual record of cheerful and efficient work. It also contains a report of progress in a direction other than purely hospital work, namely, the training of nurses, which I think is an earnest of what this Hospital should, and we all hope really will be able to do in this important branch of medical education, especially in China, when once the new buildings which we hope one day to see are available. The report also alludes to the receipt of a very welcome legacy from the estate of the late Mr. Taylor, but unfortunately a considerable portion of this had to be expended on much needed repairs to the old buildings because we are not yet in sight of the day when rebuilding as a whole will be possible. Once more we note the continued generous support of the Race Club, who have been such good friends in the past.

SMALLER CHINESE SUBSCRIPTIONS.

On the other hand, as an example of the ups and downs with which most things in Shanghai are characterized from time to time, is the marked drop in the amount of Chinese subscriptions. Last year we welcomed a record in the amount of Chinese subscriptions, but this year is a considerable drop. Personally, and I am sure all of us believe that this does not indicate any real falling off of interest on the part of our Chinese friends in the work of the Hospital by which they are the principal beneficiaries. I am sure that when the time comes to put a definite reconstruction proposal forward we shall find that our Chinese friends will rally to the support of the Hospital in a way that will leave no doubt of their intention to do their part in placing it beyond the possibility of want in the future.

The grant from the International Municipal Council has stood at the present figure for many years, but though it has not increased, the report shows that the number of Municipal employees benefiting by the Hospital has increased very largely and it would, I think, be a fitting recognition of the ever-increasing contribution which this Hospital makes to the service of the community in this town if the Municipal grant were increased.

THE NEED FOR RE-BUILDING.

An innovation in the report is the extremely interesting history of the Hospital which now appears for the first time. That history is extremely interesting reading and I hope that the reading of it will strengthen the appeal for new buildings, which, when all is said and done, must until that appeal is met remain the principal theme of anybody who has to speak on these occasions. That history shows us that the Hospital is the oldest British public institution in Shanghai. If you go through the inspiring experience of mounting to the roofs of some of the new skyscrapers housing much younger institutions and look over this really remarkable town of Shanghai, you will not be able to help noting that you can discern no building which you are told is a hospital and which is worthy to house an institution with traditions such as this one has. Some of these new buildings, I believe, still contain empty rooms, but it is certain that when the new buildings for this hospital are erected you will not be able to find a spare corner in them. Therefore, as on many previous occasions, the note which one would like to stress, and the thought one would like to leave with those now present, is that there can be no doubt that in the coming year we can best help the Hospital by seeing that we keep before the community, as opportunity may serve each of us, the great and imperative need of the provision at the earliest possible date of new buildings worthy of this institution, its work and its workers. (Applause).

THE COMMITTEES.

On the proposition of the Chairman, the report and accounts for the past year, as presented, were adopted. The following committees were then elected:—

Foreign Committee.—The present trustees (Messrs. J. H. Teesdale, L. J. Cubitt, C. M. Bain and Rev. E Box), Dr. C. J. Davenport (Medical Superintendent), Dr. R. J. Marshall (consulting medical officer), Dr. A. C. Bryson, Sir Edward Pearce, Messrs. F. R. Scott, E. Pugh, A. D. Bell, R. W. Wells and E. S. Elliston.

Chinese Committee.—Messrs. Chu Pao-san, Fu Sie-wan, Wang Yi-ting, M. Y. Chung, Chun Fai-ting, Loh Ve yung, Shik Luk-sung, Yu Ya-ching, Tam Hoi-chow, Chun Bing-him, Bai Shing-shun, Chang Lan-ping, Chun Shut-kai, Sisson Nie, Jabin Hsu and C. P. Yim.

In proposing the election of the Foreign Committee, Mr. Cubitt stated that Mr. Elliston would take the place of Mr. Pugh as secretary. They were all very sorry to lose Mr. Pugh, who had been secretary for a number of years and had done an enormous amount of work for the Hospital. Fortunately they would retain his services on the committee.

PRAISE FOR THE STAFF.

Sir Edward Pearce—It is with very great pleasure that for a third time I have to propose a vote of thanks to the visiting doctors and to the Hospital staff. I think it is little known to our subscribers that among our local medical fraternity so many of them give their help and assistance without any tangible reward beyond the satisfaction of being able to relieve the suffering from pain and to witness the gradual recovery of their patients to health. It is therefore with much pleasure that I extend the thanks and appreciation of subscribers for their valuable services, their voluntary aid, medical and surgical skill. I refer to Dr. W. L. New, Dr. B. H. Stanley Alyward, who has very kindly carried on the work of Dr. Couper Patrick during his absence, Dr. Hay Bolton, Dr. Friedlander and Dr. Billinghurst, who retired from China in the spring of this year. It is also very gratifying to the subscribers to read the report placed before them to-day recording the great work performed so unostentatiously and so harmoniously by the permanent officials, doctors, superintending sisters, and the Chinese staff. A mere glance at the extraordinary number of patients treated, that is, 2,902 in-patients and 104,663 out-patients, bears silent testimony to the good work and to the appreciation which I am sure all patients feel when leaving the hospital cured of all their suffering.

It is perhaps not for me, in asking you to record your vote of thanks to one and all of the Hospital staff, to touch upon the

COMPANY MEETINGS

SHANGHAI & HONGKEW WHARF CO., LD.

Annual Meeting of Shareholders

The annual general meeting of shareholders in the Shanghai & Hongkew Wharf Co., Ltd., was held at the offices of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., Ltd., the general agents, on March [illegible] 1924. Mr. A. Brooke Smith (the Chairman) presided, supported by Messrs. C. Gordon Mackie, H. W. Lester, Pan Ching-poo, P. L. Knight, N. Lees-Smith (directors), P. A. H. Chambers (superintendent), J. J. Dunn (secretary) and a number of shareholders, [illegible] shares being represented.

The Chairman said: The directors regret that the result of the year's working compares unfavourably with the showing for 1922, but I feel we should not be dissatisfied with the balance at credit of profit and loss account, considering the absence of trade activity.

As usual, an interim dividend of Tls. 3 per share was paid last August and it is now recommended that a final dividend of Tls. 10 per share be distributed, making Tls. 13 for the year. It is proposed that we should allocate Tls. 60,000 to ordinary repairs and renewals account, Tls. 50,000 to special repairs and renewals account and Tls. 50,000 to depreciation reserve. These amounts in the aggregate are the same as last year and I venture to hope they will have your approval. The directors suggest that Tls. 9,854.49 be paid as a bonus to the staff at the wharves in recognition of the good work done on behalf of the company.

On June 30 last we redeemed the "D" debentures and the item of interest on debentures will not appear in our next year's accounts. Our property account has, you will notice, been increased by Tls. 132,874.26, mainly due to the erection of much needed transit sheds at Pootung East Wharf. During 1923, we berthed [illegible] more than in 1922 but [illegible] average [illegible] Tls. [illegible]. While we handled practically the same amount of cargo as in the previous year, it moved off rapidly and our godown accommodation was not utilized in the way we should have liked. The Hongkew and Old Ningpo wharves were kept fully employed during the year, but the Pootung wharves could have berthed a great many more steamers.

Outgoings on account of dredging have been heavy and with the deeper draught vessels that are now visiting Shanghai I am afraid our expenditure on this connection will increase. To cover the ever increasing ratio of working expenses in general, particularly on the Shanghai side of the river, it has been arranged that from June 1 next a [illegible] per cent. on the [illegible] handling and delivery charges will be instituted. At the same time it is proposed to increase the return to vessels berthed at Pootung from 7½ to 15 per cent. in the hope of making that side of the river more attractive to shipping companies. You may be aware that in spite of these charges a Pootung most shipping companies prefer to have their vessels accommodated on the Shanghai side of the river. Storage charges are to remain unaltered and it is not anticipated that the advance in rates alone will increase our earnings materially. As my predecessor remarked last year, we are now in a better position than we have ever been before to take full advantage of any improvement in trade which, [illegible] for the unsettled state of the country, would, I am confident, develop rapidly. Notwithstanding the all such drawbacks, the year has opened fairly well and prospects are not unsatisfactory.

Before proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability any questions shareholders may desire to ask.

No questions were asked and [illegible] were carried unanimously.

Mr. Brodie A. Clarke—I think that before we go away we should record a vote of thanks to the general managers and the board of directors for the very favourable accounts they have placed before us. The Chairman has told us that the past year was not as good as last, but I think we can say that every [illegible] year cannot be [illegible] I move a hearty vote of thanks to the general managers and the board of directors.

Mr. H. J. Clark—I have much pleasure in seconding that.

The Chairman—Thank you very much for your kind remarks. I hope that next year we shall be able to present you with better accounts.

EWO COTTON MILLS

Shareholders' Annual Meeting: Many Serious Handicaps

The third ordinary meeting of shareholders in the Ewo Cotton Mills, Ld., was held at the offices of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., Ld. (general managers), on Tuesday. Mr. A. Brooke Smith (the Chairman) presided, and there were also present Messrs. C. Gordon Mackie, E. E. Clark, H. Martin Little, W. Wakeford Cox, Zee Quan-yuen, Pan Ching-poo and Woo Ling-shu (Consulting Committee), Mr. R. J. McNicol (secretary), and the following shareholders:—Messrs. V. Gensburger, A. S. Ellis, E. F. Ellis, Pan Tah-chuen, Jas. Harrop Ellis Hayim, W. R. Lemarchand, J. Spunt and Brodie A. Clarke, a total holding of [illegible] shares being represented. The secretary read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report.

The Ghairman—The report and statement of accounts having been in your hands for over [illegible] with your approval, I will take them as read.

The profit for the year was Tls. 538,758.90, which, with the amount brought forward, leaves Tls. 869,615.39 available for distribution. Considering the many difficulties encountered, I trust shareholders will not be dissatisfied with the result shown. I will now proceed to comment briefly on the proposed allocation of profits. The dividend of 8 per cent on the preference shares, absorbing Tls. 72,000, is in accordance with the terms on which these shares were issued. The suggested dividend on ordinary shares of Tls. 6.75 per share, equivalent to 11 per cent., will, I must, meet with your approval. The amounts provided for depreciation of buildings and of plant and machinery are rather higher than those of last year, but, although liberal, are not excessive. The amounts written off water supply, furniture and motor car do not call for comment. During the year we have spent on special repairs and renewals Tls. 98,436.63 and by adding Tls. 40,000 to this fund, now standing at Tls. 61,563 [illegible] our policy of providing that our mills will be kept up to the highest possible standard of efficiency. Our staff at the mills have worked wholeheartedly in the interests of the company and I feel sure that the sum of Tls. [illegible] recommended as a bonus to them will have your sanction. It has been well earned and will be highly appreciated.

A GOVERNMENT DEBT

Turning to the balance sheet, you will notice that our reserves remain intact, and aggregate Tls. 4,101,256.23. On December 31 we had at the credit of Chinese [illegible] Tls. [illegible] and as this is more than sufficient to cover all known liabilities to our employees, no call need be made on last year's profits to augment this fund. You will observe that further additions have been made to buildings and plant and machinery and I am hopeful that the money invested will be productive of satisfactory results when conditions are more normal. The amount due from the Chinese Government represents the balance and interest due on cloth supplied to the Board of War as far back as 1919, and although we have exerted and continue to exert every pressure through H. M. Minister and our own representatives in Peking, it is only occasionally that we receive a small payment on account, notwithstanding the fact that the debt is fully acknowledged by the Chinese Government. Recently [illegible] unfortunate chain [illegible] a deputation to the Chinese Government, nevertheless the present situation is most deplorable, and I feel that we cannot hope to see confidence restored in this country until a government is established capable of keeping peace and good order and meeting its financial obligations. The employment of numbers of officials and militarists is undoubtedly retarding the progress of this vast country, and it is regrettable that the Powers do not take concerted action to bring about unification, without which industries will, I am afraid, continue to languish.

A DEPRESSING YEAR.

The year under review has been the worst experienced by the cotton mill industry in China for a great many years. While we were able to work full time at all our mills except the Yangtszepoo mills, where we adopted short time during July and August, we had most anxious times for most of the year and I regret that the outlook for the near future causes us much concern. Except from June to October, the marketing of our products was most difficult and during the greater part of the year yarn was sold at a loss. We were more fortunate with cloth and the products of our other departments, which, together with fortunate purchases of cotton, were mainly responsible for the year's profit. On all sides we hear of additions to weaving plants in China and the day may not be distant when cloth will be a non-paying proposition as we have at times seen it in the past.

EXORBITANT COTTON PRICES.

During the whole of 1923 cotton was maintained at a very high level and during the last few months of the year reached exorbitant prices, owing to the world's shortage, and while we have recently experienced a substantial decline, we are still a long way from the point where we can expect demand for yarn and cloth will be more than to fill the urgent needs of consumers. I would here like to enter a protest against the malpractice of adulteration by water which has become increasingly common—in fact, it may now be considered general—in all Chinese Cottons that are sent to Shanghai. As much as 20 per cent. moisture has recently been found in deliveries to the mills—this means that some 12 per cent. of water has been fraudulently added—and I need hardly say that this adulteration causes rapid deterioration, besides involving no little danger of fire through spontaneous combustion. The mixing of large quantities of inferior cottons with better qualities continues unchecked and unless these two fraudulent practices cease it will mean that mill owners here, being unable to rely on Chinese cottons, will have to look abroad for their supplies to a greater extent than hitherto.

CHILD LABOUR.

As you are aware, there has been considerable attention devoted recently in certain quarters to the employment of child labour. On more than one occasion I have pointed out that the real remedy for the state of affairs now prevailing is legislation and inspection by competent and honest officials throughout China. As this is not likely to be brought about immediately, we issued instructions that from September 1, 1923, no boy under 10 or girl under 12 would be admitted inside our mills. Our efforts in this direction have met with some success, but it is only by constant watching on the part of the staff at the mills that we are able to maintain this rule. There is no doubt, however, that workers, both parents and children, would have been [illegible] pleased had the [illegible] not taken place.

A POOR OUTLOOK.

From the remarks I have already made, you will realize that I am not optimistic about the near future, but given peace and good order in the land and reasonably cheap cotton, I have not a doubt in my mind that the cotton mill industry will again flourish, especially if the Government takes steps to foster all industries by the abolition of taxation that is now a serious handicap to rapid development, which would provide greater employment for the masses who [illegible] on the borders of starvation and for the want of a better means of livelihood often turn their hands to banditry. Some Chinese owned mills have been closed down for many weeks and a number have been working short time for months, but the reduced output has not yet made itself felt and spinners cannot to-day purchase cotton and produce yarn without suffering a severe loss. The cloth situation is somewhat brighter, but the margin of profit leaves a great deal to be desired.

During the year, Messrs. R. M. Dalgliesh and F. Ayscough resigned from the Consulting Committee on their departure from Shanghai, and our thanks are due to these gentlemen for their services.

No questions were asked and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

"That the report and statement of accounts as presented be passed and that the allocation of profits for the past year as recommended be adopted."

"That Messrs. C. Gordon Mackie, E. E. Clark, H. Martin Little, W. Wakeford Cox, Zee Quan-yuen, Chai Lai-fong, Pan Ching-poo and Woo Ling-shu be re-elected members of the Consuling Committee."

"That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected auditors at the remuneration of Tls. 5,000 for the coming year."

SHANGHAI LOAN AND INVESTMENT CO.

Annual Meeting

The fifth annual meeting of the Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ld., was held on Tuesday afternoon at the offices of the general agents (Messrs. George McBain). Mr. R. S. F. McBain presided, and was supported by Messrs. John Prentice, A. W. Burkill and A. J. Welch, directors.

In his speech the Chairman said:—

The result of the year's working was fairly satisfactory, and the profit and loss account, including the balance brought forward from last year of Tls. 17,597.29, shows a credit balance of Tls. 185,693.34 and your directors will recommend that this amount be dealt with as follows:—

	Tls.
To pay a dividend of 10 per cent.	125,000.00
To add to general reserve (bringing the amount up to Tls. 100,000)	25,000.00
To carry forward	35,693.34
Tls.	185,693.34

I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything more about the accounts, as I believe that the report makes everything quite clear.

THE EXPLORATION LOAN.

The Shanghai Exploration & Development Co., Ld. is making arrangments to repay the amount owing by them to us. They propose to offer to their shareholders one share at par (Tls. 5) for each share in the company held by them, and their directors have decided to offer to us at the same time 100,000 shares at Tls. 6 per share. This will mean that the total capital of the company will then be Tls. 3,000,000 in 600,000 shares of Tls. 5 each. This will place the company in a sound position and it is the intention of the directors therefore to accept the offer. The balance owing to us will be paid in cash. The offer is made to us in return for the financial assistance we have given them and because their directors felt that if they had been forced to apply elsewhere for the necessary capital they would also have had to pay something in addition to interest.

There were no questions, and the formal resolution were adopted.

SMALL INVESTORS LD.

Statutory and Ordinary Meetings

The first meeting of shareholders in the Small Investors Ld. was held on Wednesday afternoon at the offices of the company, Szechuen Road. Mr. G. H. Wright, chairman of directors, presided and was supported by Messrs. H. C. Marshall and B. W. Gale, directors, Mr. Douglas Fleming, managing director, and Mr. J. C. Burgess, secretary. The assurance represented 11,770 Shares.

The notice convening the statutory meeting having been read, the Chairman said: Gentlemen, this meeting is called to comply with the Companies Ordinances, which as you are probably aware, require every public company to hold a statutory meeting within three months from the date on which the company is entitled to do business.

The statutory report has been in your hands for several days and with your permission I will follow the usual course and take it as read. From it you will have seen that the 80,000 shares offered for public subscription have been taken up and the amount due on application fully paid. Considering the stringency of the money market at the time subscriptions were invited, it is satisfactory to place on record that applications were received for 10,456 shares in excess of the number offered.

The agreement for the sale and purchase of the business formerly carried on by Mr. Douglas Fleming, sole proprietor of the Small Investors' Company, referred to in clause 3 of the articles of association, has been duly executed and the fixtures taken over as provided in that agreement.

In our prospectus we estimated that our preliminary expenses (including legal expenses, auditors' fees, registration fees, underwriting commission, etc.) would be in the neighbourhood of Tls. 7,000, and I am pleased to be able to state that they will be well below this figure.

A list of shareholders is lying on the table and is open for your inspection.

As we are holding our first ordinary general meeting immediately after this meeting, I will reserve until then the few additional remarks I have to make, but if you have any questions to ask in connexion with the report, I shall be pleased to answer them to the best of my ability.

There were no questions, and the statutory report as presented was adopted, on the proposal of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Marshall.

A PROMISING OUTLOOK.

The first annual general meeting of the company was held immediately on the conclusion of the statutory meeting, Mr. Wright presiding.

The Chairman said: Gentlemen, it is necessary, in order to comply with the Companies Ordinances, to hold an ordinary general meeting of shareholders once at least in every calendar year and, as our first financial period will not terminate until December 31, 1924, which means that the first accounts will not be ready until the early part of 1925, your directors have thought it advisable to take advantage of your presence at the statutory meeting just concluded to do so now.

The company received permission from the Registrar of Companies on December 14, 1923 to commence business. In our opening two months a very large business has been done, as can be seen from the daily list of transactions which we record in the press. It would be seen from these reports that we deal in a very large variety of stocks. During our first two months we have had many interruptions, first the Christmas holidays, then the New Year holidays and for a whole week the market was closed during the China New Year holidays.

A very encouraging feature of our business is the great number of small orders we are receiving and for these we especially cater. We have the organization and we make it a special feature to give the man with Tls. 50 to invest as much attention as we bestow on our largest orders. From all over China now we are receiving, hai oarsmen carried off the honours in every event, a record which we may well feel proud.

THE RELIABLE VETERANS.

On the other hand, I feel it incumbent upon me to utter a word or two of warning. If you look down the names of the crews you will see that the men who rowed in the fours also rowed in the eights, those who rowed in the pairs also rowed in both fours and eights, and our sculling representative took part also in the pairs, fours and eights. Moreover, the men who represented Shanghai at Hongkong in the spring were again called upon as our representatives in the autumn. The point that I am endeavouring to emphasize is that we have only a very limited number of oarsmen of outstanding merit, and our second strings, on whom we shall have to rely in future, are so far behind these happy few that we were forced to call upon these few oarsmen in every event to row for Shanghai. This was a point that had our very earnest consideration prior to the Regatta, and was discussed at a meeting of your committee which Mr. Graham, as coach, was invited to attend, when it was ultimately decided that we could select no better crews, and it was only fair to both ourselves and our opponents to put the strongest crews available into the races.

Speaking of oarsmanship, I must just say a word or two bout the griffins. They worked like trojans, and must indeed be complimented on the amount of training they put in. On the other hand, that this training was not to the best advantage was evidenced by the style ultimately displayed, which, it must be confessed, was somewhat disappointing. For this I am not blaming the griffins in the least. I am rather apologizing to them, inasmuch as the Interport events both in the spring and autumn took up the whole of our senior oarsmen's time, with the result that it was impossible for them to spare any time to give advice and coaching to the griffins. It is to be hoped that during the coming season those of our seniors who are retiring on their well won laurels will make a special point of assisting the younger oarsmen in every possible way, and from what I know of our senior men it is a hope that has only to be expressed to be speedily realized.

THE SWIMMING SECTION.

To turn very briefly to swimming affairs. It is a matter for very great gratification to find the club's representatives maintaining the very high standard set in recent years, and even improving upon it. As in the previous season, we again hold every championship except two, and but for an unfortunate slip on the part of our representative in the 100 yd. backstroke event, would have held all but one. This is a record of which we may well feel proud, and it should be sufficient spur, if any is needed, to our younger swimmers to fit themselves, by diligent training and practice, to carry on the good work of those who have raised the club to its present eminent position in this branch of sport, at such time as the latter by reason of anno domini or other unavoidable circumstances are forced to retire from active participation. Our particular congratulations are due to Mr. C. N. Brown, who lowered two local records, namely the 220 yd. and 100 yd. free style.

It is much to be regretted that, due to lack of support, the Basketball League failed to survive the season, so that I am unable to congratulate our players on repeating their win of last year. It is sincerely to be hoped that next season will see a general revival of interest in the game, which is difficult to beat from the point of view of keeping one fit during the winter months.

We have again to thank the Shanghai Nanking Railway for the facilities afforded us, as in past years. This has already been mentioned in our report, but I should like to emphasize to Mr. Wayne, Mr. Richardson and Mr. Yun of the Traffic Department our deep sense of gratitude for their personal interest in the club's doings at Henli. Our thanks are also due to Messrs. K. C. Evans and H. V. Gulston for kindly auditing the club's accounts, by no means a light task and generally a very thankless one.

Finally, I would like to express to the outgoing committee my personal and sincere appreciation of their assistance and co-operation during the past year. That it has been a busy year you will readily gather from the report in your hands and my few remarks, and all have worked together harmoniously and with but one object in view, namely, the furtherance of the interests of the club as a whole.

The report and accounts having been duly passed, the next business before the meeting was the election of the officers and committee for the coming year. This resulted as follows:—Captain, D. M. Graham; Vice-Captain, F. W. Schlobohm; Hon. Sec. J. G. B. Dewar; Hon. Treas., H. V. Gulston; Committee:—R. G. Woodhead, L. G. Day, E. V. Featherstonhaugh, L. P. Kurt, E. T. Stelle, E. A. Brodie, R. L. Evans and H. J. Collar.

A telegram was received during the meeting from Mr. Carl Neprud, who expressed his pleasure that the spirit of the "Scrubs" was still alive in the Club. It will be remembered that Mr. Neprud was the founder of this organization, which was so prominent at the Autumn Regatta in 1922.

Mr. Gulston inquired about the housing problem at Henli, and was informed by the Captain that as a result of the heavy expenses incurred last season in repairs to the bath and general building the matter of Henli had to be left over to this year, but it would doubtless receive the earnest attention of the incoming committee.

Sundry other matetrs of a minor importance having been discussed, the meeting adjourned after a vote of thanks to the Captain and outgoing committee had been passed.

SHANGHAI HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A Successful Year: Horticulture Flourishing in Shanghai

The annual meeting of the Shanghai Horticultural Society was held at the Cathedral Girls' School, Yates Road, on Wednesday evening. The chair was taken by Sir Skinner Turner, President of the Society, supported by Mr. E. J. Cornfoot (Hon. Treas.), Mr. D. Macgregor (Hon. Sec. and Director) and Messrs. P. H. Nye, R. W. Wells and E. S. Wilkinson. The attendance was good.

Sir Skinner Turner, proposing the adoption of the report and accounts, said the Society was in a very flourishing condition at the present time. It had not always been so, but now they were on the upward path he trusted they would maintain the position they held during the coming year. That it could be maintained he felt sure, if the members would give the committee their backing. One of the simplest ways in which they could do this was by obtaining new members. Their's was not a very expensive society,—at $5 per year.

One move they had made last year had proved a great success,—the election of a ladies' sub-committee to take in hand the organizing of the autumn show. Their work was extremely successful, and it was not too high to say that that show was one of the best they had ever held. The thanks of Shanghai were due to the ladies for the trouble they had taken.—Another new move was the affiliation of their society with the National Flower Societies in England and for the first time, to the best of his knowledge, in the history of Shanghai, they were offering medals from the different societies at Home for various flowers, including the National Rose Society's medal.

He wished to pay public tribute to the work that had been done on behalf of the Society by their Secretary and Director, Mr. Macgregor, who had loved the Society from the time he had first come to Shanghai. He also wished to express their thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Cornfoot, whose energy and keenness had created quite a new feeling of enthusiasm towards the Society in Shanghai.

Sir Skinner went on to remark that they were at the beginning of Spring. To-morrow i.e., to-day, the Chinese celebrated "the Day of the Excited Insects" and it was up to members of their Society to become "excited insects" in their own gardens. With that he would move the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. P. H. Nye seconded and the motion was carried unanimously.

On the proposition of Mr. W. H. Trenchard Davis Sir Skinner was re-elected President.

Expressing his appreciation of the honour, Sir Skinner remarked that he was a believer in constant change at the head of this and every other society. Accordingly he warned them that after having served for them during the years of 1923-4 he would have to refuse them for 1925.

THE OFFICERS.

The committee was re-elected en bloc, i.e. Messrs. P. H. Nye, R. W. Wells, E. S. Wilkinson and Way Yu-Ding.

Mr. Macgregor was re-elected Hon. Sec. and Director.—A vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Fleet for so kindly allowing them the use of the room in which to hold their meeting.

In proposing a vote of thanks to the ladies' sub-committee Sir Skinner said he felt sure that in view of the excellent work of these ladies during the past year they would have no hesitation in returning them again.

The proposition was agreed to, and accordingly Lady Turner, and Mesdames Merriman, Nye, C. J. Scott, C. Skinner, Trenchard Davis, and E. J. Cornfoot (Hon. Sec.) were re-elected.—Mr. Keating was also thanked for the hard work he had done in auditing the accounts.

The Society has a balance at the bank of $935.08.—The exact date of the three yearly shows will be advertised in due course.

accounts, but one cannot but be rather disconsolate at the meagre subscription from the Chinese community to this Hospital, amounting as it does this year to only Tls. 5,861.36 towards the upkeep of the Hospital and the kindly attention given to no less than some 107,000 Chinese patients who have sought advice and sympathy in their sufferings. I would appeal once again to the Chinese committee to see if this state of affairs cannot be rectified in the coming year.

In closing, I have pleasure in welcoming our three new sisters, Miss Gunn, Miss Foster and Miss Clark, and I can heartily support what has been said by the Chairman as to the needs of the Hospital. I feel certain that when a fine substantial Hospital is built in the place of this one, our Chinese friends will give us their hearty support with money and that they also will bless us.

Dr. Davenport replied on behalf of the staff and said that he hoped there soon would be a Union Medical Training School in Shanghai. Arrangements were being discussed now and if it could be brought about it would be a great advantage to the Hospital and also would enable it to do still better work.

On the proposition of Mr. Pugh, a vote of thanks was accorded to the auditor (Mr. E. S. Elliston) and to Mr. B. H. M. Brenchall, who he said had given great assistance with the accounts. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

ST. DAVID'S SOCIETY

Annual Meeting and Concert

The annual meeting of the St. David's Society was held in the Union Church Hall, on Saturday, under the chairmanship of the President, Mr. Ellis Pugh. There was a large gathering of members and their friends, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The hall was appropriatly decorated by the Ladies' Committee, shields bearing the coats-of-arms of all the Welsh Counties lining the walls. Crayon sketches by Mrs. Evan Morgan, kindly lent to the Society, also hung on the walls and these pictures of Welsh castles were the source of much interest. A large Welsh flag also was a prominent feature.

The Chairman opened the proceedings by welcoming the new and old members, then turned to the business part.

After a review of the Society's financial condition, the election of officers took place, the following being elected:—

President, Mr. T. I. Vaughan; Vice-President, Mr. L. R. Rees; Hon. Secretary, M. O. G. R. Beynon; Treasurer, Mr. T. J. Evans; Committee, Mrs. J. B. Grant, Capt. J. H. Jones, Messrs. J. F. Jones and G. T. Lloyd.

The business concluded, an interesting musical programme followed, Mrs. O. G. R. Beynon gave excellent renderings of "Neges Blodeuyn," "Merch Megan," and "The Welsh Englishman." Mrs. Gardner, who possesses a fine soprano voice, delighted the audience with her songs, "Spring's Awakening" and "A Birthday." The gathering was very fortunate to have in its number Mrs. Umpleby, who a new comer to Shanghai, sang two songs, her contralto voice being of exceptional quality. Pianoforte solos were given by Mr. W. Howells. Mr. R. M. Howells gave two excellent recitations and Mr. W. E. Hughes sang "Fy Nhol'y," "Mentra Gwen" and "Nos Galan." Mr. Hughes' Welsh sounds good to the exiled cymro, like a fresh breeze from home. Refreshments were partaken of during an interval.

The Chairman in his remarks, mentioned the death in the course of the past year of the late Mr. Edward Evans, who was a life member of the society. Mr Evans had done a great deal towards forming the St. David's Society in Shanghai. The President also read a letter from the former President Mr Evan Morgan, who is now taking a holiday in Wales. Reference was made to the new book of rules and regulations compiled during the past year. Copies can be had from the secretary, Mr O. G. R. Beynon, Shantung Road Hospital.

Mr. Vaughan, on behalf of friends, wished Mr. Pugh, who is shortly going on home leave, bon voyage and a pleasant time at home. The singing of "Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau," and "God Save the King" brought the enjoyable celebration to a close.

Miss J. Huggett and Mr. Carver were the piano accompanists for the evening.

HOLY TRINITY CATHEDRAL

Annual Meeting: New Organ Due Next Year: Heavy Costs of Erection Forecast

The welcome announcement was made at the annual meeting of the subscribers to Holy Trinity Cathedral on Monday, that the new organ, completing the Cathedral's War Memorial, will be delivered in Shanghai in March of next year. The old organ will be in use up to Christmas, when arrangements will have to be made for its removal and sale in order that the memorial organ might be prepared for. The old organ will, accordingly, be on sale to any church, mission, or individual who may wish its purchase.

The meeting was held at the Cathedral Church House. The Consul-General, Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., presided, supported by the Dean, Very Rev. C. J. F. Symons, Mr. A. C. Clear (Hon. Treas.) and Mr. E. L. Allen (Hon. Sec.).

Those also present were: Messrs. E. Page, J. J. Dawe, A. E. C. Thompson, P. L. Knight, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Young, Rev. T. W. Hall, R. M. J. Martin, Rev. W. Robbins, Lord Addington, T.E. Trueman, P. W. O. Liddell, O. M. Green and Mrs. Bichard, Mrs. Gorton, Mrs. A. Samson, Mrs. Symons, Mrs. I. W. Hall, Mrs. Chapley, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Hodges, and Messrs. S. J. Williams, D. P. Griffiths, Dr. W. Tucker, J. A. Smallbone, C. J. Passikides, and Norman Smith.

On the proposition of the Dean, seconded by Mr. A. C. Clear, Mr. E. L. Allen was re-elected Secretary, after which the Rev. Robbins opened the meeting with prayer.

THE MEMORIAL ORGAN.

Mr. Edney Page, proposing the adoption of the report and accounts of the Trustees, reminded the meeting that while the income of the Trustees was fixed, their expenditure was by no means fixed, and they were not in such a happy position as the Vestry when attempting to raise money. The consequence was that they were rather liable to run over their mark, as they had done during the past few years, and they were likely to be in the same condition till they were blessed with better times,—when the Church House and the Deanery no longer needed repairs. These expenses had, however, been lighter this year, though the Shanghai Municipal Council had made them completely re-wire the Cathedral on the grounds that it was unsafe, at a cost of some Tls. 600.

They were able to state at last that the new organ, completing the Cathedral War memorial, would be delivered in Shanghai by March of next year. This required that they look forward to that date and consider how they were to meet the liabilities which would fall on their shoulders as a result. It had been decided no expense was to be spared in this matter to make the memorial thoroughly suitable, and such as they would like to see as a worthy memorial to those who had gone,—but a considerable sum of money would be needed. They had enough money in London for the shipping of the organ at that end, but they would at this end have to meet all other expenses. They would see by the report that the Trustees had £5,325 18s. 8d. for their purpose, and they had already paid the first instalment of £2,000. The burden now fell on the congregation and their friends, and it would be a heavy one. No less than another $15,000 would be needed, even if they were successful in selling the old organ.

THE NEW ORGAN'S POSITION.

The new instrument would be ranged on a platform 10½ ft. in height and would be far more visible to the Church than is the present organ. The choir and vestry would be immediately beneath it, an arrangement that had always been very badly needed, and which, he felt sure, would be greatly appreciated. The old organ was for sale, and if there was anyone in the congregation who wanted a nice instrument in their music room he felt sure they could come to terms with the vestry.—(Laughter). It would have to be removed in any case after Christmas in order to make room for the new organ. He hoped the congregation would bear the matter in mind and see what could be done to assist.

They had been lucky, Mr. Page continued, in getting Mr. Percy Liddell to succeed Mr. Peebles, who had resigned as a Trustee. Mr. Peebles had given them much valuable advice and assistance while he had held the office.

With that, he begged to propose the adoption of the report.—Mr. Liddell seconded and the motion was carried unanimously.

THREE OUTSTANDING NAMES.

The Dean, proposing the adoption of the report and accounts of the Vestry, said there were three outstanding names mentioned. The first was that of the Rev. C. E. Spencer, who, since their last annual meeting had left them to take up important work at Home, and about whom the report stated:

"Three and a half years' work in the Far East is a considerable break in the life of a clergyman whose work is centered in England, and the Vestry feels assured that they are voicing the opinion of the Congregation when they record their appreciation of the services Mr. Spencer has rendered during this time."—(Applause).

Reference was also made, the Dean continued, to the work of the Vestry sub-Committee, appointed to make arrangements for the Rev. Spencer's successor. This sub-committee had requested Bishop Bardsley and Dean Walker to act for them at Home, and since the printing of the report they had received letters from these two gentlemen to the effect that they had not forgotten the matter, but that health reasons had prevented their sending on the nominations. However, in the meantime something had been done locally and the Vestry had made the appointment of the Rev. A. C. S. Trivett, who had been three years at Hankow and came to them well approved by his friends in that port. They were ready to give him a warm welcome when he did come, and he felt sure that his assistance would be of great value to the Vestry and the congregation generally in Shanghai.

Then they had the name of the Rev. W. Robbins who was taking his Home leave next spring. The Rev. Robbins had been a very great aid to them on Sundays, and since Mr. Spencer had been away he had been doubly valuable. He felt sure they all joined in wishing him bon voyage,—(applause), and a speedy return when his furlough was over.

The Dean went on to speak about the Services, and quoted the paragraph in the report reading:

"Confident of the unanimous approval of the Congregation a letter of appreciation was sent to the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. R. C. Young, emphasizing the high standard obtained by him in the organ and choral music of the Cathedral, to the great enhancement of the beauty of its services,' and a further letter to the ladies, gentlemen and boys of the choir for their good work in the following terms—'The musical portion of the services have been brought to a high degree of excellence. The balance, tone and expression being particularly good and greatly enhancing the beauty of the services of the Cathedral. We wish also to thank Mr. Graham Barrow for his careful training of the boys and Mr. Dexter for his valuable services as Deputy Organist.'"

THE MUSICAL SIDE.

He paid high tribute to the sterling work of those responsible for the musical side of the services. He was one of the oldest residents here, but during all the time he had been here he had never realized till this last year how really beautiful the renderings of Church music could be. The playing had not been of the "firework" character, but it had in it the qualities of real devotion and music. They owed their hearty appreciation and thanks to all the ladies and gentlemen responsible, and to the boys also. To get them to sing and join in in the way they did was a great achievement, and only two or three Sundays ago Mr. Young had been so pleased with the way the choir had acquitted itself that he took the trouble to send them a note remarking on the reverence and dignity with which they had sung.

He also thanked the Ladies' Guild for the invaluable aid it had given in the way of decorating the Cathedral on special occasions and weddings—particularly weddings.

He then proposed the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. A. C. Clear (Hon. Treas.) seconding, dwelt on the accounts at some length.

THE CATHEDRAL FINANCES.

He explained that since the printing of the report and accounts, further subscriptions had been sent in, bringing the total income guaranteed to date to Tls. 8,340. The balance required to meet all expenditure and liabilities including interest charges, Tls. 9,613.

The whole of the expenditure for which the Vestry was responsible was, in round figures Tls. 18,038. Of this the expenditure on assistant clergy absorbed Tls. 9,194. Organist, Choir and Church Expenses needed Tls. 8,843. To meet this they had the Alms Fund, pew rents and subscriptions. All expenditure in connexion with Assistant Clergy was charged to the Alms Fund; but they preferred to meet as much of this as possible from their regular income. They wished to maintain the reputation of the Cathedral as a distributing centre for charitable purposes, but at the same time had to remember that charity begins at home, and consequently it was necessary to ear-mark the whole of the Assistant Clergy expenditure as a charge upon the Alms Fund. At present, therefore, they depended on the Alms Fund to cover the expenditure of Tls. 9,194 for Assistant Clergy. Towards the cost of Organist, Choir and Church expenses totalling Tls. 8,843 they had an income of Tls. 8,340, leaving a deficit of Tls. 500 to be met. They should be easily able to obtain this amount during the year, and he had no hesitation in recommending acceptance of the Budget as shewn.

—For 1923 $7,950 was needed to meet current expenses, an increase of $800 over last year's contribution. They finished the year's working with a total deficit of Tls. 1,399.27 after providing for all liabilities. This was some Tls. 300 less than the deficit for the previous year's working and he hoped during this year they would make a substantial reduction, and possibly wipe it out altogether.

CONCERNING PEW RENTS.

Mr. Clear recalled the suggestions made at the last meeting for the abolition of pew rents on the ground that they caused a certain amount of jealousy. The whole question had been thoroughly discussed in the vestry since then and he did not think it could possibly be done if the Cathedral was to be maintained with the dignity it should be. Pew rents and subscriptions totalled two-thirds of their income and they could not afford to lose that amount. He did not think the matter would be raised again, however.

The adoption of the report and accounts was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

OFFICERS.

On the proposition of Mr. P. W. O. Liddell, seconded by Mr. C. S. Young, Mr. T. Page was re-appointed Trustee.

The following nominations for six wardens were put to the meeting and passed: Messrs. E. L. Allen, R. Calder Marshall, J. J. Dawe, P. L. Knight, S. C. Young and Captain R. M. J. Martin.

Mr. P. W. O. Liddell nominated Mr. A. C. Clear as Dean's Warden.

The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chair.

SHANGHAI ROWING CLUB

Annual General Meeting

The annual general meeting of the Shanghai Rowing Club was held on Wednesday at the boathouse. The captain of the Club, Mr. R. L. Serjeant, was in the chair, supported by the following members of the committee, Messrs. A. K. Brown, (vice-captain), E. T. Nash (hon. sec.), L. G. Day (hon. treas.), R. L. Evans and R. Rolleston West, and a fairly large attendance of other members.

The captain's speech was as follows:—

The Captain said:—Last year, if you remember, I expressed my gratitude to our energetic honourary secretary for having prepared so comprehensive a report as to leave very little for me to say. This year, I must say, I feel I have a grievance against him. So comprehensive is the report in your hands, that I find myself really with little to add.

To refer first of all to the financial affairs of the club. Some of you will doubtless have noticed that we have not paid off any further debentures during the past year. I think you will agree with me, however, if you study the figures closely, that this need give no cause for alarm. It is not due to decrease of revenue or increase of ordinary expenditure for the past year, as the figures in both cases will be found to compare favourably with previous years. You will find that expenditure on account of renovation of the bath and building amounted to no less than $6,129.54, and that deficits on the Interport Regattas at Hongkong in March and Henli in the autumn account for a further $1,510.87. Thus, these two items alone total some $7,640 odd, which, with the aid of $3,000 withdrawn from our fixed deposit at the bank, has been paid for in the course of last year's working. Deducting this $3,000, you will see that no less than $4,640 has been applied out of last year's receipts for the payment of this extraordinary expenditure, and the whole of this sum would, in a normal year, have been available for the redemption of outstanding debentures, which, I think is highly satisfactory. I have referred to this expenditure as extraordinary, in that it may definitely be regarded as non-recurring. The renovation of the bath and building has been carried out in such a comprehensive manner that no more than a nominal amount should be required annually to maintain same in a satisfactory condition.

INTERPORT REGATTAS.

The staging of two Interport regattas in the same year, one at Hongkong and one in our home waters, is not likely to occur again, but it was felt by your committee that the past season afforded an excellent opportunity to revive these events, which have been conspicuous by their absence since before the war. We considered that the event at Hongkong might be regarded as the thin end of the wedge, and that if an Interport Regatta could be arranged at Shanghai on a more ambitious scale, by inviting oarsmen from the northern ports as well as Hongkong to compete, it could be anticipated that interest in such fixtures would be definitely renewed, to the ultimate benefit of rowing not only in Shanghai, but in the Far East generally. Most unfortunately the disastrous earthquake in Japan precluded any possibility of crews being sent from that country, and the contest eventually became a triangular one between Shanghai, Hongkong and Tientsin. The results of this contest are now history, and need not be enlarged upon by me.

This brings us from the financial aspect of the club's affairs to a contemplation of its rowing activities and I would like here and now to offer my heartiest congratulations to those of our oarsmen who took part in these Interport events, and who not only worthily kept our own flag flying, but in every case brought back the flags of our opponents. At the two meetings, namely, at Hongkong in the spring and at Henli in the autumn, our Shang-

LAW REPORTS

COUNSEL'S ADMISSION HE WAS FOOLED

A Conflict of Ideas as to Representation: The Fees that are Most Talked About

The case of Sahdoo Singh v. T. R. Crank, a claim for money owing, came before his Honour Mr. Peter Grain, Assistant Judge in H. M. Supreme Court on Monday. Mr. R. C. Faithfull appeared on behalf of the plaintiff.

The Judge—You say you represent the plaintiff, Mr. Faithfull. My instructions are that you appear for the defendant.

Mr. Faithfull—No. I appear for the plaintiff. I signed the writ.

Defendant said that the debt was 11 years old. He stood guarantee for a friend.

The Judge—But don't you represent the defendant, Mr. Faithfull?

Mr. Faithfull said that was in another case. In this case he was acting for the plaintiff. There had been negotiations, in which he had discussions with the defendant, but he had never acted for him. He had not charged any fees and defendant had not asked him about his fees.

Mr. Faithfull—I admit that I have changed places. Mr. Crank is a stranger to me. He came to me and got me to induce the Indian to drop his claim by $60 and then he made a fool of me. There are two different actions.

The Judge—At the present time, Mr. Faithfull, you have got two actions before the Court for the same sum of money.

Mr. Faithfull—I have nothing to do with the first one. The plaintiff took that out and he should have withdrawn it. There is something wrong.

The Judge—There is something very wrong indeed!

An Indian who said he was the plaintiff was called to explain the matter, but he gave his name as Harra Singh and said that he held a power of attorney for the plaintiff, who had gone to India.

The Judge—Then he cannot tell us anything.

Defendant said that he paid a certain sum of money on condition that the action was withdrawn and it was not done.

Mr. Faithfull—That was not my action. Mr. Crank should have come round and seen that the action was withdrawn.

The Judge—Mr. Faithfull, you cannot say that it was the defendant's duty to withdraw the action. It was your duty or the duty of your client. You have been saying that Mr. Crank made a fool of you, but it seems to me that your client made a fool of Mr. Crank. I shall adjourn this case for a week and give the defendant an opportunity of coming to some arrangement in order that one of these actions may be withdrawn. I cannot give any costs at present.

Mr. Faithfull—They are not worth talking about. They only amount to about $20.

The Judge—That is what lawyers usually talk most about.

MRS. ROWARTH'S AMAH CHARGED

Alleged Attempt to Murder Sikh Moneylender: Echo of Supreme Court Trial

A 16-year-old amah, Wong Foo-mei, whose name was mentioned prominently at the trial of Mrs. Rowarth at H. M. Supreme Court for the attempted murder of a Bakhar Singh, a Sikh moneylender, of which she was acquitted, appeared in the dock at the Mixed Court on Monday. The girl was charged "that she, with one already charged and certain others" on May [illegible], attempted to murder the Sikh. It will be remembered that at the trial, it was stated that he was lured by several women to a lonely spot in the Wayside district, where he was attacked with a chopper. One hand was nearly severed from the arm, and his injuries were so severe that his life was despaired of.

Applying for a remand, Det.-Sub-Insp. Quayle said that he arrested the prisoner in Chaoufoong Road, on information received. For some time the police had been on the look out for the women.

On this evidence, she was remanded in custody for a week.

ERSATZ WHISKEY

Sikh Gets Too Much, and Two Months

In the British Police Court, on Monday before Mr. G. W. King, Magistrate, Munsha Singh, a watchman employed at the Ewo Cotton Mill, was charged with being drunk and disorderly, with being in possession of a loaded pistol, with pointing the weapon at Bhaded Singh and with committing a common assault.

Inspector Crookdake said that the police prosecuting solicitor wished to take charge of the case, but owing to a prior engagement he had to attend the Mixed Court that morning and therefore requested that the case should be adjourned till the afternoon.

Mr. P. W. Goldring—I have been asked to assist the prosecution. I regard it as a very serious matter and probably, after seeing Mr. Maitland, I shall ask to be allowed to add a charge of threatening to kill.

The Magistrate—Is there such charge? I have never heard of a charge of threatening to kill, though that might be what a layman would call it. Inspector, do you wish to make a more serious charge? Did this man intend to shoot?

Inspector Crookdake—Evidence will be given that the accused said he would shoot the complainant.

The Magistrate—How far did he go? Lots of people say things they would never carry out.

Inspector Crookdake—In my own mind I don't think he intended to kill him.

The Magistrate adjourned the case until the afternoon.

When the proceedings were resumed in the afternoon Mr. E. T. Maitland, Police Prosecutor, said that the accused was drunk and quarrelled with complainant. He drew a revolver, pointed it and said "I will shoot you," but made no attempt to pull the trigger. Even if he had done so he could not have fired, there being no bullet in the barrel of the weapon.

Various witnesses called supported Mr. Maitland's statement. A Chinese stated that early in the afternoon he sold two bottles of German whiskey to the accused.

His Worship—An ersatz brand, I suppose?

Inspector Crookdake—The bottle is labelled "Haig's Highland Cream."

The Chinese witness was unable to say whether or not the stuff was manufactured in Hongkew, but said that the price was $1 a bottle.

Accused denied that he carried or had ever seen the revolver. When reminded that the Chinese witness saw him take it from his pocket, he suggested that probably the witness had been paid by complainant to say so.

Accused was pressed by his Worship to say where he obtained the revolver, but maintained that he knew nothing at all about it until the following day.

Accused was sentenced to two months with hard labour, and the revolver was confiscated.

MR. Norwood F. Allman, Junior American Assessor, has resigned from the American Consular Service. He will be associated with Mr. W. S. Fleming in the practice of law in Shanghai. Mr. Howard Bucknell, JR., Consul, lately at Canton, will succeed Mr. Allman on the Mixed Court bench. Mr. Bucknell was [illegible] in 1919 and has served at Chungking, Changsha and Canton. He was recently promoted to Consul's rank.

A KIANGWAN RACE COURSE DISPUTE

Sequel to the Parking of Motor Car: Four Police Arrest a Foreigner: $50,000 Claim

In the Mixed Court on Tuesday there was a further hearing of the case in which Mr. A. Libby is claiming from the International Recreation Club $50,000 as damages for an alleged assault by one of their servants. Mr. F. J. Schuhl appeared for the complainant and Mr. G. H. Wright for the club.

Mr. Y. S. Day, secretary of the club, cross-examined on the evidence he previously had given, said that complainant told him that the buttons were pulled off his coat when he was being taken by the police to the police station. He did not say that he had been assaulted by Pointsman No. 2, an employee of the club. He asserted that some money had been stolen from his pockets. Subsequently witness made inquiries and was told that at the police station complainant and his friend were willing to pay a fine of $5.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you tell him that you had no time to go into the matter and that he could sue you without prejudice?—No. He only came to see me with regard to the wrongful parking of his car and the trouble with the police.

Re-examined, witness said that no mention of injuries was made by either of the men. The matter did not seem to be of importance and witness gathered that the chief grievance was as regards the police. That was why he told them that, although they were foreigners, they were within the jurisdiction of the Chinese police.

RACE COURSE BAD CHARACTERS.

Mr. C. R. Burkill, Vice-Chairman of the Committee of the International Rereation Club, said that there was only one tollgate at the Kiangwan race course for the entrance of the public. There was another gate, but it opened only to the private enclosure for the committee's cars. The race course was in Chinese territory and under Chinese jurisdiction. The Chapei police attended the race meetings, but they came there for their own purposes, because a lot of bad characters came to the races and the police wished to preserve law and order. They were not paid by the club, they were not there at the request of the committee and the committee had no control or jurisdiction over them. The police made their own arrangements. The Chapei police in other cases had exercised jurisdiction over foreigners to the extent of arresting them.

Supt. Wilson, of the Shanghai Municipal Police, said he was told on the course that a foreigner had been locked up and as it was very unusual witness went to see what had happened. He was admitted to the cell outside the club enclosure and Libby told him that he and a friend went in a car to the course, that his friend had violated the regulations in some way and the police arrested him—the wrong man. Whilst they were talking, the friend (Giovannini) came in and said that the matter was all right, as he had paid $5. At their request, witness went to the place where the car had been parked—a part of the road where there was a notice stating that cars must not be parked here. Later that day witness had a further conversation with the two men and they treated the matter more as a joke than anything else. They did not complain of any injuries and did not even mention having been assaulted. Libby said then that $50 or $55 had been taken out of his pockets.

Answering the Assessor (MR. Jacobs), as to whether Libby's clothes gave the impression of an assault, witness said that his collar and tie were not quite straight, suggesting that someone might have grabbed him by the neck, but nothing else.

FOUR TO ONE.

Sub-Inspector Milne said that he saw Libby being taken to the lockup by four Chapei policemen, two holding an arm each, and two having hold of his collar. Giovannini asked witness what should be done and witness told him to see Mr. Day immediately. Later in the afternoon, witness spoke to the two men, neither of whom complained of having been assaulted though Libby objected to the way in which he was handled by the police. Witness thought Libby was detained for about ten minutes.

The Assessor—Do you think he was being roughly handled?—A little more pressure than was necessary, because he was making no resistance at all.

Sub-Inspector Jones gave similar evidence.

Mr. Wright—It is alleged that Pointsman No. 2 was in the act of striking Libby and that you took the stick out of his hands—Nothing of the sort.

Did you see any assault or attempted assault?—No. No complaint was made to me of any assault.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you tell Giovannini that you saw Pointsman No. 2 assault the complainant and that you took the stick away from him?—No. I don't tell lies as a rule and I could not say that, because I was not there.

Did you say that the I.R.C. should be taught a lesson as another foreigner had been assaulted out there?—Nothing of the sort.

AN INTERCHANGE OF DIRECTIONS.

Pointsman No. 2 said that he was employed by the club to direct traffic and prevent cars stopping at unauthorized places. Witness saw the complainant and his friend stop their car at such a place and walk to the course. He told them they must not leave the car there and Libby replied, "Shut up!" Witness asked, "what thing shut up? You no can stop this side." Libby then said, "You go to ——!" On witness' suggestion they started for the office, but Libby refused to go inside and when Zung, witness' superior, tried to persuade him, Libby said, "You go away" and pushed Zung. Then he attempted to take away witness' stick and also endeavoured to assault him. Witness struggled with him for possession of the stick, several Chinese called for the police and four policemen came up and arrested Libby. Witness did not attempt to strike anyone. There was no truth in Libby's statement that witness held him so tightly by the neck that he became almost unconscious.

Zung gave corroborative evidence and added that when it was explained to Libby that he was parking his car in an unauthorized place he answered, "I don't care." They tried to persuade the two foreigners to go into the office because there was a Mr. Chang inside who had sufficient authority to settle such a dispute.

At this stage the hearing again was adjourned.

TINNED MILK BOUGHT AT AUCTION

The Mixed Court Prosecution for an Infringement of Trademarks

In the Mixed Court on Tuesday a case in which the alleged infringement of trademarks was the subject of a prosecution came to an end with the conviction of the accused. The case was heard by Mr. Allman, American Assessor, and Mr. Li, Magistrate, the accused being a grocer named Yung Chong-zung. There were two charges, the first having reference to a brand of tinned milk imported by Messrs. Carlowitz & Co., who alleged that defendant forged and uttered the trademark of an eagle and the words "El Aguilo Del Oro," "Registered Trademark," and sold and exposed for sale milk not supplied by prosecutors bearing their name, thereby injuring their business and credit. The Nestle & Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co. prosecuted in the second charge of selling milk bearing that firm's device, consisting of a flying eagle upon which was written in Chinese "Flying Eagle Old Brand."

Mr. A. M. Preston prosecuted and Mr. J. W. Schoenfeld defended.

The case was before the Court a week ago, and was continued given by a representative of on Tuseday, when evidence was Messrs. W. Funder & Co., auctioneers, to the effect that on October 23 last year they sold 300 cases of unlabelled tins of condensed milk. Ten of these were opened as samples, and at that time they were unlabelled.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

THE ACCUSED SURPRISED.

Evidence for the defence was to the effect that the accused (a grocer) had purchased three cases of the milk, and on receipt found that the tins were labelled. He had been in business as a grocer for six years, but did not know the brand. He had bought them as unlabelled tins and was surprised to find a label on them.

An auction broker stated that he took delivery of three cases from Messrs. Funder on October 24 or 25, having bought them as unlabelled tins. Having been in business for 30 years as an auction broker it did not surprise him to find that they were labelled, which he discovered when they were opened. He knew that the milk was not good: he believed it came from Japan or possibly Hongkong. He did not take any samples to the shop.

The Assessor asked why, having bought it as unlabelled milk, he did not send it back when he found that it was labelled.

Witness replied that they often bought milk as unlabelled and then found that the tins had labels on them. He admitted that he knew the brand of Carlowitz & Co.'s milk which had been on the market for 15 or 20 years, but he had not seen it for several years past.

In giving the decision of the Court the Assessor said that they did not believe the story of the defence. They believed that the milk had been bought unlabelled and a fine of $50 would be imposed upon the shop keeper.

INFRINGEMENTS OF TRADEMARKS

Five More Chinese Offenders: Imitation Cigar Bands: Prosecutors' Rights Challenged

A trade name imitation on an extensive scale was alleged at the Mixed Court on Thursday in connexion with the prosecution of five Chinese shopkeepers for wrongfully and unlawfully using the mark and seal of "Londres" cigars. An interesting point in the case was that the foreign firm who prosecuted, are themselves being challenged as to ownership of the trade name. The complainant was Mr. I. Delbourgo, agent for Messrs. Walter Olsen & Co., Inc.

Mr. S. Moss appeared to prosecute, and Mr. A. C. Holborow watched the case on behalf of Mr Carl Ingenhohl.

Mr. Holborow informed the Court that his client claimed ownership of the "Londres" cigar trademark, and the matter was at present in the hands of the British Court. Proceedings had also been begun in the Mixed Court, but these had been stayed for the time being. No objection was raised to the present proceedings, but it was not admitted that Messrs. Olsen were owners of the trademark.

Two Chinese in the employ of Mr. Delbourgo gave evidence as to purchasing so-called "Londres" cigars from the defendants' shops, paying seven or eight coppers for each one. They were all taken from a "Londres" box.

Mr. Delbourgo gave evidence that his company represented the Oriental Cigar Factory, who were makers of the real "Londres" cigar. A good deal of trouble had been experienced with dealers who sold imitations. The original cigar was sold for about $3.90 a box, but the imitations were on the market at 90 cents a hundred. He estimated that 300,000 imitation "Londres" cigars were disposed of every month, and this was doing his business a great deal of harm.

The defendants offered various denials of the charge. One of them said that if a customer asked for a "Beautiful Woman" brand of cigar he was given one. If he asked for a "Londres"—"old Beautiful Woman"—he was given an old one. The old brand cost $4.20 a box and the new $1.80, and the latter brand had Sincere's name on it.

The Court fined each of the accused $25, and warned them that a second offence would mean a heavier fine and possibly gaol.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

MR. R. MACDONALD AND M. POINCARE

Days of Fruitful Conferences but Ruhr Still Stumbling Block to Complete Accord: Britain's Friendly Efforts and Intentions

Paris, Mar. 1.

Further letters have been exchanged between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Poincaré embodying a general exposition of the views of the two Governments on the methods necessary to lead to a solution of problems of foreign policy. The letters are couched in a sincere spirit of collaboration.—Reuter.

London, Mar. 2.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald in his letter to M. Poincaré of February 21 says that he sees little prospect of their being able to attain agreement with regard to the Ruhr, the Rhineland and the Palatinate, unless they are first able by frank and courageous discussion to achieve some unanimity with regard to the essential purposes to which these problems are merely subsidiary, for when he considers their relations in their wider aspect, he does not feel that their essential objects are so divergent.

The British and French both desire security, the French security against Germany and the British security against war. The problem of security is not merely a French but a European problem.

Their task must be to establish confidence, which can only be achieved by allaying international suspicions and anxieties. Whether this can be partially achieved by local demilitarization and neutralization, or by the creation between certain States of bands of neutralized territory under mutual or even collective guarantee and supervision or by some other means is a matter for careful consideration in detail.

The British Prime Minister believes that the League of Nations by discussion and eventual action might play an important part in this. The assent and goodwill of every European country must be enlisted in support of this policy, which can only be initiated if France and England are agreed.
